Conclusions of fact: "First. That April 26, 1859, one James McCamman duly entered and paid for at the United States land-office, according to law, the south-east quarter of section 15, township 18 south, of range 15 east, in Shawnee county, Kansas, and that the proper officer executed and delivered to said McCamman a duplicate receipt for said land in the manner provided by law, at the time and place aforesaid. Second. That afterwards, on April 28, 1859, the said James McCamman executed and delivered to one Reuben H. Farnham his certain mortgage in writing for the purpose of securing the payment of $223.20 when the same should become due and payable, according to the terms of a certain promissory note in writing, executed by McCamman to said Farnham, which mortgage described the following land, to-wit, the south-east quarter of section 15, township 15, range 15 east. Third. That afterwards, on January 17, 1861, the said Reuben H. Farnham filed his petition as plaintiff in the clerk's office of the district court of Shawnee county against the said James McCamman as defendant for the purpose of reforming said mortgage according to the facts, and to foreclose said mortgage upon the land now in controversy in this action, and prayed that said premises might be sold for the payment of the principal and interest of said note. Fourth. That afterwards, on 17th day of January, 1861, the said Reuben H. Farnham, by Wilson Shannon, his attorney, for the purpose of securing service of summons by publication in said action to foreclose said mortgage, filed in the office of the clerk of the district court the following affidavit, and none other. 'Reuben H. Farnham vs. James McCamman. Territory of Kansas, Shawnee county. District court sitting in said county, second judicial district. Wilson Shannon, being duly sworn, deposeth and saith that he is the attorney of record for the above-named plaintiff in the above-entitled cause; that the said plaintiff is a resident of the state of New York, and is now absent from his territory; that the said plaintiff, on the — day of January, A. D. 1861, filed in said court a petition against the said James McCamman, defendant, praying that certain lands situate in said county may be decreed to be sold to satisfy a mortgage given by the said defendant to the said plaintiff to secure the payment of a certain sum of money therein named; and that the said defendant has removed from the said county of Shawnee, and now resides in that region of country known as "Pikes Peak," and that service of a summons cannot be made on the said defendant within this territory, and that the plaintiff wishes to obtain a service on said defendant by publication; and further this affiant saith not. [Signed] WILSON SHANNON. Sworn to and subscribed before me, this 14th day of January, A. D. 1861. M. G. FARNHAM, Notary Public. [Seal.] Filed January 17, 1861. L. MCARTHUR, Clerk. By H. MCARTHUR, D. C.' Fifth. That afterwards, to-wit, October 9, 1861, the said Reuben H. Farnham, plaintiff in said action, filed the following notice of publication and proof of publication in said action in the clerk's office of said court, which notice of publication is in words and figures following: 'Notice. James McCamman, late of the county of Shawnee and territory of Kansas, will take notice that Reuben H. Farnham did on the 17th day of January, A. D. 1861, file his petition in the district court sitting in and for the county of Shawnee, in the second judicial district and territory of Kansas, against the said James McCamman, defendant, setting forth that the said James McCamman gave a mortgage to said plaintiff on the south-east quarter of section No. 15, of township No. 13, of range No. 15 of the lands subject to entry in the Pawnee land district, Kansas territory; that by the mutual mistake of the parties said land was described in said mortgage as being in township No. 15, instead of township No. 13. The object of said mortgage was to secure the payment of $180, according to a certain note referred to in said mortgage. Said petition prays that said mortgage may be reformed, and said mistake corrected, and that said defendant may pay said sum of money, with the accruing interest which is now claimed to be due, or that said premises may be sold to pay the same. And the said James McCamman is notified that he is required to appear and answer said petition on or before the 4th day of March, A. D. 1861, or the same will be taken as confessed. REUBEN H. FARNHAM. By WILSON SHANNON, His Attorney. Attest: L. MCARTHUR, Clerk. By H. MCARTHUR, D. C.' And which proof of publication of the foregoing notice is in words and figures following: 'State of Kansas, county of Shawnee: J. F. Cummings, being duly sworn, upon oath says that the notice hereto annexed was published for seven weeks in the Topeka Tribune, a newspaper published and printed in the city of Topeka, county of Shawnee, the first publication being made on the 19th of January, 1861; the 2d, January 26th, 1861; the 3d, February 2d, 1861; the 4th, February 9th, 1861; the 5th, February 16th, 1861; the 6th, February 23d, 1861; the 7th, April 2d, 1861, and further saith not. FLETCHER, Clerk. By H. MCARTHUR, D. C. Printer's fees, $10. Filed October 9, 1861. JAMES FLETCHER, Clerk. By MCARTHUR, D. C.' Sixth. That January 17, 1861, and for some time previous thereto, the said James McCamman, defendant in the action commenced by said Reuben H. Farnham for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage, resided in the town of Denver, then situated in Arapahoe county, in the territory of Kansas, and there continued to reside until after the 29th day of January, 1861, when Kansas became a state, and said town of Denver was, by law, excluded from said boundaries. Seventh. That afterwards, on October 9, 1861, at the regular term of said district court begun and held in said Shawnee county, the said action of said Reuben H. Farnham against James McCamman for the foreclosure of said mortgage came regularly on for trial, and on the consideration of said court there was found to be due to said plaintiff, Reuben H. Farnham, from said defendant, James McCamman, the sum of $390.20; and that all the allegations in said plaintiff's petition were true as therein stated, and a decree was entered reforming said mortgage, and for the sale of the south-east quarter of section 15, township 13, range 15, in Shawnee county, as will more fully appear by a copy of said judgment and decree attached to and made a part of plaintiff's petition in this action. Eighth. That afterwards an order of sale in pursuance to said decree was issued by the clerk of said court to the sheriff of said county, and the said sheriff of Shawnee county returned said order of sale, showing by his said return indorsed thereon that said sheriff sold said real estate according to law, August 5, 1863, to said Reuben H. Farnham, and said return indorsed on said order of sale having been afterwards examined by said court, and the court being satisfied on examination of said proceedings that said sheriff had made said sale in all things in conformity to law, the court confirmed said sale, and ordered said sheriff to make and deliver a sheriff's deed for said premises to the said purchaser, as will more fully appear by examination of the order of the court confirming said sheriff's sale, attached to and made a part of plaintiff's petition in this action. Ninth. That afterwards, to-wit, the said sheriff executed and delivered to said Reuben H. Farnham a sheriff's deed for said premises, and which deed is in form and substance in due form of law, and said sheriff's deed was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Shawnee county, on —, 186—. Tenth. That afterwards, to-wit, —, —, the said Reuben H. Farnham conveyed said premises to —, —, by a deed of conveyance, and the defendant holds title to said premises through a regular claim of title from Reuben H. Farnham, who held the same by virtue of said sheriff's deed, unless the plaintiff's title is superior to defendant's title. Eleventh. That no summons was served on said James McCamman in said action by the sheriff or other officer or person, except the service of summons by publication referred to in conclusion of fact No. 5, and no other affidavit was made by the plaintiff, Reuben H. Farnham, or any one in his behalf, or for him, for the purpose of procuring service of summons by publication, except the affidavit of Wilson Shannon, copied in conclusion of fact No. 4. Twelfth. That no other affidavit or proof of publication of said service of summons by publication was filed in said action except the affidavit of J. F. Cummings, copied in conclusion of fact No. 5. Thirteenth. That the said James McCamman, defendant in said action, did not appear to said action in person or by attorney, nor did the said James McCamman know that said action had been commenced in the Shawnee district court by Reuben H. Farnham for the purpose of foreclosing said mortgage for more than ten or fifteen years after said property had been sold by the sheriff under said decree to Reuben H. Farnham, and during all said time, from January 17, 1861, until after the conveyance to Cornelius Bray, as stated in the next finding, ten or fifteen years thereafter, said McCamman had no knowledge of the pendency of said action in said court, or that said premises had been sold by the sheriff and purchased by Farnham. Fourteenth. That August 16, 1861, the said James McCamman sold and conveyed said premises, by a deed of conveyance, to the plaintiff C. Bray. Fifteenth. That said C. Bray sold and conveyed the undivided one-half of said premises, by a deed of conveyance, to the plaintiff Geo. W. Cary, and the said Geo. W. Cary and C. Bray are the owners in fee of the title from said James McCamman, the grantee of the government of the United States, for said premises, unless the sheriff's sale made in pursuance of the judgment made by the consideration of the court in the action of the said Reuben H. Farnham against James McCamman divested the said James McCamman of the title to said premises heretofore described. Sixteenth. That at the date of the commencement of this action the plaintiffs were in the actual possession of said premises as alleged in their petition. Seventeenth. That prior to the time the plaintiff went into the possession of the premises described in plaintiff's petition the said premises were vacant and unoccupied land. Eighteenth. That the defendants have paid all the taxes on said premises for the last twelve years. Nineteenth. That the patent issued by the government of the United States to James McCamman for the south-east quarter of section 15, township 13 south, of range 15 east, was dated June 1, 1860. Twentieth. That neither the said James McCamman, nor the said Reuben H. Farnham, nor any subsequent grantee taking under said sheriff's deed, nor either of the defendants, has at any time been a resident of the state of Kansas since the date of its admission as a state."

The following are the legal conclusions: "The questions of law in this action are: First. Was the affidavit of Wilson Shannon, filed in the clerk's office of the district court January 17, 1861, described in conclusion of fact No. 4, in the action commenced by Reuben H. Farnham against said James McCamman, for the purpose of reforming and foreclosing the mortgage hereinbefore described, sufficient in law to authorize service by publication in said action against the defendant, James McCamman, under section 79, Code of Procedure 1859, (Compiled Laws of 1862, c. 26?) Second. Was the affidavit of J. T. Cummings, publisher of the newspaper, sufficient in law to show that the publication notice was made 'six consecutive weeks?' as required by law in such actions? Third. If both these propositions are found in the affirmative, then the plaintiffs must fail in this action. If either of these propositions are solved in the negative, then the court did not have jurisdiction to decree a sale of the land in controversy described in plaintiffs' petition, and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover in this action. Fourth. That the issue of law is against the plaintiffs and in favor of the defendants." To the conclusions of law in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiffs the plaintiffs excepted, and bring the case here. G. C. Clemens, for plaintiffs in error. H. H. Harris, for defendants in error.

HORTON, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The United States issued a patent to the land in controversy to James McCamman on the 1st day of June, 1860, and the findings are to the effect that the plaintiffs are the owners by conveyances from McCamman, unless the judgment of October 9, 1861, of Reuben H. Farnham against James McCamman and the sale of the land thereunder divested McCamman of his title. When this case was here before, (Carey v. Reeves, 32 Kan. 718, 5 Pac. Rep. 22,) Mr. Justice VALENTINE, speaking for the court, said: "When this affidavit [for publication service] was filed, is not shown. It is alleged that the action was commenced on January 17, 1861, and the affidavit shows that the petition was filed 'on the ——— day of January, 1861;' but there is nothing to show when the affidavit was in fact filed. If it was filed prior to January 29, 1861, the region of country known as 'Pike's Peak,' or a portion thereof, was in Kansas; but if the affidavit was filed after January 29, 1861, then such region was not in Kansas, and no part thereof was in Kansas. * * * We suppose that when the plaintiffs in this action say that the foreclosure action was commenced on January 17, 1861, they mean that the petition was filed on that day. But when the service was made is not shown; nor is it shown when the judgment was rendered. It may have been in 1861, or in 1862, or in some subsequent year. We cannot say that the court below erred in deciding against the plaintiffs in this particular." At the last trial it was shown, and the court expressly found, that the affidavit for publication was filed on the 17th day of January, 1861. This was while Kansas existed as a territory and before its admission as a state into the Union. It was also shown, and expressly found at the last trial, that on January 17, 1861, and for some time previous thereto, James McCamman resided in Denver, and within the territory of Kansas, and continued to reside there after the 29th of January, 1861, when Kansas was admitted as a state. The former decision of this court in this case at its July term, 1884, (32 Kan. 718, 5 Pac. Rep. 22,) is not decisive or controlling, because the facts now presented in the record are materially different from those which we considered at the time the former opinion was handed down. The affidavit for publication stated that the defendant, James McCamman, "has removed from the said county of Shawnee, and now resides in that region of country known as 'Pike's Peak,' and that service of summons cannot be made on him within this territory." At the time that Kansas was organized as a territory its western boundary extended "to the eastern boundary of the territory of Utah, on the summit of the Rocky mountains." We must take judicial notice of where "the region of country known as 'Pike's Peak'" existed on the 17th of January, 1861. State v. Tellese, 30 Kan. 476, 2 Pac. Rep. 650; State v. Baldwin, 38 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. Rep. 318; Railroad Co. v. Burge, 40 Kan. 736, 21 Pac. Rep. 589. Lippincott's Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World, (published in 1856,) referring to Kansas, said: "It is a territory of the United States of America, formed by an act of congress passed May, 1854, lying between 37° and 40° N. lat., and between about 94° 30' and 107° W. lon. About 100 miles of the W. portion lies between 38° and 40° N. lat. It is bounded on the N. by Nebraska Territory; E., by the states of Missouri and Arkansas; S., by Indian Territory and New Mexico; and W., by New Mexico and Utah. This territory is about 630 miles in length from E. to W., and 208 in its widest, and 139 in its W. part, including an area of nearly 114,798 square miles. The Rocky mountains separate it from Utah, and the Missouri river forms a small part of the N. E. boundary." The New American Cyclopædia (volume 10, p. 103, published in 1860) described Kansas as follows: "It is a territory of the United States, lying between lat. 37° and 40° N. and long. 94° 40' and 106° 50' W., bounded N. by the territory of Nebraska, E. by the state of Missouri, S. by the Indian Territory and New Mexico, and W. by New Mexico and Utah. With the exception of the N. E. corner of the territory, where the boundary line follows the irregular course of the Missouri river, its shape is that of a parallelogram as far W. as long. 108°. The boundary then follows this meridian N. to lat. 38°, and runs W. along that parallel to long. 106° 50'; thence N. to about lat. 39° 20', E. to long. 105° 40', and finally N. again until it meets the Nebraska frontier. Length, E. and W., 550 M.; breadth, E. of long. 103°, 208 M.; W. of that line, 139 M.; area, 114,798 Sq. M." The Encyclopædia Britannica, (volume 23, p. 4796,) in describing the Rocky mountains, says: "Gray's peak (14,341 feet) is the highest point in this range, (the front, or Colorado range,) but, although on the continental divide, it is too far west to be visible from the plains. This divide, which separates the Atlantic water from those of the Pacific, follows the front range as far as Gray's peak, where it is deflected westward for 20 miles to the Sawatch range, which it follows for about 75 miles. In this deflection the divide passes between Middle and South parks, the lowest pass in this part being that called the 'Tennessee,' (10,418 feet,) which leads from the head of the Arkansas to the Grand River branch of the Colorado. The Sawatch range is one of the highest and best marked chains in the Rocky mountains. It lies west of the head of the Arkansas; and its dominating peaks, along the whole range, exceed 14,000 feet. The most northerly of these, the Mountain of the Holy Cross, (14,176 feet,) was so named on account of the existence on its eastern flank of a large snow-field lying in two ravines which intersect each other at right angles, in the form of a cross, and which in summer is conspicuously visible from a great distance. The highest point is Mount Harvard, (14,375 feet,) and the passes range from 12,000 to 13,000 feet. The continental divide follows the Sawatch range to its southern end, is lat. 38° 20', and then runs in a south-westerly direction for about 75 miles, over a high region without any distinctly marked range. Here it turns, and, running south-easterly, follows the crest of the San Juan range, which at many points rises above 13,000 feet." Not only as a matter of fact is the summit of the Rocky mountains (the western boundary of the territory of Kansas) a long distance west of Pike's Peak, but it was so generally mentioned in the gazetteers, geographies, and encyclopædias in general use in 1861. Therefore "the region of country known as 'Pike's Peak'" on the 17th of January, 1861, and until Kansas was admitted into the Union, on January 29, 1861, was within the territory of Kansas, and generally known to be within the territory of Kansas. The affidavit for service by publication showed upon its face that James McCamman had removed from the county of Shawnee and resided "in the region of country known as 'Pike's Peak.'" That region was within, not without, the territory of Kansas at the date of the filing of this affidavit; therefore McCamman was not a non-resident of the territory of Kansas at the time the service by publication was made; therefore such publication was void,—that is, it was invalid as a constructive service, because the affidavit for publication affirmatively showed that the defendant resided within the territory of Kansas, and it was not stated that he had departed from the territory or the county of his residence with the intent to delay or defraud his creditors, or to avoid the service of a summons, or to keep himself concealed. It has already been decided by this court that it cannot be shown in a collateral attack that the affidavit for publication is untrue. Ogden v. Walters, 12 Kan. 282; Rowe v. Palmer, 29 Kan. 387; Carey v. Reeves, 32 Kan. 718, 5 Pac. Rep. 22, but that is not this case. In this case the affidavit is insufficient upon its face. It does not state facts to authorize any publication service; therefore no personal or constructive service was ever had upon McCamman prior to the rendition of the judgment against him on the 9th day of October, 1861. Comp. Laws,

c. 26, tit. 4, 5, §§ 52, 78, 79. See, also, title 11, § 385, same chapter. Upon the findings of fact the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded with direction to the district court to render judgment for the plaintiffs and against the defendants. This direction will not prevent the defendants from recovering any taxes paid by them, if any have been paid, while the land has been in controversy in any of the courts of this state. Sess. Laws 1876, c. 34, § 149, par. 7004, Gen. St. 1889; Wood v. Gruble, 31 Kan. 69, 1 Pac. Rep. 277. All the justices concurring.

ROSS v. HIXON.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—PROBABLE CAUSE.

The finding of an examining magistrate that "an offense had been committed, and that there was probable cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof," is only prima facie evidence of probable cause, in an action for malicious prosecution brought by such defendant against the prosecuting witness.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Bourbon county; C. O. FRENCH, Judge.

Hulett & Fletcher and Cory & Hulbert, for plaintiff in error. Hill & Chenault, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. On the 17th day of January, 1887, Hixon filed an affidavit before a justice of the peace in Bourbon county, charging Ross with having mixed certain poison with a quantity of flour, with the intent and for the purpose of causing the death of certain persons. Upon said complaint a warrant was issued, and Ross was arrested. A preliminary trial was had on the 4th of February before the justice who issued the warrant. At the preliminary examination 12 witnesses were examined for the state, and 7 for the defendant. After the hearing of all the evidence, the justice bound Ross to appear at the district court and answer the charge. He failed to give bond, and was committed to jail. The finding of the justice was as follows: "After hearing the evidence, I find that said offense has been committed, and that there is probable cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof." Ross was in jail from the 17th day of January, 1887, until May 2, 1887. On the latter date, the district court of Bourbon county being in session, the county attorney filed a statement showing cause for non-prosecution, and Ross was discharged. On the 8th day of August, 1887, he commenced this action for malicious prosecution against James Hixon, the prosecuting witness. Trial was had at the May term, 1888. The plaintiff in error offered evidence showing the proceedings before the justice of the peace on the criminal charge, and tending to prove every material allegation in such an action. When the plaintiff rested, the defendant Hixon introduced a large number of witnesses, when he was interrupted by the court. The trial was stopped, and a verdict was ordered for the defendant. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and a motion for a new trial was overruled. The record itself discloses no reason for the ruling of the court, but counsel agreed that the reason assigned by the trial court was that the examining magistrate had made a finding of probable cause, and that such finding was conclusive upon that question. It is further claimed by counsel for the defendant in error that the trial court made the further statement: "That, as the petition does not charge fraud or undue means in obtaining the finding of probable cause by the magistrate, the same cannot be attacked." The sole question discussed in the oral argument of counsel for defendant in error, and the briefs on both sides, is as to the weight to be given to the finding of the examining magistrate as to whether it is prima facie or conclusive on the question of probable cause, and whether or not, in either case, the finding must be attacked for fraud or undue means by proper allegations in the petition.

1. In the case of Sweeney v. Perney, 40 Kan. 102, 19 Pac. Rep. 323, this court incidentally noticed the conflict in authorities as to whether or not proof of arrest, commitment and indictment is prima facie proof of probable cause; and the case of Ricord v. Railroad Co., 15 Nev. 167, was cited on one side, and that of Womack v. Circle, 29 Grat. 192, on the other. The question in this case is closely allied to this controversy, but authorities cannot be found on both sides of this question. In the case of Bauer v. Clay, 8 Kan. 585, Justice VALENTINE, says: "The proof showing that the justice ordered that Clay should be bound over for his appearance at court, or, in default of bail, that he should be committed to the county jail, is only prima facie, and not conclusive, evidence of probable cause." The cases of Ash v. Marlow, 20 Ohio, 119, and Ewing v. Sanford, 19 Ala. 605, are cited in support. The force of this decision is sought to be destroyed by counsel for defendant in error by an assertion that it is dictum. It is sometimes difficult to draw the line between what is authoritative and what is not in a judicial opinion. The report of the case does not give either the pleadings, the assignment of errors, or the briefs, but it is evident that the question was necessarily involved in the rulings of the trial court; and this court thought it necessary to give this as one of the reasons for affirmance of the judgment below, because, if counsel for defendant in error are now right in their contention, Clay had no cause of action, and the case was decided wrongfully in both the trial and the appellate courts. However the rule may be in cases in which the magistrates have jurisdiction to hear and pass judgment, we are satisfied that the case of Bauer v. Clay states the true rule in cases in which the magistrates have only power to bind over. This rule is upheld by the cases of Ash v. Marlow, 20 Ohio, 119; Ewing v. Sanford, 19 Ala. 605; Raleigh v. Cook, 60 Tex. 438; Ricord v. Railroad Co., 15 Nev. 167; Hale v. Boylen, 22 W. Va. 234; Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. 217; Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366, 23 N. W. Rep. 46; Ganea v.

Railroad Co., 51 Cal. 140; Diemer v. Herber, 75 Cal. 287, 17 Pac. Rep. 205. These are all express adjudications on that particular question. In one of these cases, decided in 1885, being that of Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366, 23 N. W. Rep. 46, the defendant requested the trial court to instruct the jury as follows: "It appears from the proofs in this case that an examination was had upon the charge made against Spalding, and that the justice upon such examination determined that this offense charged against Spalding had been committed, and that there was probable cause to believe said Spalding guilty thereof. This was a judicial determination the justice was authorized to make, and unless such action and determination of the justice was corrupt or collusive, or was wrongfully procured by the defendant herein, it is final as to the question of probable cause, and your verdict should be for the defendant." The trial court refused to so instruct the jury, and this refusal was assigned as error in the supreme court, but that court say, (page 372, 56 Mich., and page 49, 23 N. W. Rep.): "No authority has been produced in support of it, and we think none exists." We have been unable to find a reported case in which the rule is held as claimed by counsel for defendant in error. There are cases that so hold when the magistrate has power to render a judgment of conviction. How much weight as proof of probable cause shall be attributed to the judgment of a court in an original action, when subsequently reversed for error, is elaborately discussed by the supreme court of the United States in the case of Crescent City Live-Stock Co. v. Butchers' Union, etc., Co., 120 U. S. 141, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 472,—a case much relied on by counsel for defendant in error. To our mind, however, the distinction between that case and the one at bar is plain and distinct. If the magistrate in Bourbon county had possessed the statutory power to hear the evidence and determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and to punish by fine and imprisonment if guilt was found, then his finding and judgment would come within the rule established by that case to be the law of the land. The question in this case is how much weight, as proof of probable cause, shall be attributed to the finding of an examining magistrate that "an offense had been committed, and that there is probable cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof," when the defendant is subsequently discharged, the prosecution against him confessedly ended, and he has instituted a suit for malicious prosecution against the complaining witness. In the one case there is a solemn judgment rendered by a court having full and complete jurisdiction both of the parties and subject-matter, binding on all until reversed on appeal or error. In the other case there is a finding, in effect, that sufficient facts have been developed that justifies a magistrate in sending the parties before a court competent to ultimately deal with the question of guilt or innocence. Again, while a conviction is generally conclusive of probable cause, yet it may be overcome by a showing that it was procured by fraud, undue means, or the false testimony of the prosecution. Womack v. Circle, 29 Grat. 192; Olson v. Neal, 63 Iowa, 214, 18 N. W. Rep. 863; Cloon v. Gerry, 13 Gray, 201; Whitney v. Peckham, 15 Mass. 243; Peck v. Chouteau, 91 Mo. 138, 3 S. W. Rep. 577; Bowman v. Brown, 52 Iowa, 437, 8 N. W. Rep. 609; Palmer v. Avery, 41 Barb. 290; Richey v. McBean, 17 Ill. 63; Payson v. Caswell, 22 Me. 212; Herman v. Brookerhoff, 8 Watts, 240; Jones v. Kirksey, 10 Ala. 839. In such a case the petition in the action for malicious prosecution must directly attack the judgment of conviction, or it will be suicidal. It is therefore unimportant whether the words used by the court in Bauer v. Clay are dicta or authoritative in that case, as they express the law as universally held by all courts of last resort that have spoken on this subject. It follows that the other suggestion of counsel, that the finding of the magistrate must be directly attacked in the petition for fraud or undue means, is without force; because, as that finding is only prima facie, all that is necessary for the plaintiff to do to win is to overthrow it by a preponderance of evidence. It can be fairly said that there was evidence submitted at the trial by the plaintiff in error, other than the transcript of the proceedings before the examining magistrate, bearing upon the question of probable cause, which the court below permitted to go to the jury, from which they might have found that the prima facie case made by the magistrate's finding was overcome. It is recommended that the judgment of the district court of Bourbon county be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to grant a new trial.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

REED V. STATE ex rel. HERTLEIN.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

BASTARDY—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

An instruction, in a bastardy case, which informs the jury that the interests of the mother of the child and the defendant in the case are not equal; that the mother is a mere witness for the state in a proceeding to compel the father of the child to contribute to its support, while the defendant has a direct pecuniary interest in the result of the proceeding; and also states that "the defendant, being liable to be charged with such support, is directly interested in the result, while the mother has no such interest,"—does not correctly state the interests of the mother and reputed father of the child in the result of such proceeding, and is therefore erroneous.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Finney county; A. J. Abbott, Judge.

G. L. Miller and A. J. Hoskinson, for plaintiff in error. H. F. Mason, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. This was an action for bastardy, tried in the district court of Finney county on September 4, 1888, before the court and a jury, resulting in a verdict and a judgment that the defendant, Guilford J. Reed, was the father of the bastard child of Barbara Hertlein. There are a large number of errors assigned, but as this court is of the opinion that the judgment of the district court must be reversed, because of error in the instructions of the trial court, the other errors, the cause for many of which will not exist in connection with another trial of the case, need not now be considered. The instruction complained of reads as follows: "You are instructed that, under the law, the interests of the mother of the child and of the defendant in this suit are not equal. The mother is a mere witness for the state in a proceeding to compel the father of her child to contribute to its support, and so save the public from the expense of sustaining it, while the defendant has a direct pecuniary interest in the result of the proceeding. The defendant, being liable to be charged with such support, is directly interested in the result, while the mother has no such interest. These facts may be considered by the jury in weighing their testimony." This instruction is faulty in several respects. It states that the mother has no pecuniary interest in the support of her child. This statement could only have been made by the trial court upon the assumption that the mother of a bastard child is in no way responsible, under the law, for the support of such child. This is not the law. Under the law, the mother of an illegitimate child is all the while known, and is at all times, at least during its infancy, liable for its support, while the father of such child is unknown until ascertained by judicial proceedings, unless he acknowledges its paternity; and therefore he is liable only when the paternity of the child is acknowledged by him, or it is established by judicial inquiry; and, when the paternity of the child is established by the judgment of the court, the law does not relieve the mother from liability for the support of her child, but compels the father, thus ascertained, to contribute his share to the support of such child. The mother must still do her part towards caring for and supporting her child. And, again, so far as the judicial inquiry is concerned, the mother, who, under the law, must alone support her illegitimate child, unless its paternity is ascertained by such inquiry, has an interest in the result of the proceeding, to the full extent of the contribution the court requires the accused, if found to be the father of her child, to make towards its support; and that is the measure also of the pecuniary interest the accused has in the inquiry. It follows, therefore, that the pecuniary interest of the mother of the illegitimate child in this case, and that of the reputed father, were not so unlike upon the trial as the district court seemed to think when the above instruction was given. The court says, in the instruction given: "The mother is a mere witness in a proceeding to compel the father of her child to contribute to its support." This instruction is also faulty in this: that it comes too near telling the jury that the accused is the father of the child. The instruction does not say, to compel the reputed father of her child, or the alleged father of her child, to contribute to its support, but it says, "to compel the father of her child to so contribute." Some qualifying word should have accompanied the word "father" in this part of the instruction. This instruction does not correctly state the rule in relation to the interests of the mother of an illegitimate child and the reputed father thereof, in an inquiry to ascertain whether the accused is the father of such child, and it is faulty in the other respect, as pointed out, and it is therefore erroneous. We also think the error prejudicial to the substantial rights of the plaintiff in error. It is therefore recommended that the judgment of the district court be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

STEWART et al. v. SCULLY.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—TERMS.

Where a defendant applies to have a judgment which was rendered without other service than by publication opened up, and that he be permitted to make a defense, he may, in the discretion of the court, be required to pay all costs before his application will be granted; but a formal offer, by answer or otherwise, to pay costs is not a prerequisite to the hearing or granting of the application.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Sedgwick county; C. REED, Judge.

Hallowell, Hume & Gordon, for plaintiffs in error. J. V. Dougherty, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This is a proceeding to reverse a ruling of the district court of Sedgwick county opening up a judgment rendered May 12, 1887, quieting title to two lots in the city of Wichita. The judgment was rendered without other service than by publication, and the defendant made an application, under section 77 of the Code, to have the judgment opened, and to be let in to defend, and he supported his application by an affidavit setting forth the nature of his title to the lots; that at all times during the pendency of the action he was a resident of Washington Territory, and absent from Kansas, and that he had no actual notice of the commencement or pendency of the action; and, further, that he had paid the taxes assessed on the property ever since he had acquired title thereto. He also presented a full answer to the petition of the plaintiffs, denying every allegation therein except that of possession by plaintiffs, alleging that he was the exclusive owner of the legal and equitable estate in the property in controversy, and entitled to its immediate possession. Due notice of the application and the hearing thereon was given on February 28, 1888. An order was made vacating and opening up the judgment, and permitting the defendant to file his answer to the plaintiff's petition. Subsequently the cause came on for final trial, and judgment was given dismissing the plaintiffs' action to quiet title, and adjudging that Martin Scully was the owner and entitled to the immediate possession of the real estate. The only objection to the regularity of the proceedings in opening up the judgment is that the defendant failed to proffer payment of costs in the answer which he filed. The objection cannot be sustained. Neither the proffer nor the payment of costs is indispensable to the opening up of a judgment under the provisions of section 77 of the Civil Code. Notice of the application, proof by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court that there was no actual notice of the action and time to appear to make a defense, and presentation of a full defense to the petition, are prerequisites, but costs are not to be paid unless the court hearing the application requires payment. Satterlee v. Grubb, 38 Kan. 234, 16 Pac. Rep. 475, is cited as sustaining the claim of the plaintiffs; but, while the language of the opinion may give some reason for the claim, it was not intended to hold that the offer to pay costs was a prerequisite to the hearing and determination of the application. We cannot add to the statutory requirement, which only requires the applicant to "pay all costs if the court require them to be paid." Even if a formal offer to pay costs was necessary, it would be immaterial in the present case; for it is conceded that the court may in its discretion open the judgment, and permit the defendant to come in and make a defense without the payment of costs; and, this having been done, the matter of a preliminary offer is now of little consequence. The court hears such an application after notice upon the affidavit of the applicant and any counter-affidavits that may be filed, and, if it appears that the judgment was rendered without other service than by publication in a newspaper, and that the answer or defense presented is a sufficient one, determines that it shall be opened, and also whether, under the circumstances, the applicant should be required to pay costs as a condition of granting the relief asked. The court does not and cannot well determine whether the payment of costs should be required as a condition precedent to the opening of a judgment until the hearing of the application is had and the facts in the case are developed. If it was shown that the applicant had no notice whatever of the commencement or pendency of the action, and had a good defense thereto, and that he had promptly and without delay presented his application to the court upon learning of the rendition of the judgment, there would be little reason for the court to require the payment of costs. On the other hand, if it should appear that he had delayed in presenting the application after learning of the judgment, or if it was doubtful whether or not he had a sufficient defense, the court might then be justified in requiring the payment of costs. An offer to pay costs, however, need not be made until it has been determined that payment will be required. If payment is required, the defendant cannot proceed until it is made; but, if no such condition is imposed, then an offer is useless. Under the Code, the payment of costs before the opening of a judgment rests in the discretion of the court, and, in the exercise of that discretion, the court in the present case has not required the payment of costs as a prerequisite to the opening of the judgment; and hence the objection of the plaintiffs must be overruled. Judgment affirmed. All the justices concurring.

EDWARDS V. VAN PATTEN.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

LEASE—IMPROVEMENTS BY TENANT — VALUATION.

Where a landlord agrees with his tenant to purchase from him at the expiration of his lease, which is to run about two years, at its value or worth at that time, an addition or fixture to the leased house, to be attached by the tenant, the value or worth of the addition or fixture is not to be estimated from the cost thereof, and its depreciation from use or lapse of time after its erection.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Finney county; A. J. ABBOTT, Judge.

W. R. Hopkins and A. J. Hoskinson, for plaintiff in error. Morgan, Lawrance & Mason, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. On the 8th day of April, 1885, J. S. Edwards leased to A. S. Van Patten a house in Garden City, in this state, for the term of two years. It was subsequently agreed in writing between these parties that Van Patten should put up a small addition on the south side of the house, the addition to be 12x28 feet. At the expiration of the lease, Edwards was to purchase from Van Patten the building or addition at what it might be worth at that time. In accordance with the written agreement, Van Patten constructed the addition, and, at the expiration of his lease, demanded payment therefor, claiming that it was worth $300. Edwards offered $100, but refused to pay any more. Then Van Patten brought his action against Edwards to recover the value of the building or addition on the 8th day of April, 1887, the date of the expiration of the lease. Trial before the court, with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of Van Patten for $170. Edwards excepted, and brings the case here. Upon the trial, Van Patten was permitted to prove the cost of the building or addition, which was erected in the summer of 1885. The cost was $330. During the examination of the witnesses, the district judge said: "Under this contract, the theory of the court is that it ought to be proven what it cost to construct this building, and then the reasonable deterioration of the value, whether from use or abuse. It does not seem to the court proper that general deterioration or increase in value of real estate in Garden City would be proper estimate (of value or worth) in this case." The court also instructed the jury that, "in determining such value, you have a right to consider the proper cost thereof, and the depreciation in value consequent upon use and lapse of time after it was completed." All of this is complained of. The question of fact for the jury to pass upon was what the building or addition was worth on the 8th day of April, 1887. Witnesses who were acquainted with such buildings, and knew their market value, could have testified thereto; but it was erroneous to introduce evidence showing the actual cost of this particular building or addition in the summer of 1885. Edwards was to pay the value or worth of the building or addition on the 8th day of April, 1887, not the original cost of the building, less deterioration from use or abuse. If witnesses, who were acquainted with the cost of such buildings in Garden City, had testified to the general cost of putting up such an addition, this might have been some evidence which the jury could have properly considered in arriving at the value or worth of the addition on the 8th of April, 1887; but the cost of this particular building in 1885 was not the true or fair basis of its value or worth on the 8th day of April, 1887. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. All the justices concurring.

EMINENT DOMAIN—OBSTRUCTION OF STREET—COMPENSATION.

The rule announced in Railway Co. v. Mahler, 45 Kan. —, 26 Pac. Rep. 23, in regard to the right of an abutting lot-owner to recover damages for the obstruction of a street by the location of a railroad thereon in front of his premises, followed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Linn county; C. O. FRENCH, Judge.

W. W. Padgett and John H. Crain, for plaintiff in error. E. F. Ware, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J. The plaintiff owns a home on Mulberry street, in Blue Mound, and the defendant, with the permission of the city, built its line of railroad along the street, and in front of the plaintiff's home. She brought this action against the railway company to recover $450 as damages for the alleged obstruction of the street, claiming that the company had built a main and side track in such a way as to take up the whole of the street, and leaving the plaintiff no means of egress or ingress from and to her home, except through the alley in the rear thereof. It appears, however, that the railroad tracks were laid upon the street in pursuance of an ordinance enacted by the city, and in compliance with its terms. Instead of occupying the entire street, it appears that the street is 80 feet wide, and that exclusive of that portion reserved for sidewalks it is 70 feet wide. It is also shown that the nearest railroad track is 34 feet from the street line of the plaintiff's property, which affords abundant room for ingress and egress to and from her premises. The road is built in a workman-like manner, and, although there is some contention that the laying of a side track was without any authority from the city, an examination of the ordinance granting the right of way over the street discloses that there is authority for both a main and side track. The case, therefore, falls within the rule stated in Railway Co. v. Mahler, 45 Kan. —, 26 Pac. Rep. 22, and other authorities there cited, that, "to entitle an abutting lot-owner to recover damages for locating a line of railroad, under the authority of the city council, in one of the streets of a city, there must be a practical obstruction of the street in front of his premises, so as to virtually deprive him of ingress to and egress from his property." Following these decisions, we must give a judgment of affirmance. All the justices concurring.

HARDESTY v. BALL.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

SECURITY FOR COSTS—POVERTY AFFIDAVIT.

Where a plaintiff, in 1883, commenced an action in the district court of the county of his residence, and gave a bond for costs under section 1, c. 121, Sess. Laws 1875, (section 581, Civil Code; Gen. St. 1889,) and subsequently, while continuing to be such a resident, filed a poverty affidavit, and also deposited $15, in lieu of all security for costs, he cannot be required, upon the motion of the defendant, under the provisions of section 581 of the Civil Code, to give additional security.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Lincoln county; S. O. HINDS, Judge.

Garver & Bond, for plaintiff in error. A. H. Ellis, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. On the 5th day of December, 1883, David Hardesty commenced his action against Volney Ball in the district court of Lincoln county to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of the erection of a mill-dam by Ball below the mill and dam of Hardesty, thereby backing the water upon the latter's mill. Hardesty resided in Lincoln county, and filed a bond for costs. He has continued to reside in that county. The action was tried at the March term of the court for 1884, and resulted in a disagreement of the jury. Another trial was had in October, 1884, with like result. At the March term, 1885, the action was again tried before the court with a jury, resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of Hardesty, which verdict, on motion of the defendant, was set aside, and a new trial granted. A fourth trial was had in October, 1885, in which a verdict was again returned in favor of Hardesty, and judgment rendered in his favor. This judgment was reversed by this court, and the case remanded for a new trial. Ball v. Hardesty, 38 Kan. 540, 16 Pac. Rep. 808. On the return of the case to the district court, the defendant on May 14, 1888, made a motion to require the plaintiff to give additional security for costs. The costs then amounted to $1,200. Upon the hearing of this motion, the court made an order requiring the plaintiff to give additional security for costs in the sum of $1,000 within a time named, and, upon his failure so to do, directed the case to be dismissed. Previous to the making of this order, and before the hearing of the motion, Hardesty made a deposit of $15 as security for costs with the clerk of the court, and also filed his affidavit that he was unable to give further security. After the making of the order, Hardesty attempted compliance by filing an additional bond for costs with several persons as sureties, who qualified to the requisite amount, one of them being A. G. Hardesty, a son of the plaintiff, and who was a practicing attorney in that county. At the next term of court the defendant moved to dismiss the case, claiming that the sureties on the bond were insufficient, and objecting to A. G. Hardesty as a surety, because he was a practicing attorney. Upon the hearing of this motion, the plaintiff again presented his affidavit, and also testified orally, that he was unable to further comply with the order of the court; but the court held the security insufficient, and dismissed the case, taxing all the costs to the plaintiff. To all these rulings exceptions were taken. The provisions of the Code which we are required to consider in this matter are as follows: "Sec. 581. In any civil action hereafter brought in any district court of this state, before the clerk shall issue summons, there shall be filed in his office, by or on behalf of the plaintiff or plaintiffs, a bond, to be approved by the clerk, conditioned that the plaintiff or plaintiffs will pay all costs that may accrue in said action in case he or they shall be adjudged to pay them, or, in case the same cannot be collected from the defendant or defendants, if judgment be obtained against him, her, or them, that the plaintiff or plaintiffs will pay the costs made by such plaintiff or plaintiffs: provided, that in any case where the plaintiff or plaintiffs, having a just cause of action against the defendant or defendants, by reason of his, her, or their poverty, is or are unable to give such security for costs, on affidavit of the plaintiff or plaintiffs made before the clerk that such is the fact, no bond shall be required: provided, further, that, in case of non-resident plaintiff or plaintiffs, such plaintiff or plaintiffs may deposit with the clerk of the district court such sum or sums as, in the opinion of said clerk, will be sufficient to cover all costs in case such non-resident plaintiff or plaintiffs become liable to pay the same, and, in the case of resident plaintiff or plaintiffs, such plaintiff or plaintiffs may deposit the sum of fifteen dollars, which sum shall be in lieu of all security for costs as herein and otherwise provided. Sec. 582. The affidavit provided for in the preceding section shall be in the form following, and attached to the petition, viz.: State of Kansas, ——— county, ———. In the district court of said county: I (or we) do solemnly swear that the cause of action set forth in the petition hereto prefixed is just, and I (or we) do further swear that, by reason of my (or our) poverty, I (or we) am (or are) unable to give security for costs. Sec. 583. Any person or persons willfully swearing falsely in making the affidavit aforesaid, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of perjury, and punished as the law prescribed. Sec. 584. In an action in which security for costs has been given, the defendant may, at any time before judgment, after reasonable notice to the plaintiff, move the court for additional security on the part of the plaintiff; and if, on such motion, the court be satisfied that the surety has removed from this state, or is not sufficient, the action may be dismissed, unless, in a reasonable time, to be fixed by the court, sufficient security be given by the plaintiff." Section 581 of the Civil Code was passed by the legislature on March 1, 1875, but it took effect on the 15th day of May, 1875. Section 584 was in force a long time prior to the adoption of said section 581. It appears in the General Statutes of 1868, in chapter 80, p. 746, and took effect October 31, 1868. Section 584 must be construed in connection with section 581. Prior to 1875, a resident of the county in which an action was brought was in no case required to give security for costs. Carr v. Osterhout, 32 Kan. 277, 4 Pac. Rep. 818. Section 584 of the Civil Code, prior to 1875, had application only to actions brought by non-residents of the county where the action was commenced, or actions where the plaintiff became a non-resident after the action was commenced. Section 581 has not so broadened or extended its provisions as to include resident plaintiffs who have filed a poverty affidavit or deposited $15 for costs. When the motion was filed on the 14th of May, 1888, to require Hardesty to give additional security for costs, section 581 was in full force. At that time this action could have been commenced by Hardesty without any security for costs, by his filing a poverty affidavit provided for by section 581 of the Civil Code, or by his depositing $15 in lieu of all security for costs. Carr v. Osterhout, supra. If a poverty affidavit, or a deposit of $15 in lieu of all costs, by a plaintiff, was sufficient at the commencement of the action, it ought to be sufficient, at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, to keep the action in the court. When the motion was made on the 14th day of May, 1888, to require him to give additional security for costs, he filed both his poverty affidavit, and also deposited $15 in lieu of all security for costs. Within the terms of said sections 581-583, Civil Code, the district court ought not to have dismissed the action. He had fully complied with the provisions of said section 581. Said section 584 has application to non-residents, but not to residents who have filed a poverty affidavit or deposited $15 for costs. Therefore it had no application to Hardesty, the plaintiff in this action, and the case must be reinstated for trial. With this conclusion, it is unnecessary to pass upon the validity of paragraph 476 of the General Statutes of 1869, prescribing the qualifications of sureties on official bonds. After his poverty affidavit was filed, and the deposit of $15 for costs, Hardesty ought not to have been required to file any additional bond for costs. The judgment of the district court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed. All the justices concurring.

POLICE COURTS—FAILURE TO PAY FINE—POWER TO IMPRISON.

1. St. Cal. 1885, p. 213, (Act March 18, 1885,) establishing police courts in cities of the second class, and vesting in them jurisdiction over certain public offenses, applies to the city of Los Angeles, although the precise time at which it became a city of the class does not appear.

2. Pen. Code Cal. § 1446, providing for imprisonment in default of payment of a fine, does not conflict with the act of March 18, 1885, establishing police courts, and a person convicted in such courts may be committed to the city jail in default of such payment.

In bank. Application for writ of habeas corpus.

J. A. Donnell and C. T. Howland, for petitioner. Jas. McLachlan, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The petitioner was convicted of the crime of petit larceny in the police court of the city of Los Angeles, and as a penalty therefor the court imposed a fine of $150, and, in default of payment thereof, ordered that he be imprisoned in the city jail of the city of Los Angeles one day for each and every dollar of said fine remaining unpaid. It is claimed by his counsel that there was no police court in the city of Los Angeles on the day of the arrest, conviction, and commitment of the petitioner, and that, if such court existed, there was no authority to commit the petitioner to the city jail. The judgment against the petitioner was entered on the 5th day of February, 1891. At that time, and long prior thereto, the city of Los Angeles was a city having over 30,000 inhabitants. It was intimated by the court at the oral argument that the census was complete, so far as the classification of cities is concerned, as soon as the returns were filed in the office of the superintendent of census at Washington. It is unnecessary, however, for us in this case to determine the precise time at which the city of Los Angeles passed into the class of cities having more than 30,000, and less than 100,000 inhabitants. It certainly changed long prior to the arrest, conviction, and commitment of the petitioner. We held in People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 436, 18 Pac. Rep. 413, that the act of March 18, 1885, popularly known as the "Whitney Act," is not obnoxious to section 11 of article 1 of the constitution, providing that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation;" that the act is not local or special legislation; that the legislature has the power to classify municipal corporations according to population; and that it has power to pass general laws affecting municipal corporations, without reference to the question whether such corporations were formed before or after the adoption of the constitution of 1879. It follows, therefore, that the city of Los Angeles, so far as its police courts are concerned, is now governed by the provisions of the Whitney act. That act confers upon the police court exclusive jurisdiction of certain public offenses, including petit larceny.

The only question which remains to be considered is whether the police court has power to imprison in the city jail as a means of collecting a fine. Section 1446 of the Penal Code provides that "a judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine." There is nothing in the Code which prescribes the place of imprisonment for non-payment of a fine. The Whitney act does provide that, "in all cases of imprisonment of persons convicted in said police court of any offense committed in the city, the persons so to be imprisoned, or by ordinance required to labor, shall be imprisoned in the city jail, or, if required to labor, shall labor in the city." There is, therefore, no conflict between the provisions of the Code and those of the act referred to, and we think there can be no doubt of the power of the police court to direct imprisonment in the city jail. The suggestion that persons imprisoned in the city jail may be required to labor, which may impose a hardship different from that suffered by persons outside of cities, cannot be considered in this proceeding. The judgment itself does not direct that the petitioner be required to labor, and, if it did, the judgment as to the imprisonment would not be void. In Ex parte Fil Ki, 80 Cal. 201, 22 Pac. Rep. 146, we held that a person convicted for contempt would be discharged from hard labor on the streets upon writ of habeas corpus, but would not be discharged from imprisonment by reason of being put at such labor. The petitioner is remanded to the custody of the chief of police of the city of Los Angeles.

CITY OF EUREKA v. DIAZ et al. (No. 13,243.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1891.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—ILLEGAL SALE—ACTION ON LICENSE BOND.

Under an ordinance licensing saloons and forbidding any business therein "between 11 o'clock P. M. and 5 o'clock A. M. of each and every day," no recovery can be had on a bond conditioned for the lawful conduct of the business, under a complaint charging the saloon-keeper with selling liquors between 11 o'clock P. M. and 5 o'clock A. M. of the "following" day.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Horace L. Smith and S. M. Buck, for appellants. J. N. Gillett, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. The mayor and common council of the city of Eureka passed an ordinance which provided that it should be unlawful for any person to carry on within the limits of the city any saloon, bar-room, or dram-shop without having first obtained a license therefor, and having given a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $1,000, with two sureties, approved by a majority of the members of the common council, conditioned that such saloon during the term of the license should be conducted in a lawful, quiet, and orderly manner. The ordinance provided that it should be unlawful to keep such place open, or to sell or give away any intoxicating drinks therein, "between the hours of 11 o'clock P. M. and 5 o'clock A. M. of each and every day." The complaint herein charges that the defendant Diaz, contrary to the provisions of the ordinance, on the 16th day of March kept his place of business open from 11 P. M. until 5 A. M. of the following day, and sold spirituous and fermented liquors, beer, and wine. The defendants Huk and Lundblade were sureties in the bond given by Diaz. Plaintiff had judgment for the sum of $1,000. Defendants moved for a new trial. The motion was denied, and an appeal was taken from the order and from the judgment.

The demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. The provision of the ordinance upon which the plaintiff relies is not ambiguous or uncertain. It may be that it does not express what the mayor and common council intended to express, but the court cannot make or amend ordinances. It is a cardinal rule in the construction of statutes that the intent of the legislator should be followed, but this is subject to the imperative and paramount rule that the court cannot depart from the meaning of language which is free from ambiguity, although the consequence would be to defeat the object of the act. In Rex v. Barham, 8 Barn. & C. 99, the court said: "Our decision may in this particular case operate to defeat the object of the act; but it is better to abide by this consequence than to put upon it a construction not warranted by the words of the act, in order to give effect to what we may suppose to have been the intention of the legislature." In Smith v. State, 66 Md. 217, 7 Atl. Rep. 49, the court said: "Even when a court is convinced that the legislature really meant and intended something not expressed by the phraseology of the act, it will not deem itself authorized to depart from the plain meaning of language which is free from ambiguity. As was said by Lord DENMAN, in Green v. Wood, 7 Q. B. 185: 'Those who used the words thought they had effected the purpose intended. But we, looking at the words as judges, are no more justified in introducing that meaning than we should be if we added any other provision. We can do no more than give such a meaning as the words authorize.' The supreme court of Ohio, in Woodbury v. Berry, 18 Ohio St. 462, emphatically say: 'It is our legitimate function to interpret legislation, but not to supply its omissions.' The business of the interpreter is, of course, to seek for the intention of the legislature, but that intention is not to be ascertained at the expense of the true meaning of the words. The question is not what the legislature meant, but what its language means. "The court knows nothing of the intention of an act, except from the words in which it is expressed; * * * the meaning of the law being the law itself. * * * Every departure from the clear language of a statute is in effect an assumption of legislative powers by the court." End. Interp. St. §§ 5-8. If the words "each and every day" were eliminated from the provision of the ordinance above referred to, we should hold that the period of time named in the prohibitory clause is that between the hour of 11 P. M. one day, and the hour of 5 A. M. of the next day, but we have no more right to eliminate those words from the ordinance than we have to enlarge its terms. There is but one period in every day between the hours of 11 P. M. and 5 A. M. It is the same period whether you designate it as the period between 11 P. M. and 5 A. M., or between 5 A. M. and 11 P. M. of each and every day. The term "day" has a well-known signification. It is defined by the Code to be "the period of time between any midnight and the midnight following." Pol. Code, § 3259. And this is the interpretation which has always been put upon the word in the construction of prohibitory statutes. Pulling v. People, 8 Barb. 385; Kane v. Com., 89 Pa. St. 522; Haines v. State, 7 Tex. App. 33. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded with directions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

WRIT OF REVIEW—PLEADING.

A writ of review will not be granted to consider an order removing an assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors where the petition does not show that the order was made without notice to the assignee, and there are no direct allegations that the petition for removal did not charge that the assignee had violated or was unfit to execute his duties.

In bank. Petition for writ of review. Carroll Cook and J. E. Foulds, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The petition herein is insufficient to authorize the issuance of the writ asked for. The petition does not show that the order of the superior court removing B. T. Whiteside from the position of assignee or trustee under the deed of assignment executed for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent firm of Blum, Eppstein & Co., was made without notice to Whiteside. The averment that the petition filed in the superior court, asking for the removal of said Whiteside, contained "no allegations of any legal cause why said Whiteside should be removed," is but the statement of a conclusion of law, and is not equivalent to a direct allegation that said petition did not charge that said Whiteside had violated or was unfit to execute the duties of trustee under said deed of assignment. Application for writ denied.

ATTORNEYS — CONTINGENT FEES — ACTION FOR PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

In an action for attorney's fees, where it is alleged in one count of the complaint that the services were reasonably worth $1,500, of which $500 had been paid, and in another count that they were rendered for the agreed price of $500, and the further sum of $1,000 in case of success, and the answer denies the reasonable worth, and alleges that the agreement was for $500 and no more, evidence as to what would be a reasonable contingent fee in such case is irrelevant. Affirming 24 Pac. Rep. 893. BRATTY, C. J., dissenting.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, El Dorado county; GEORGE E. WILLIAMS, Judge.

Blanchard & Swisler, for appellant.
Ben Morgan, A. C. Ellis, George H. Ingham, and Roger Johnson, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an action by the plaintiff, who is an attorney at law, to recover from defendant the sum of $1,000, alleged to be due on account of professional services rendered by plaintiff to defendant. The plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum demanded, and the defendant appeals from such judgment and an order refusing him a new trial. The complaint is in two counts, the first of which states, in substance, that defendant retained plaintiff as his attorney, and that as such attorney, and upon his said retainer, he rendered services in defending a case in the superior court of El Dorado county, in which the Lake Valley Railroad Company was plaintiff, and this defendant and the El Dorado Wood & Flume Company were defendants, "and in counseling and advising therein, and conducting negotiations to a settlement thereof;" and that said services so rendered were reasonably worth the sum of $1,500, of which $500 have been paid. The second count alleges that plaintiff was employed by defendant as his attorney in the action referred to in the first count, "to defend him against said action, and, if possible, to prevent a condemnation of his land as aforesaid, and to negotiate a sale of his said land, or the timber growing thereon, to said company; and in case said Lake Valley Railroad Company should procure such judgment of condemnation, and construct such railroad, then, in case said railroad company should fail or neglect to operate and carry on such railroad in accordance with the laws of the state of California, to commence proceedings to procure a forfeiture of its right to operate and carry on such railroad" for the agreed price of $500, and "the further sum of one thousand dollars, if he should succeed in procuring such judgment of condemnation, or in procuring a sale of defendant's said lands or the timber thereon, or in procuring a forfeiture of the right of said railroad company to operate said railroad in case the same should be constructed and not operated in accordance with law." The answer of the defendant, as we construe it, denies that the services of plaintiff, as alleged in the first cause of action, were reasonably worth any greater sum than $500; and, as to the second cause of action, denies that he ever agreed to pay plaintiff $1,000, or any other sum, on either of the contingencies therein alleged; and alleges that he (defendant) "entered into an express contract with plaintiff, whereby plaintiff agreed to render his services as an attorney at law in defending defendant against said action set forth in said complaint, and in all matters connected with said action, and, if possible, to negotiate the settlement thereof by sale of defendant's timber for the sum of five hundred dollars, and no more," and that the same had been paid. The issues thus presented for trial were: (1) If the services of plaintiff were rendered under an express contract, were the terms of such contract as alleged by plaintiff, or did the answer of defendant correctly state the contract? (2) If the evidence was not sufficient to enable the jury to say that there was an express contract, and what were its terms, then the question would arise as to the reasonable worth of the services actually rendered by plaintiff.

Upon the trial the court admitted the testimony of attorneys as to what would be a fair compensation to plaintiff for the services rendered by him, the witnesses testifying upon the hypothesis that he had contracted to perform them under an express contract for a retainer of five hundred dollars cash, "and the remainder of his fee contingent upon success, in case of compromise." This evidence was objected to by appellant as irrelevant and incompetent. The first cause of action alleged in the complaint is upon an implied contract to pay the reasonable worth of the services rendered, and the evidence objected to was clearly irrelevant as to this, because the law never implies, from the rendition of service, a promise to pay what is known to the legal profession as a "contingent fee." Such a promise, if it exist at all, is the creation of an express contract, and if it should be conceded that it is competent for parties to contract for such a fee, leaving the amount to be fixed by evidence as to what would be a "reasonable contingent fee," no such contract is alleged in the first cause of action, and as to that there was no issue to which such evidence could apply.

2. Was the testimony relevant to any issue made by the pleadings as to the express contract between the parties? The answer to this will depend upon whether such evidence has any tendency to prove the contract alleged by plaintiff or disprove the one set up by the defendant; and we cannot see how proof of this kind could afford the least aid in determining whether the contention of plaintiff or that of defendant is right in regard to the terms of the contract made by them. If there had been a dispute as to the amount of a contingent fee to be paid, then such evidence would have been relevant, if competent at all, as having a bearing upon the probabilities of the case. Testimony as to value or usual price has been frequently admitted in aid of proof of an express contract, where the only fact in dispute was as to the sum agreed to be paid for services rendered thereunder or for property sold. The principle upon which the evidence is admitted in such a case is that proof of reasonable value or usual price has some tendency to show the probable price actually agreed on, that being the fact in dispute. Thus, in Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 234, the court, in passing upon this point, says: "That there was a contract was admitted, and it would seem that there was no controversy about the terms of it, except as to the agreed price for drawing the lumber between the top of the hill and the depot; and while the plaintiff testified positively, as it would seem, that this agreed price was one dollar and fifty cents per thousand, the defendant probably testified just as positively that the agreed price was but one dollar per thousand. Here, then, there was a single point in dispute for the jury to settle; and, as the evidence was conflicting, the jury must find the fact to be either one way or the other, according to the preponderance of the evidence; and, if the direct testimony was evenly balanced, then they must consider the probabilities of the case, and weigh them, and thus come to a conclusion. And it seems to us that the evidence offered tended to show what was the common price for conveying that precise kind of lumber over the same road, and at the same time would, we think, be competent as tending to show whether it was more probable that the price agreed to be paid was one dollar or one dollar and fifty cents per thousand." In the present case there was no controversy as to what would have been a reasonable contingent fee, but whether there was any agreement at all to pay such a fee, and it is manifest that proof of what would be a reasonable contingent fee can have no legitimate tendency to show that there was, in fact, an express contract for that kind of fee. The opinion evidence should have related to the case stated in the first cause of action, or to the particular contract alleged by the defendant. Evidence tending to show that the fee claimed by the defendant as that agreed upon was not the usual or reasonable fee for such services would have been admissible, as bearing upon the probability whether plaintiff would have made such a contract. But the evidence we have been considering was entirely irrelevant to any issue involved in the case, and, as the verdict is general, so that it is impossible to say that the jury disregarded it, and based their verdict upon the other evidence, the judgment must be reversed. This case was heretofore determined in bank, and the same conclusion reached. 24 Pac. Rep. 893. For the reasons here given the judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.; SHARPSTEIN, J.; GAROUTTE, J.

McFARLAND, J. I concur in the judgment; but, in my opinion, no evidence of the reasonableness of a contingent fee is admissible under any circumstances.

TRIAL BY THE COURT — REQUESTED FINDINGS OF LAW—REFLEVIN—Costs.

1. After a trial has practically ended, and the court has orally announced its decision, but has not filed its findings, it cannot be required to pass upon propositions submitted to it as proposed findings of law.

2. Acts Cal. 1865-6, p. 66, § 6, providing that the prevailing party shall be allowed 5 per cent. costs on the amount recovered in litigated cases, not to exceed $100, does not apply to an alternative judgment in replevin for the return of property or for its value.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Mastick, Belcher & Mastick, for appellant. Cope, Boyd & Fifield and Lloyd & Wood, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action of claim and delivery for a quantity of flour by the Wheatland Mill Company against William Pirrie. Judgment was rendered for the defendant for the return of the flour which the plaintiff had received, or the value thereof, and interest. From that judgment and an order refusing a new trial the plaintiffs have appealed. The defendant appeals from an order retaxing costs, by which the sum of $100, claimed as percentage, under section 6 of the act of the legislature, to be found in statutes 1865-6, at page 66, in relation to fees in the city and county of San Francisco, was struck from his memorandum of costs. The appellant contends that the trial court committed error "in denying their request that it would pass upon certain propositions of law presented by plaintiff, and give the same as applicable to the case, and in refusing to pass upon said propositions, and to rule that the same were correct, and applicable to the case." The cause came on to be tried, the court sitting without a jury, on the 20th day of March, 1888, and on that day, upon the evidence produced, was considered and heard by the court; and it was then submitted for decision on briefs to be filed by respective counsel, which was done. On the 4th day of May following, the court announced its decision orally for the defendant. Upon the 16th day of the same month, before the written findings were filed, the propositions of law, which are nothing more than instructions to the court, by the court, put in such a form that such tribunal could answer "Yes" or "No," and thus put itself on record as to its views of the proposition of law therein involved, were presented to the court, and it refused to consider them, making two indorsements thereon on the 21st day of May, 1888,—one indorsement refusing to pass upon or give them as applicable to the case, the other treating them as proposed findings,—and refusing the request to sign and settle the same, because the court had upon that day signed and filed findings of fact in accordance with its decision.

We fail to perceive any good ground upon which it ought to be contended that the practice as here suggested should be held to prevail in any court. If rulings are needed as to the admission or exclusion of evidence involving the determination of questions of law or rulings upon a motion for a nonsuit, or upon any motion or matter which may arise during the progress of the trial, and which are authorized by law to be determined by the court, when counsel on both sides may be present, and can state their views, such rulings can be had before the cause is submitted to the court for final decision. But upon what sound reason a court to whom a cause, upon the law and facts, after hearing, has been submitted for decision, and the trial has practically ended, can then be compelled to instruct itself, as a jury, and at the same time prematurely commit itself as a court to propositions of law in advance of its decision which is made, by its findings of fact and conclusions of law, we do not perceive. There is no statutory provision which prescribes any such course of action, and we can see nothing whatever to recommend it. None of the cases cited by appellant are, we think, in point. If the propositions are to be considered as findings presented to the court, then it was a species of dictation to which the court was not compelled to submit. The question in all such cases is whether the written findings made by the court are sufficient, and the presence or absence of a request to make findings is utterly immaterial; and there is nothing here to show that the findings made were insufficient. Pereira v. Smith, 79 Cal. 233, 21 Pac. Rep. 739.

The further point is made that the findings of the court as to the ownership of the property for the possession of which the action was brought are not sustained by the evidence. We do not concur in this view of the matter, and think the evidence was sufficient. It does not seem to be questioned by either party here, but that the statute under which this percentage may be recovered is still in force, as decided in Whitaker v. Haynes, 49 Cal. 596. That statute is in effect that "the prevailing party shall be allowed five per cent. on the amount recovered," etc., "in litigated cases," not to exceed $100 on any one judgment. The test here is what is the meaning to be given to the words "amount recovered," as to the judgment under consideration. It is in the alternative, under section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the return of the property mentioned in the complaint, or, in case a return thereof cannot be had, for the sum of $1,837.50 and interest, making in the aggregate, $2,386.85, with interest on that amount at 7 per cent. from rendition of judgment, and costs, on which amount, to the extent of $100, the percentage was claimed. The "amount" recovered is not the primary and absolute result of the judgment. It may never be recovered, because the whole property or a part thereof may be returned, in which event there would be a percentage given for an amount which was not recovered at all; and in this case it does not appear whether the property, or any part of it, would be returned or not. Hence we do not think that the statute in question includes such a judgment as the one in hand. It follows that the judgment and order refusing a new trial, and the order retaxing costs, should be affirmed, and we so advise.

We concur: TEMPLE, C.; FITZGERALD, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order refusing a new trial, and the order retaxing costs, are affirmed.

REHEARING—NEW QUESTIONS—DEATH SENTENCE.

On appeal from a sentence of death, the supreme court will consider questions raised for the first time in a petition for rehearing.

On rehearing. For former report, see 26 Pac. Rep. 756.

PER CURIAM. In this case we are entirely satisfied with the correctness of the decision heretofore rendered upon all the points discussed in the opinion of the court. But in their petition for a rehearing counsel for the defendant present an altogether new point, as to which we have grave doubts. In civil cases we have invariably refused to grant a rehearing for the purpose of considering a suggestion of error made for the first time in the petition for rehearing, but we feel constrained to relax this rule in a criminal case in which the defendant is appealing from a judgment of death. Rehearing granted.

PORTER v. JENNINGS, Sheriff, et al. (No. 18,469.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 10, 1891.)

INJUNCTION—SALE OF LANDS ON EXECUTION—DISSOLUTION ON ANSWER.

1. In an action to restrain the sale of land under execution against plaintiff's grantor the court should continue the restraining order pending final determination, and it is an abuse of discretion to dissolve it upon the filing of an answer denying the allegations of the bill.

2. While denials upon information and belief, authorized by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 437, are sufficient to raise an issue, they are not such denials as will justify the dissolution of a temporary injunction on the ground that the bill is fully denied by the answer.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

A. S. Kittredge, for appellant. T. H. Laine and Z. N. Goldsby, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action for a perpetual injunction to restrain Jennings, the sheriff of Santa Cruz county, from selling the land of plaintiff, under an execution issued on a judgment in favor of defendant Cummings against one William N. Cummings. The complaint was full and complete. The answer denied plaintiff's ownership, specifically averring that the deed from the execution debtor, Cummings, to one Ketchum was in fact a mortgage, and that the deed from Ketchum to plaintiff conveyed no title. Upon the filing of the complaint, an order was made on defendants to show cause why an injunction should not be granted to stay proceedings pending the final determination of the suit, and a temporary restraining order was issued. The matter was heard upon the complaint and answer, and upon a decree of the court made in the case of Cummings v. Cummings, which does not appear to be material. The restraining order was set aside by the court, which was, in effect, a refusal to grant the injunction. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 109. From this order denying the application for an injunction pendente lite plaintiff appeals.

The rule is so well established in this state that an order granting or dissolving an injunction is a matter of discretion with the lower court, which this court will not review, except where an abuse of that discretion is urged, that a citation of authority upon the question is useless labor. Applying this well-established principle to the case under examination, can the action of the trial court be sustained? The plaintiff claims to be the owner of a tract of land, purchased in good faith, for a valuable consideration, in the actual possession thereof, and now seeks to prevent a sale under execution against the original grantor. It is settled law in this state that injunction is the proper remedy in this character of action, and that a dissolution of the restraining order does not follow as a matter of course upon the filing of the answer denying the equities of the complaint. Conceding that the denials in the answer of defendants are complete and unobjectionable, still it would seem in the exercise of a sound discretion the lower court should have held the sale in abeyance until the final disposition of the case upon its merits. "Especially will this discretion be exercised where fraud is the gravamen of the bill, or when it is apparent to the court that a dissolution of the injunction would result in greater injury and hardship than its continuance to the hearing, or where it is apparent that by a dissolution complainant would lose all the benefit which would otherwise accrue to him should he finally succeed in his cause. * * * So, where the case, as presented by the bill, is one which seems to require investigation, and the effect of dissolving the injunction would be to place the property, which is the subject of controversy, beyond the control of the court in which the action is pending, and would be equivalent to a complete denial of the relief sought by the bill, the injunction will not be dissolved." Sections 1508, 1509, High, Inj. "If the continuance of the injunction, even admitting defendant's answer to be true, cannot prejudice or imperil his rights, and on the other hand its dissolution might seriously impair the rights of complainant, the motion to dissolve upon the coming in of the answer should not be allowed." Section 1511, Id. "It is also held that where the injunction is not merely ancillary to some other or principal relief sought by the action, but is itself the principal relief desired, and its dissolution would be equivalent to a dismissal of the action, if a reasonable doubt exists in the mind of the court whether the bill is sufficiently negatived by the answer, it is proper to refuse a dissolution, and continue the injunction to the hearing." Section 1512, Id. "Thus, in the case of an injunction against a sheriff's sale of real property under an execution, while a serious question is pending and undetermined as to whether the land is really subject to sale in satisfaction of the judgment, a motion to dissolve will not be granted, but the injunction will be continued to the hearing." Section 1543, Id. It must be conceded that, if plaintiff prove the allegations of his complaint at the trial, he will be entitled to a judgment of perpetual injunction, but then his judgment is a nullity; the calamity has befallen him; the horse has already been stolen; the sale has already been made; the relief has come too late; the cloud upon his title is an accomplished fact. The judgment of the trial court in denying the injunction deprived plaintiff of all benefit of the right to which the law declares he is entitled. It is virtually dismissing the action because defendants deny plaintiff's right. It is practically rendering judgment for defendants because they deny the allegations of the complaint. In this case defendants could not have been prejudiced, nor their rights imperiled, by the granting of the injunction. The execution had been levied; the lien, if any, was secure; no injury, aside from delay, (which a bond would fully satisfy,) could result to defendants. "To dissolve the injunction, and permit the plaintiff's farm to be sold, under this judgment at sheriff's sale, to the highest bidder, while a serious question is pending here whether it can be sold at all under the judgment, would be indiscreet." Van Mater v. Holmes, 6 N. J. Eq. 593.

In the case of Hicks v. Compton, 18 Cal. 210, the court used the following language: "The rights of the defendants are protected by a bond, and no injury can result to them from a continuance of the injunction. The plaintiff has no security whatever, and the dissolution of the injunction leaves him at the mercy of the defendants. The granting and continuing of injunctions of this nature are to some extent matters of discretion, and this discretion should always be exercised in favor of the party most liable to be injured." In the case of Hunt v. Steese, 75 Cal. 624, 17 Pac. Rep. 920, where the trial court refused an injunction pendente lite to restrain waste in an action of ejectment, this court said: "In all cases of this kind, an injunction should be granted pending the determination of the issue as to ownership, unless it appears that the plaintiff's title is bad, or, at least, that there is no reasonable ground for the assertion of title by the plaintiff." And again: "Not only should there be an answer to the merits, but it should be made reasonably certain by the pleadings and the affidavits that the attack upon the patent will be ultimately successful, or the injunction should be granted." And thereupon this court directed the lower court to issue the injunction. To sustain respondents in this appeal would deprive appellant of all benefit which would accrue to him should he finally succeed in his cause, and would be a complete denial of the relief sought by the complainant. The injunction prayed for is not merely ancillary to other relief; it is itself the principal relief desired, and its denial is equivalent to dismissal of the action. Upon the authorities heretofore quoted, and upon principles of sound reason and justice, we think an injunction should have issued pending the final judgment in the cause.

Certain allegations of the complaint are denied upon information and belief. While denials in this form are authorized by section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure as matters of pleading, and are sufficient to raise an issue, yet they are not such denials as will serve as the basis of a motion to dissolve an injunction on the ground that the equities of the bill are fully denied by the answer. Judge STORY says: "Such negation affords no presumption against the plaintiff's claim, but merely establishes that the defendant has no personal knowledge to aid it or disprove it." Poor v. Carleton, 8 Sum. 77, 78; High, Inj. § 1514. The order refusing to grant the injunction should be reversed, and the trial court directed to issue the injunction asked for by plaintiff, pending the final determination of the cause upon its merits.

We concur: PATERSON, J.; HARRISON, J.

RESPINI v. PORTA. (No. 13,252.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1891.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—ABANDONMENT OF PREMISES—DAMAGES.

1. Under Civil Code Cal. § 8300, providing that for breach of contract the measure of damages is that amount which will compensate the party for all detriment proximately caused thereby, a landlord whose premises are abandoned by his tenant, and who thereupon leases the same to another, can recover as damages only the difference between the amount he should have received under the first lease and that which he actually did receive under the second.

2. Civil Code Cal. § 8302, providing that the detriment caused by the breach of an obligation to pay money only is deemed to be the amount due by the obligation, does not apply to an action by a landlord to recover damages for the abandonment of the leased premises by the tenant.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Joseph H. Skirm, for appellant. Z. N. Goldsby, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. On November 1, 1884, the plaintiff leased certain real and personal property to the defendant for the term of five years at an annual rental of $2,400, payable quarterly in advance. The defendant entered into possession of the lands, and held the same, and paid the rent regularly for one year. On November 2, 1885, plaintiff demanded payment of the rent due for the first quarter of the second year, but the defendant replied that he had no more money, could not pay the rent, and was going to leave the place and give up everything. Plaintiff answered that he had not come to take possession of the property, but to ask for his rent, but if the defendant was going to abandon the property he would take possession of the same to protect it. The defendant thereupon surrendered possession of the property to the plaintiff. A few days after the 2d day of November, 1885, the plaintiff leased the property to one Filippini at a rental of $2,000 per year, and the latter has ever since held possession and paid rent at that rate. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of $600, being the amount claimed to be due him from defendant on November 1, 1885, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from that date. The court below held that the defendant was entitled to a credit of $500, the amount the plaintiff had received from Filippini.

It was properly held by the court below that the abandonment of the premises to the plaintiff, and the taking possession by him against his wish, and the subsequent letting of the property to another tenant, was not a surrender and termination of the lease under the circumstances. A landlord, upon a wrongful abandonment by his tenant, may, if he choose, decline to meddle with the property at all, and at the end of the term sue for the rent. He is not, however, driven to this course, and run the risk of damage to his property, or the insolvency of his tenant. In this case the plaintiff pursued the right course in letting the property to Filippini, and we presume that he procured the highest rent that could be obtained. But we cannot support him in his contention that because the defendant, against his (plaintiff's) wishes, and without right, abandoned the property, he is entitled to recover the full amount provided for by the terms of the lease to defendant. Our Code provides that "for the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom." Section 3300, Civil Code.

We think plaintiff's rights are measured by the provisions of this section, and not by section 3302, Id. In cases of this kind the landlord is not entitled to recover for rent of the premises after the abandonment of them by the defendant, but has compensation for the injury, and his measure of damage is the difference between the rent he was to receive and the rent actually received from the subsequent tenant, provided there has been good faith in the subsequent letting. Gear, Landl. & Ten. §§ 128, 176; Ledoux v. Jones, 20 La. Ann. 540; Bloomer v. Merrill, 29 How. Pr. 259; Randall v. Thompson, 1 Tex. Civil Cas. Ct. App. 1102; Auer v. Pennsylvania, 99 Pa. St. 370; Field, Dam.

§ 523. Appellant contends that, as nearly two years had passed between the time of the abandonment by the defendant and the trial of this action, the court below ought to have allowed the plaintiff about $800, that being the amount of damage up to that time through the defendant's breach of his obligation as lessee. The complaint, however, was filed on November 28, 1885, and no claim was made therein for anything beyond the amount of the first installment. Under the pleadings the court could not allow for any subsequent installments. Judgment affirmed.

INJUNCTION—WATER-RIGHTS—EASEMENTS.

A land-owner may have an injunction against a stranger, who, under claim of right, is taking water from his canal by means of a ditch across his land, even though the amount of water taken is inappreciable, since its continued use would ripen into an easement in the land.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county: JOSEPH P. JONES, Judge.

A. H. Griffith and A. C. Hartley, for appellants. W. S. Tinning and W. S. Wells, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought to enjoin defendants from depositing dirt upon plaintiff's land, and from diverting water from plaintiff's canal, on his said land, and for damages. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, enjoining defendants as prayed for, and defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. We think that the evidence supports the findings.

Plaintiff owns a tract of land through which there is an artificial water-way or canal, about 7 feet deep and 40 feet wide, which is wholly owned and controlled by plaintiff, and was originally constructed mainly for purposes of navigation. It receives its waters—or most of them—from a slough connected with the San Joaquin river, and is filled and emptied by the flow and ebb of the tides of the Pacific ocean, although the water which flows into it is river water and fresh. The appellants divert water from said canal by means of a ditch which they dug through and over plaintiff's land, and connected with the canal by a box. They seem to take the position that when the canal is filled by the influence of the tides, the amount of water in it is inexhaustible, and incapable of being diminished; that, therefore, the amount diverted by them can do respondent no damage; and that, therefore, an injunction will not lie. If there is any such principle with respect to water-rights, it certainly could be applied only to a case where a party, without intruding upon the possessions of others, and without committing any direct trespass upon another's land, took water from a stream at a point where he had a right to approach it, to the alleged damage of persons claiming water-rights at other points on the stream. But there is clearly no principle by which a mere intruder can go upon the land of another, and take water from an artificial ditch thereon. Such an act is an injury to the right, and, if threatened to be continued, should be enjoined, whatever opinion persons other than the owner may have about the extent of the damage that may result. "The right to an injunction, therefore, in such a case, does not depend upon the extent of the damage, measured by the money standard; the maxim de minimis does not apply." Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 461, 18 Pac. Rep. 872, and 21 Pac. Rep. 11, and cases there cited. It is true that the court finds in one place that plaintiff was not actually damaged by the taking of the water that had occurred; which means, we suppose, that the court could not make any money estimate of such damage; but the court also finds that "if said defendants are not restrained and enjoined from using said water, and conducting the same through said ditch, said use thereof by defendant will ripen into an easement on the part of the defendants, and prevent the unrestricted use of said canal by plaintiff, and cause plaintiff great and irreparable injury." The question of damages is irrelevant. The threatened act of appellants "disturbs the plaintiff's possession, and, if permitted to continue, will ripen into an easement. That of itself is sufficient to entitle him to an injunction." Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 64. The threatened filling up of plaintiff's land with dirt, thus destroying his fruit-trees, etc., is of the same character as the digging of the ditch and the diversion of the water; and upon the same principle such acts were properly enjoined. We see no error in the rulings of the court below. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

EJECTMENT — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT — DESCRIPTION OF LANDS.

1. In ejectment, a complaint alleging that plaintiff is seized in fee of the realty, and defendant is in possession, and against plaintiff's will detains and withholds the possession thereof, is sufficient on demurrer.

2. Where, in ejectment, the land is described as being in S. township, S. C. county, California, and bounded on the north-east by Bay avenue, on the S. E. by the land of M. E. Land, and on the S. W. and N. W. by S. creek, the description is sufficient on special demurrer.

Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Z. N. Goldsby, for appellant. Charles B. Younger, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action of ejectment. The complaint was attacked by a general demurrer, and also by a special demurrer, as to the sufficiency of the description of the land involved in the litigation. The demurrer was overruled, and an answer filed by defendant, denying the allegations of the complaint, and setting up a lease by plaintiff to G. Mangenberg, the husband of defendant, and alleging that she was the surviving widow of said deceased lessee, and that no administration has been had upon his estate. This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment and order denying her motion for a new trial. The demurrer was properly overruled. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is seized in fee of the realty; that the defendant is in possession, and against plaintiff's will detains and withholds the possession thereof. After a careful review of the law upon this question, this court, in Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243, held such a complaint sufficient. To the same effect is Rego v. Van Pelt, 65 Cal. 254, 3 Pac. Rep. 867.

The demurrer to the complaint, as to the insufficiency of the description of the realty, was not well taken. The land was described as being in Soquel township, Santa Cruz county, state of California, and bounded on the north-east by Bay avenue, on the south-east by the land of M. E. Land, and on the south-west and north-west by Soquel creek. We cannot hold, from this description in the complaint, that it is impossible for the proper officer to identify the land in the field. Carpenter v. Grant, 21 Cal. 140; Lawrence v. Davidson, 44 Cal. 180. The lease from plaintiff to appellant's husband did not give her any greater right than the lessee would have had if he had lived. The lease was for a fixed period of five years, which expired December 31, 1888. Had the lessee been living at the expiration of this period, his tenancy surely would then have been at an end. Canning v. Fibush, 77 Cal. 196, 19 Pac. Rep. 376. The fact that the lessee died before the expiration of the lease could not prolong the term, and plaintiff had no interest or right in the property after the expiration of the lease. We have carefully examined appellant's exceptions upon the admission of certain evidence, and find no error in the rulings of the lower court. Let the judgment and order be affirmed.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—SCOPE OF AGENCY—LIABILITY TO THIRD PERSON.

A manufacturer wrote to a customer that for the next year he had 14 new patterns of furniture, and that "our Mr. W. will call on you early in January, and talk to you about handling the line next year." The agent called, and defendants claim to have bought old patterns of goods, which were not delivered. Held, the letter only gave authority to sell the new patterns, and the customer could not recover for a failure to deliver old patterns of furniture.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WALTER H. LEVY, Judge.

John H. Dickinson, for appellant. O'Leary, Chickering & Thomas, for respondents.

FOOTE, C. The plaintiff brought this action against the defendants for the recovery of $881.67, alleged to be due it for goods sold and delivered to the defendants, who set up a counter-claim to an amount greater than that sued for by the plaintiff. The court found in favor of the plaintiff to the extent of its demand, and also for the defendants to the extent of $1,654, and rendered judgment in favor of the latter for the difference between the value of the goods sold and delivered and the amount allowed on the counter-claim. This appeal is from that judgment and an order denying a new trial.

The first point made by the appellant is that the court erred in finding, upon the evidence, that the plaintiff ever agreed to sell the defendants the goods which the former failed and refused to deliver the latter; the argument in this connection being that the proof showed that the alleged sale was made by an agent of the plaintiff of goods that were to be manufactured, which agent was one selling furniture on commission, and that it was not within the scope of his authority directly or ostensibly to make such a sale binding on the plaintiff. The evidence as to the scope of the agent's authority was to this effect: That the plaintiff, the McCord & Bradfield Furniture Company, a corporation, was doing business at Grand Rapids, Mich.; that Frank Wenderoth, its alleged agent, was a member of the firm of Wenderoth Bros. in the city of Chicago, whose business was that of merchants to sell furniture on commission; that he had for several years been coming twice a year to San Francisco, selling the goods of the plaintiff and of other manufacturers to the defendants; that through him the latter had made purchases of goods at various times from plaintiff. This being the ordinary course of business between the parties, the defendants on the 10th of December, 1886, received a letter from the plaintiff, to the effect that for the next year the latter had 14 new patterns of furniture, which it would be ready to submit to the inspection of the former, by the end of the month, concluding with this sentence: "Our Mr. Frank Wenderoth will call on you early in January, and talk to you about handling the line for next year." After the reception of this letter by the defendants, Wenderoth called upon them, and exhibited photographs of the furniture of the new patterns referred to in that communication, and also of certain old patterns. The defendants claim that he (Wenderoth) made a contract for the plaintiff to sell some furniture of the old patterns. Wenderoth testified that he only agreed to try to induce the plaintiff to make and furnish "the old patterns which the defendants had contracted to sell to a third party in California at a profit." The plaintiff refused to fill the order because it had none of the old pattern furniture in stock, and would not manufacture it to fill the order, as it would not pay it to do so, and it had ceased to manufacture such goods. One of the defendants testified that Wenderoth was the general agent of plaintiff, authorized to make all contracts for the sale of its goods west of the Missouri river, and assigned as a reason for this knowledge that they never knew of or heard of any one else selling its goods. So far as the defendants' knowledge as to the scope of Wenderoth's agency was derived from the plaintiff, it was from the letter above adverted to, and a similar one, written some years before this transaction, and the bills sent for goods by the plaintiff had written on them that they were sold by Frank Wenderoth or Wenderoth Bros. So far as the direct authority goes which Wenderoth had from the letter introduced in evidence, and from the one which had been previously written, it seems that his authority to sell only extended to the new patterns of furniture which were in process of manufacture, were already manufactured, or were offered to be manufactured by these letters, which were written mainly for the purpose of notifying the defendants that the agent would be on hand, as he had been in previous years, and would endeavor to sell the new styles of furniture.

Upon the matter of the ostensible agency, to be deduced from what had occurred in former years, it does not appear that the course of business was other than that the agent sold the goods of the manufacturing company, presumably those that it was willing to manufacture, or that it was manufacturing, or that it had on hand. There is nothing to show positively that it would or would not have authorized the sale of old-style goods, which it had ceased to manufacture. The only instance where, according to the testimony of one of the defendants, the agent had undertaken to sell goods that were no longer manufactured, and not in stock, was the present instance. The agent had in at least one instance before this sold goods under a letter similar to the one in evidence, that is, containing authority to sell new pattern goods; and he had in previous years also sold whatever his principal had to sell; but it is not shown that he ever, in any of those years, undertook or did sell goods which had ceased to be manufactured by his principal. We do not see that his ostensible authority, independent of the letters, went any further than to sell goods that his principal had on hand, or was willing to manufacture, or was manufacturing. One who acts in one year for the sale of goods manufactured for sale for that year cannot be said from that circumstance to be the agent to sell the same goods for the next year, unless they are continued to be manufactured or are in stock, and the principal wishes to sell them. The very sending of an agent out to sell carries with it the idea that he is expected by the principal to sell to his advantage, and, this being so, it would seem to be going a long distance out of the way to say that, because he is expressly authorized to sell manufactured goods, he is also authorized to sell those that have ceased to be manufactured, and could not be except at a loss. We do not think that the evidence shows either direct or ostensible authority in the agent to sell goods that his employer had ceased to manufacture, and did not carry in stock, and could not manufacture except at a loss. An agent authorized to sell the property of his principal when manufactured has no authority to sell before it is manufactured. Merriam v. De Turk, 66 Cal. 549, 6 Pac. Rep. 424. By parity of reasoning, an agent who is shown to have authority to sell new pattern goods to be manufactured (and, so far as this evidence shows, the agent had no further authority than to do this, and to sell what his principal had already manufactured, or was willing to manufacture) cannot be said to have authority to sell what is not being manufactured, and will not be by his principal, because to manufacture it would result in a loss, which is not the prevalent idea in any business. We do not think that under such circumstances a reasonable man would believe that a principal would carry out any such contract, or had apparently intended to authorize his agent to make it. It becomes unnecessary to notice any other point made by the appellant, and we advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

We concur: BELCHER, C.; TEMPLE, C.

WHAT CONSTITUTES MINING PARTNERSHIP — LIABILITY OF PARTNERS — AUTHORITY OF SUPERINTENDENT.

1. Civil Code Cal. § 2443, providing that every general partner is jointly liable to third persons for firm debts, applies to members of a mining partnership.

2. A mine superintendent has the right to expend partnership funds for necessary supplies for the mine without express authority.

3. A contract by which a stranger agrees to work the mine, pay one-half the expense, and receive one-half the product as compensation, does not constitute him a partner, under Civil Code Cal. § 2511, providing that a mining partnership exists where several persons owning a claim actually engage in working it.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WALTER H. LEVY, Judge.

Nagle & Nagle, for appellants. Hutchinson & Campbell and Alfred Dixon, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover $2,795.18 upon contracts for labor, and for money advanced. The defendants are mining copartners doing business under the firm name of the Alabama Bar Mining & Canal Company. Plaintiff performed labor for them at their mine, and a portion of the time acted in the capacity of superintendent. In this action he recovered a joint judgment for $2,311.16. This is an appeal from the judgment and order denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

Appellants insist that, as members of a mining partnership, they are only liable, pro rata, for the liabilities of the partnership according to their respective interests as part owners in the mine. No authority directly bearing upon this question has been presented for our consideration by counsel upon either side. In those states where mining partnerships are common we find many cases where judgments have been rendered against all the defendants (mining copartners) for the full amount recovered, and no question raised as to their validity upon that ground, and such has been the practice in this state. Jones v. Clark, 42 Cal. 181; Taylor v. Castle, Id. 367; Skillman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 198; McConnell v. Denver, 35 Cal. 365. In McConnell v. Denver, supra, page 372, where the trial court rendered a joint judgment against some of the defendants, this court said: "Upon the findings the judgment should have been against Latham, as well as the other defendants. If he was a member when the contract sued on was made, and the contract was executed by a party duly authorized, he must, of course, be bound by it as well as the other members." While the language may tend towards the position of respondent, yet the court's attention does not appear to have been directed in that particular line. It is passing strange, if defendants' position is correct, that they have been allowed to quietly rest so long; yet its novelty does not deprive it of careful consideration by the court. "Mining partnerships, where there are no partnership articles, are governed by the law of ordinary partnerships, except so far as the general usage of persons engaged in similar pursuits, or the established practice of the particular company, has established a different rule. The only difference generally existing, as established by the decisions of this court, is such as legitimately flows from the fact that in such copartnerships there is no delectus personæ." Jones v. Clark, 42 Cal. 183. "Every general partner is liable to third persons for the obligations of the partnership, jointly with his copartners." Section 2442, Civil Code. We do not believe that the fact that in mining partnership there is no delectus personæ takes them out of the rule laid down in the foregoing section of the Civil Code. In all the cases we have examined which attempt to enumerate the differences existing between general partnerships and mining partnerships arising from the fact that in the latter there is no choice of partners, as already stated, we find none to assert that one of the distinctive features is that mining copartners are only liable to creditors for a pro rata amount of the indebtedness. There is no good reason in saying that "my partner is not one of my choice, and therefore can only bind me for a pro rata of the indebtedness." The proportion of the indebtedness for which he shall be bound to a third party has no relation whatever to the fact that his associate in business is not one of his choice, and does not legitimately flow from the absence of delectus personæ. A member of a mining partnership is bound or not bound by the acts of a copartner, who is forced upon him according as the copartner acts with or without authority, and, if he is bound at all, it would seem that he is bound to the full extent of the liability. Section 2513 of the Civil Code, which provides that a member of a mining partnership shares in the profits and losses thereof in the proportion to his interest, etc., seems to reiterate the law of ordinary business partnerships. It does not add to the weight of appellants' contention; for it must be construed as referring to the relations of the partners as to each other, and has no reference to the liabilities of the partnership to third parties. Section 2514 of the Civil Code reads: "Each member of a mining partnership has a lien upon the partnership property for the debts due the creditors thereof, and for money advanced by him for its use." Section 2520, Id.: "The decision of the members owning a majority of the shares or interests in a mining partnership binds it in the conduct of its business." It is difficult to see why each partner should have a lien upon the partnership property for the debts due the creditors, if such partner be not liable to those creditors for the debts. It is apparent this lien is given for the purpose of enabling him to collect from his copartners their proportion of the indebtedness which he has been compelled to pay in full. By reason of the foregoing views, and from the additional fact that if the legislature, in framing the provisions of the Civil Code defining and governing mining partnerships, had intended to place such a great innovation upon the universal law of ordinary partnerships, to-wit, that a partner is only liable to creditors for his proportion of their claims, according to his interest, it would have so declared in explicit terms, we conclude that appellants' contention has no merit.

Plaintiff, as superintendent of the mine, had the right to expend for the partnership moneys in the purchase of articles that were necessary for the conduct of the mine in the usual manner, without express authority. "The company being a mining partnership, managed by a superintendent, it follows that the superintendent could not bind the partnership, except upon such contracts as are usual and necessary in the ordinary prosecution of the work. He could purchase the supplies and materials necessary for the usual working of the mine upon credit." Jones v. Clark, 42 Cal. 180.

Plaintiff contracted with defendants to work the mine, pay one-half the expenses thereof, and receive one-half the product of the mine for his labor. This contract does not constitute a mining partnership between plaintiff and defendants. "A mining partnership exists when two or more persons who own or acquire a mining claim for the purpose of working it, and extracting the mineral therefrom, actually engage in working the same." Section 2511, Civil Code. "The relation arises from the ownership of shares or interests in the mine, and working the same for the purpose of extracting the minerals therefrom." Section 2512, Id. In the construction of a contract very similar to the one under discussion, this court said in Hudepohl v. Water Co., 80 Cal. 558, 22 Pac. Rep. 339: "Such a contract does not create the relation of landlord and tenant, but fixes a rule of compensation for services rendered. It is in all essential features a contract for labor to be performed and to be paid for by a share of the profits realized from such labor." Appellant insists that the evidence does not show that the defendant Adams had any authority to employ plaintiff under the verbal contract of May, 1884. It would serve no good purpose to enter into a detailed statement of the evidence upon this question as disclosed by the record. There was certainly ample evidence to justify the court in denying the motion for a nonsuit, and allowing the jury to pass upon this question of fact. The instructions appear to contain a very full and fair statement of the law of the case. Let the judgment and order be affirmed.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACTS—ASSESSMENTS.

1. The time specified by the board of supervisors for the completion of certain street work in the published proposals for bids, and the award of the contract, was 25 days, but the contract made by the superintendent of streets and contractor gave 30 days. Held, the contract was void, and assessments to pay for work done thereunder could not be enforced.

2. Where the action of the superintendent of streets was void, the assessment could not become valid by failure of defendant to appeal from the board of supervisors, as allowed by Act Cal. 1872, § 12.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WALTER H. LEVY, Judge.

J. M. Wood, (J. C. Bates, of counsel,) for appellant. Langhorne & Miller, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the defendant, and is brought up on the judgment roll alone. The action was instituted to foreclose a street assessment made by the superintendent of streets of the city and county of San Francisco. The court below found that the contract entered into by that officer and the person to whom the street work was awarded by the board of supervisors of that city and county was void, because the time within which it specified the work was to be done was a different time than that authorized by the board in the notice inviting sealed proposals by bidders to do the work, and in the award of the contract; and that the assessment based upon such void contract was also void, and not to be enforced. It seems from the findings that the time specified in the published proposal to bidders and in the award of the contract was 25 days from the signing of the contract, but the contract actually made and entered into by the superintendent of streets, and the contractor to whom the assessment was issued, was that the work should be completed in 30 days from the signing of the contract.

The appellant contends that the difference in time between the contract authorized to be entered into and that actually entered into was a mere irregularity, and did not affect the validity of the assessment, the board of supervisors having once acquired jurisdiction to do the work; and that the defendant could have appealed to the board of supervisors under section 12 of the street act of 1872, and that, not having done so, the assessment was valid, and should have been enforced. He further claims that, even if the contract was void as to 5 days of the time specified therein in which it was agreed to be done, yet it was good as to 25 days, and, if the work was done in that time, the assessment was properly made. It has been held in many cases that neither the board of supervisors nor the superintendent of streets possesses the power to grant extensions of time for the performance of work under a street contract after the expiration of the time limited in the contract, and that an order granting such extension is void. Raisch v. City and County of San Francisco, 80 Cal. 4, 22 Pac. Rep. 22; Beveridge v. Livingstone, 54 Cal. 54; Fanning v. Schammel, 68 Cal. 428, 9 Pac. Rep. 427; Dougherty v. Coffin, 69 Cal. 454, 10 Pac. Rep. 672. "The statute itself makes time of the essence of contracts for street work." Raisch v. City and County of San Francisco, 80 Cal. 5, 22 Pac. Rep. 22. The extension of time after that contracted for has expired is forbidden, because of the fact that the contract entered into by the superintendent of streets, as the mere ministerial act of an agent to do a certain thing under the statute, must follow the letter of authority, which is the resolution of award made by the board of supervisors. If the time mentioned in the award as that within which the work to be contracted for must be finished, and which is then put into the contract and becomes of the essence of it, cannot be extended after it has expired, can it not be said that by parity of reason the ministerial agent cannot go outside, in the inception of his ministerial act, of his letter of authority, and extend the time in making the contract, thus making the time, which is of the essence of the contract, different from that in the award, which is the very source of his authority? If he can thus diverge from the letter of his authority to the extent of 5 days, he can do so for 5,000; and so the very object of the law, that is, that the board of supervisors shall be the power to fix the time within which street work is to be done, is done away with, and the discretion of the superintendent of streets, not contemplated by the street act, is substituted.

If it should be argued that the notice to bidders to make proposals, and the putting in of a bid, and the award of the contract, shall be said to authorize the contractor to do the work in the time mentioned in the award, without entering into the written contract with the superintendent of streets, or giving the bonds required by law, then it would appear that these last conditions necessary to be done, as prescribed in the law of 1872, pp. 808, 809, are superfluous, and need not be regarded. This view cannot be maintained. Time is of the essence of the contract, and it must be the time set out in the award, and the proceedings upon which such an assessment as here involved are based, being in invitum, must be strictly pursued, in strict compliance with the law under which they are taken. Raisch v. City and County of San Francisco, 80 Cal. 5, 22 Pac. Rep. 22. The award by the board of supervisors of the contract here was the measure of the superintendent's power as to time, which was to be of the essence of the contract. If the contract, by him a purely ministerial act, did not follow the award, it was not the contract which he was authorized to make, and it was therefore invalid. Dougherty v. Hitchcock, 35 Cal. 524. As the action of the superintendent of streets was void, it could not become valid by the failure of the property owner to appeal, under section 12 of the law of 1872, to the board of supervisors. He could not appeal unless "aggrieved." Such owner was not aggrieved, for the contract made was void, and affected his rights no more than would a void judgment. "The failure of the contractor to appeal did not operate (1) to create a grievance on the part of the defendants, or (2) to estop them from complaining of it." Burke v. Turney, 54 Cal. 486. The judgment is affirmed.

COX v. DAWSON.

(Supreme Court of Washington. May 28, 1891.)

ATTACHMENT—CLAIM NOT DUE—ALLEGATIONS OF FRAUD MUST BE PROVED.

Under Sess. Laws Wash. 1886, § 3, providing for an attachment upon causes of action not due, where the defendant has made a fraudulent disposition of his property, the allegation as to such disposition is material, and must be proved, in order to justify the bringing of the action before the claim is due.

Appeal from district court, Walla Walla county.

Action in attachment by Dawson against Cox. The eleventh and twelfth counts of the complaint alleged that defendant executed to plaintiff's assignor certain notes, which were not due, but that nothing but time was wanting to fix an absolute indebtedness thereon, and that defendant had disposed of his property with intent to defraud his creditors. The answer denied that defendant had so disposed of his property. No evidence was offered in support of this allegation of fraud, and the court rendered judgment for the amount of the notes. Defendant appeals.

Brents & Clark and A. E. Isham, for appellant. Cox, Teal & Minor and B. L. & J. L. Sharpstein, for appellee.

STILES, J. We find no material error in the record, under any of the points urged, excepting theseventh. The fifteenth paragraph of the answer raised no issue; so that all of the amounts claimed stood confessed. The admission of the letter and the statement of indebtedness, if erroneous, was not materially so, as the assignments to Dawson were otherwise sufficiently proven. But the court erred in submitting the eleventh and twelfth causes of action to the jury. The appellee, as owner and holder of two promissory notes which were not yet due, sought to include them in his suit against Cox upon his other ten causes, and to secure them by his attachment, in pursuance of section 3 of the act of February 3, 1886. He alleged fraudulent disposition of property in his complaint, and also in his affidavit for the attachment; but upon the trial he offered no proof of this allegation, and treated it as no longer material. The court took the same view, and rendered judgment for the amount of these notes, although the answer fully denies the fraud. The act referred to does not confer upon a creditor any new right of action, when it permits an attachment to secure an undue claim. Its effect is to make it the law of all contracts for future payment that, in case of conduct on the part of the debtor, such as would tend to fraudulently jeopardize the safety of the debt, the creditor may commence his suit forthwith, and have an attachment as security pendente lite. By the first section of the act, attachments are issued only at the time of the commencement of the action, or afterwards. An action is commenced by the filing of a complaint and the issuance of a summons. Acts, 1888, p. 24. In such cases, therefore, the attachment must be preceded by the filing of the complaint. But, unless the complaint shows the reason for its premature filing, it would be obnoxious to demurrer for want of facts. Therefore the allegations in the affidavit for the attachment are necessary to the complaint also, and they continue to be material allegations at every stage of the case. They must be proved like any other fact to authorize judgment, as, unless they were true at the time the action was commenced, there was no jurisdiction for the premature suit and attachment, and the proceeding must fail. The judgment will be modified by deducting the amount of the six-months note of Honeyman, De Hart & Co., ($450.) with interest thereon from October 24th, 1889, to May 3, 1890; and by the amount of the note of Walter Bros., ($500.) with interest thereon from December 5, 1889, to May 3, 1890, at 8 per cent. per annum; and by whatever sums may have been allowed by the court as costs or attorney's fees on account of said note. When so modified, the remainder of the judgment will be affirmed. The cause is remanded to the superior court for modification in accordance with this opinion. Each party will pay his own costs of this appeal.

EGLEY et ux. v. OREGON RY. & NAV. CO.

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 4, 1891.)

RAILROAD COMPANIES — BOY STEALING A RIDE — NEGLIGENCE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a boy of 9½ years, while stealing a ride on the back foot-board of a switch-engine out of view of the engineer, it appeared that he was of ordinary intelligence, familiar with the working of a switch-engine, and that he had been warned repeatedly by his father and servants of the company and others that he would get hurt if he went about the cars. He himself testified that he knew he might get hurt. Held insufficient evidence to support a finding that he did not know it was dangerous for him to ride upon the engine.

2. The fact that the company's servants failed to discover the boy was no evidence of negligence, especially when the company had issued a bulletin to allow no boys on the track, and its servants drove them away whenever they saw them there.

Appeal from district court, Walla Walla county.

W. W. Cotton and C. B. Upton, for appellant. Brents & Clarke, for respondents.

DUNBAR, J. The undisputed facts in this case are that Zene Egley, on the 8d day of May, 1889, was run over by the switch-engine of the defendant, in the city of Walla Walla, and as the result thereof his right leg was so crushed that afterwards it was amputated about four inches below the knee-joint. This action is brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant for the injury to the said Zene Egley, the child of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, as will be seen by reference to the pleadings, alleged that this injury was caused by the defendant in wrongfully inviting, inducing, and permitting said child to be and to go upon the said engine, and thereafter carelessly running and operating the same while the child was thereon, exposed to great danger. The defendant in its answer denied these allegations, and set up the defense of contributory negligence. Other matters in relation to the ownership of the road were contested at the trial below, but were abandoned by the appellant here.

The fourth special finding of the jury was entirely unwarranted and unsupported by the testimony. In answer to the question, "Did the said Zene Egley know that it was dangerous for him to ride upon the engine and freight-cars of the railway mentioned in the complaint, in the manner in which it has been shown by the evidence he was doing at the time he was injured?" Jury answer, "No." There is no evidence tending to prove this finding. The whole testimony shows that Zene Egley was a boy of ordinary understanding, capable of comprehending and acting upon what was told him. It appears from the testimony of all parties (including the testimony of the boy himself) that he had been warned time and time again, not only by his parents, but by the servants of the company and his associates, not to attempt to ride on the cars. His own father testified as follows: "Well, I often told him not to ride upon the cars; not to go near them. I cautioned him in this respect." It is not too much to say that the jury ought to have understood from the expression, "I cautioned him in this respect," that the witness meant to say or did say, in effect, "I warned him of the danger of riding on the cars." The boy himself testified that he was afraid he would get run over by the cars. On redirect examination, commencing on page 82 of the transcript, the following testimony was given: "Question by Mr. Brents. Zene, you stated yesterday that you knew it was dangerous to be on that back end of the tender. When did you first know that it was dangerous,—when did you first find out that it was dangerous? Answer. Before I got hurt,—before. Q. Did you know it was dangerous before you got hurt? A. Yes." This was direct and positive testimony by the boy in answer to direct questions by his own attorney, and was not in any way affected by the leading and misleading examination, which immediately followed, which was as follows: "Question. Did you know it after you got hurt? Answer. Yes, sir. Q. You knew it by getting hurt? A. Yes, sir. Q. Was that the first thing that caused you to know that it was dangerous? A. Yes, sir." Cross-examination which followed was as follows: "Question. Zene, didn't your father and mother tell you not to go upon the engine? Answer. Yes, sir. Q. Did they tell you why? A. Yes, sir. Q. When did they tell you not to get upon the engine? A. Before I got hurt. Q. Why did they tell you not to get upon the engine? A. Said I would get hurt. Q. Zene, have you ever been driven away from the cars at various times? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did the trainmen ever say anything to you? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did they say to you? A. Told me to get away. Q. Did they say they would do anything to you if you got on board? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did they say? A. Said they would punish me. Q. You knew it was dangerous to get on there, didn't you, before the accident? A. No, sir. Q. Hadn't you been told it was dangerous? A. No, sir. Q. Didn't your mother tell you it would hurt you? A. Yes, sir. Q. Didn't your father tell you it would hurt you? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well, didn't you know it would hurt you? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you knew this before the accident? A. Yes, sir." Thus it will be seen that, while the boy testified that he did not know it was dangerous, it is evident that he did not definitely understand the meaning of the word "dangerous," for he testified in the next breath that his father and mother told him it would hurt him, and that he knew it would hurt him. It is too evident for discussion that the testimony of the boy, outside of any other testimony, shows conclusively that he did know it was dangerous for him to ride upon the cars in the manner in which he was riding when he was hurt, and that there was no conflict of testimony on that subject worthy of the consideration of the jury; and, while it is true that a case will not be taken from the jury when there is conflict of testimony, and that a court will not be justified in disturbing a verdict because its judgment may run counter to the judgment of the jury, or because the weight of testimony is, in the opinion of the court, opposed to the verdict, it is equally true that, where there is no conflict of testimony on material points, and there is no testimony tending to establish a fact the establishment of which is necessary to warrant the verdict, the court will not hesitate to interfere in the interests of justice, and reverse the judgment.

In this case it is shown by the testimony that Zene Egley was 9½ years old. It is shown by the testimony, and not disputed, that he was a boy of ordinary intelligence and practical experience, and that he was familiar with the workings of railroads, and especially with the workings of the switch-engine by which he was injured, and that he had discretion enough to know that the amusement on which he was insisting was amusement fraught with danger, and that he was a trespasser on the railroad when he was stealing the rides. He may not have known the technical meaning of the word "trespass," but all the testimony, including his own, shows that he knew he had no right on the car; that not only had he been cautioned and forbidden by his parents to go upon the cars, but had been frequently driven away by the yard-master and other employees; and that they had threatened to punish him if he did not keep away, and shows that he knew he was a wrongdoer. See the following testimony: "Question. Do you know the yard-master by sight? Answer. Yes, sir. Q. Had he ever driven you off the cars? A. Yes, sir. Q. How many times? A. I don't know. Q. How many do you think? A. About three times. Q. About how many? A. Three; not more than three, though may be more. Q. Well, how many more? A. I can't tell just how many times. Q. Well, how many do you think? A. About five or six. Q. When you were on a car, and you saw him coming, what did you do? A. Got down and run. Q. And you always did that, did you? A. Yes, sir. Q. What would you do if he happened to get near you? A. I don't know. Q. Did he ever tell you to stay off the cars? A. Yes, sir. Q. Didn't he always tell you to stay off the cars when he got close enough to speak to you? A. Yes, sir. Q. And every time he saw you he said that? A. Yes, sir." Add this to the testimony of the father that he had cautioned the boy not to go on the cars, and that at one time he prevented him from doing so; and that of the yard-master, Mr. Gould, that he had at one time stopped the train and put him off; and, to use his own language, "in two or three cases I gave him to understand I would give him a thrashing when I got close to him, and he would get off a distance, and begin to swear and abuse me, and call me names, some of them, and after that they kept clear of me, and watched me pretty close;" and it plainly appears, without any doubt whatever, that the boy was of a mind sufficiently discriminating to know that he was trespassing, and to be responsible for contributory negligence. Of course, I recognize the fact that a different gauge or measure must be used in ascertaining or determining the degree of guilty negligence to be imputed to a child from that used in determining the degree of negligence to be imputed to an adult of ordinary intelligence. This is a distinction founded in justice, and the reasoning which sustains it cannot be gainsaid. Neither do I question the proposition stated by counsel for the plaintiff that since the law does not, in any case, exact an unreasonable or impossible thing from any one, the duty thus devolved upon each depends upon his powers of comprehension and performance; and the duty of a child, therefore, is proportionate to its mental and physical capacity. But, strictly applying the principles of that proposition to the facts of this case, as shown by undisputed testimony, the conclusion above is reached. The law, as laid down by Shearman and Redfield on the Law of Negligence, (volume 1, § 78,) is as follows: "It is now settled by the overwhelming weight of authority that a child is held, so far as he is personally concerned, only to the exercise of such degree of care and discretion as is reasonably to be expected of a child of his age. No injustice is done by this limitation of the defense of contributory negligence, since the rule itself is not established primarily for his benefit, and he can only be made liable if he has not been himself at fault. Thus, where one is driving a horse with ordinary care, at a rate of speed suited to the locality, he is, of course, not liable for an injury by the horse to a child who suddenly throws itself in the way, and is run over before the driver can prevent it. So if the child, proceeding in reckless haste, however natural to its age, should rush against a railroad car while in motion, the driver of the car or engineer of the train not seeing him, it is obvious that his act is the sole cause of his injury, and, even though he may be entirely free from blame, the most that can be said in his favor is that the case is one of inevitable accident, and the owner of the car is no more responsible for his injury than would have been the owner of a wall against which the child struck himself."

The contributory negligence in this case being proven by undisputed testimony, the next question is, was there any negligence on the part of the railroad company which was the approximate cause of the injury? or, to state it negatively, could the injury have been prevented by any degree of care which the law imposed upon the railroad company? The testimony, in my judgment, shows no negligence at all on the part of the company. Whenever they saw boys about the cars, they immediately drove them off, and threatened to punish them. It appears from the testimony that the company had issued a bulletin not to allow boys on the track, and that its servants did all they could reasonably be called upon to do to carry out the instructions of the company in this respect; and it was well understood by the boys in that neighborhood generally, and by Zene especially, that they had no right to go into or about the cars. He slipped onto the engine with a view of hiding himself from the engineer, and located himself on the foot-board at the back end of the engine, where the engineer could not see him while attending to his duties. It is not claimed that any employee of the company saw him there or had any knowledge of his whereabouts. "Negligence," says Shearman and Redfield, "includes two questions: (1) Whether a particular act has been performed or omitted; and (2) whether the performance or omission of this act was a breach of a legal duty. The first of these is a pure question of fact; the second, is a pure question of law." As was said by the supreme court of Connecticut in the case of Nolan v. Railroad Co., (Conn.) 4 Atl. Rep. 106, "Negligence" may be defined to be a failure to perform some act required by law, or the doing of the act in an improper manner. The law determines the duty; the evidence shows whether the duty was performed. The duty resting upon the defendant was a question of law; was the duty performed? was a question of fact." These authorities, I think, fairly present the law, and the relative duties of the court and the jury, on this perplexing question. The theory of the plaintiff in this case is that the company was negligent in not ascertaining that the boy was on the engine at the time of the accident, and this seems to be all the negligence attributed to it; and it is evident, from the special findings and the verdict, that this view was taken by the jury, and it becomes the duty of this court to announce that the omission of the act complained of does not constitute legal negligence. As wide a range as the decisions of courts have taken on this interesting subject, no court, to my knowledge, has gone so far as to hold that railroad companies are the absolute insurers of the life and limbs of boys who, against their express commands, insist upon trespassing upon their property; and to sustain this case would, in my opinion, go that far. The only way the company could prevent this would be to keep a sufficient number of guards to detect boys in their attempt to board the cars or engines. If the presence of the boy on the engine or cars had been brought to the knowledge of the operators of the engine, it is plain that their duty would have been to have protected him from harm, no matter how great his negligence might have been. The testimony shows that they did not see the boy on the engine, and did not know that he was there; for, by reason of his location on the foot-board of the engine, the engineer, in the performance of his ordinary duties, could not have seen him. The verdict is wholly unsustained by the evidence, and, strictly, the defendant would probably be entitled to judgment on the third and fifth special findings; but, as the jury was evidently influenced both as to their general verdict and special findings by the instructions of the court, which, in its general scope, and especially in the seventeenth instruction, went to the extent that the defendant should have exercised care in ascertaining whether or not Zene Egley was on said engine immediately preceding said injury, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded to the lower court, with instructions to retry the case, and to modify the instructions in accordance with this opinion.

FREIDRICH V. TERRITORY.

(Supreme Court of Washington. May 14, 1891.)

MURDER—CHARGE UPON THE WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Code Wash. § 221, provides that, in a statement of all matters of law for the information of the jury, only such allusion to the evidence shall be made as is necessary. Upon a murder trial, the evidence for the prosecution was entirely circumstantial. On the part of defendant, it rested upon denial, evidence as to good character, and absence of motive. The court charged: "Now, gentlemen, look at these facts dispassionately, without prejudice, and without thinking, so far as that goes, who this defendant is, or who the man that was killed was;" and, after stating the evidence as to the probable killing of deceased by defendant, by suicide, or by a stranger, said: "From these circumstances, we arrive at the conclusion that the man was shot by some one other than himself;" "the question now is, who did it?" and, following a review of the testimony concerning the movements of defendant from the evening of the killing, inquires, "Do they lie about it?" "Then this story that he tells you about where he went, if it is true, notwithstanding it may seem a little improbable, he was not out here," where certain witnesses "say they saw him." Held, that this was an invasion of the jury's province.

Appeal from district court, King county.

James Hamilton Lewis, for appellant.
John F. Miller, Pros. Atty., and Ronald & Piles, for the State.

STILES, J. The indictment was sufficient to charge the defendant with the crime of murder in the first degree. Leonard v. Territory, 2 Wash. T. 381, 7 Pac. Rep. 872; Timmerman v. Territory, 3 Wash. T. 445, 17 Pac. Rep. 624. The appellant and the deceased had been close friends, and spent the day of July 14th, 1887, in Seattle and its suburbs. They had carried beer out with them, and drank freely of it. About sunset they walked out on the Grant-Street Bridge, and stopped for a short while at a saloon on the bridge. There they had a glass or two of beer, two other persons being present and drinking with them. They were not intoxicated, and the persons at the saloon heard no quarrel or misunderstanding between them. At about dark they left the saloon together to return to town, and within a few minutes persons in the neighborhood heard two shots on the bridge, and heard a cry of distress. Several of those who heard the shots ran in the direction from which the unusual sounds seemed to come, and found the deceased leaning over the bridge-rail, with a bullet imbedded in his head just back of the left ear. He was conscious, and able to walk with assistance. Being asked who had shot him, he answered that he did not know, and in this statement he persisted, until the appellant was brought before him, when he avowed that appellant had shot him, but gave no particulars. He gave, as a reason why he had at first said he did not know who his assailant was, that he did not then think he was very badly hurt, and did not wish to give away his friend. He died within a few days after he was shot, without making any other admissible statement. Appellant was arrested, indicted, convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to death. Aside from proof of what the deceased said in the presence of the appellant, as above stated, all the evidence at the trial was circumstantial; it being devoted to showing the attempted flight of the appellant immediately after the shooting, and his confused and contradictory statements after his arrest, with the fact that, in the presence of deceased, he made no positive denial of Scherbring's charge that he had fired the fatal shot. No effort was made to show a motive for the murder. In answer to the territory's case, appellant took the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and denied having shot deceased, or that he knew who had shot him. He told how they had spent the day together, and claimed that immediately upon their leaving the saloon on the bridge he had left deceased, who was disposed to loiter along, and hastened ahead to attend the meeting of a German singing society of which he was a member. He did not attend the meeting, for the reason, as he claimed, that, as he approached the building, he heard the members singing, and, finding that he was late, turned away, and went elsewhere. These were the only points touched upon by him in his testimony with the exception that, whereas witnesses for the territory had stated that he was taken into Scherbring's presence twice on July 16th he claimed to have been there but once. He did not dispute what was alleged to have been said there, nor did he in any other particular contradict the testimony of the prosecution. It will thus be seen that his testimony was of no great materiality to his defense, and there was no call for any extended cross-examination; since, in such cases, the cross-examination ought to be confined strictly to the matters touched upon by the defendant, excepting in so far as his history may be inquired into for the purpose of testing his credibility in the matters testified to by him. But here the cross-examination was extended to a very great length, with almost no reference to the examination in chief; but the defendant was taken over all the ground covered by the territory's witnesses, apparently for no other purpose than to place him in seeming hostility to them in order to discredit him by the contrast, and to have some foundation for the subsequent attack made upon his past history. A great part of the evidence for the prosecution was directed to showing the whereabouts and actions of the defendant from the time of the shooting until his arrest, at noon on July 15th. He was arrested at Slaughter, a number of miles south of Seattle, while walking along the railroad track, and had not been seen by any person who knew him since he and deceased left the saloon on the evening of the 14th, excepting that certain witnesses testified that they saw him on the opposite side of Seattle on the evening of the 15th. He was a shoemaker, but had not been seen at his shop from the day of the 14th. At the time of his arrest, and afterwards, the persons who arrested him endeavored to draw from him damaging statements and admissions. All these things had been testified to by the territory's witnesses; and to them the cross-examiner called his attention, and pressed him for admissions of their truth, or of the untruth of what he answered in denial or explanation of them. This was not cross-examination, but it was allowed to run itself out when the subject was exhausted, without any objection by defendant; and it is only alluded to here to show how there came to be any foundation for almost the only legitimate part of the cross-examination, viz., that wherein his past life was inquired into.

The prosecutor asked the defendant a series of questions which were intended to draw from him an admission that he was not Albert Freidrich, but one "Leubens" Freidrich, who was assumed to have been a German soldier, to have been fined in Hamburg in 1880 for a breach of the peace, and to have deserted his wife and child. Error is assigned upon the overruling of objections to these questions, and thereupon a curious state of things is presented. Against the defendant, Freidrich, the prosecution was entitled to none of the matters sought to be brought out; but, as against the witness Freidrich, it was entitled to them, to the extent that they might affect his credibility on his direct examination, but not on his cross-examination as to matters about which he had not testified in chief; for, by thus cross-examining him, the territory made him its own witness, and was bound by what he said. People v. Irving, 95 N. Y. 542. The defendant had returned negative answers to almost all questions thus asked. The prosecutor had presented to him a letter from Leubens Freidrich which he denied having written, a photograph which he admitted to be one of himself, a German army list which he declared did not describe him when a soldier, and some other papers which he said had no reference to him. After the defendant retired from the stand the prosecutor said: "I now offer in evidence, if the court please, the depositions of the various army officers and magistrates connected with the court, which says he belonged to a company, and the fact that this is a photograph of the Leubens spoken of in these depositions. They are in German; I will have them translated." Upon objection, the court said, "They are not admissible;" and there the matter dropped. It is now urged that this whole course of inquiry into the history of the defendant was a plan of the prosecution, to throw a cloud of suspicion over him by mere insinuation, without legal evidence tending to support it; the offer of the "depositions" being but the crowning effect in that direction. It was not fair treatment of the defendant, certainly. The outcome showed that there was no reason to expect success in the effort to identify the defendant with Leubens Freidrich. The prosecutor must have known that the "depositions" could not be received as evidence under any circumstances, and it was not proper to state in the hearing of the jury what they would show. Still, if there were nothing more objectionable in the case, we are not prepared to say that this conduct of the territory's representative ought to reverse the judgment, although it comes dangerously near it. The duty of a prosecutor is to present to the jury the facts as they can be made to appear by legitimate testimony, and when that is done his duty is ended. An offer of proof may often be made under circumstances where it is necessary to explain its connection or effect in order to show its admissibility; but such an offer pre-supposes some legitimate means at hand of making the proof, not an ex parte statement of some German military tribunal which could have no more force than waste paper. That the matter passed, in this instance, without further challenge in the court below, alone redeems it from its legitimate effect.

But this judgment must be reversed upon the court's charge to the jury. As before said, the evidence on the part of the prosecution was entirely circumstantial; but it was clearly stated, uninvolved, and straight to the point. On the other hand, the defendant rested entirely upon his own denial, the testimony of witnesses as to his good character, and the absence of proof of motive. The charge, in such a case, ought to have been confined closely to the law applicable, with only such allusion to the testimony as was necessary to make clear the law of the case. Judges of the territorial district courts, when trying criminal cases under the territorial laws, did not have the latitude accorded to judges of the United States district courts in the matter of charging the jury. Section 221, Code, subd. 6, contemplated a statement of all matters of law necessary for the information of the jury in finding a verdict, and only such "allusion" to the evidence as was necessary. The discretion of the trial court was final in determining where and what allusion was necessary; but the power to allude was for the purpose of making clear the bearing of the law, and for nothing more. Therefore where, as in this case, a long and wholly oral charge was largely devoted to an argument of the very facts of the case, although carried on under the guise of an illustration of the meaning of circumstantial evidence, in which every material constituent of the territory's case but one was taken up, the facts dovetailed together, and a conclusion deduced and announced to the jury; and where, in reference to the one point reserved, the court's opinion was distinctly made to appear, though not stated, it is too clear for argument that, however often the jury were told that the facts were for their decision alone, the bounds of a legal charge were overstepped, greatly to the prejudice of the defendant.

As it is not possible, under our constitutional provisions, that any superior court will take the course here adopted, we shall not burden the decision with any extended extracts from the charge. The following will suffice to show the style of language used. The review commenced thus: "Now, gentlemen, let us look at these facts dispassionately, without prejudice, and without thinking, so far as that goes, who this defendant is, or who the man that was killed was." Then follows a narration of the actions of the defendant and the deceased up to their leaving the saloon together, and of the hearing of the shots, and the voice of Scherbring. Then, there was a discussion as to the probability that the man shot himself, or was shot by some other person, with a conclusion in favor of the latter theory, thus: "From these circumstances, we arrive at the conclusion that the man was shot by some one other than himself." Again: "The question now is, who did it. That is the question that is left. If what I have said to you satisfies you that Scherbring was shot by somebody other than himself, and that he died from the wound, then the territory have proved that much of their case so that we are satisfied with it. Now, with the same impartiality, discretion, and deliberation, weighing all the circumstances, we approach the other question. Did the defendant shoot him? That is the only question left." Here occurs a review of the testimony of defendant or the cross-examination concerning his movements from the evening of the 14th, on; and of that of the prosecution's witnesses on the same point. Speaking of the latter, there are such expressions as these: "Do they lie about it? Did they mean to lie about it?" Concerning defendant: "This story that he tells you about where he went to, if it is true, notwithstanding some of it may seem a little improbable, * * * that is his story; of course, if it is true, he was not out here where Longstaff, Noonan, and Stewart say they saw him." The concluding remark was: "It is for you to say, gentlemen, whether he shot Scherbring or not;" but after so "impartial" a discussion, if any juror of the 12 had been weak enough to be influenced by what the court's opinion of the undecided fact was, his verdict could not be long doubtful.

There is a technical objection made to our consideration of the charge, under this aspect, by the counsel for the territory, because the exceptions taken immediately after its delivery, 22 in number, were all very brief, and each merely called the attention of the court to a phrase or two which was formally objected to. There was no exception to the whole or a part of the charge, on the ground that it was an argument upon the facts to the prejudice of the defendant. It is true that generally we expect to be called upon to pass upon those portions of a charge which are alleged to misstate the law, only when the error was called to the attention of the court below, and the objection raised by exception. But the error in this case was not one of statement concerning the law of it, which might have been corrected upon a recall of the jury. This was an error of conduct on the part of one branch of the court by assuming the functions of the other branch,—an error which was irreparable with the jury then in the box, because the argument and conclusions rehearsed in their presence were incapable of recall; they had made their impression the instant they were uttered, and no correction from the same source would have had any effect except to confuse jurymen. This matter was fully argued in print, so that there was no surprise in this court; and, from the language of several of the exceptions actually taken, we think it probable that the same question was presented to the court below on motion for a new trial. In a capital case, if there was prejudicial error which is patent upon the face of the record, the appellate court should not allow technical objections to deprive the defendant of a new trial. Here the error was prejudicial to the extent of denying the accused that fair and impartial trial which was his right, no matter what may have been the degree or heinousness of his offense; and the error is too patent to be mistaken. There were some specific errors which it is not necessary to notice, as they are not likely to occur upon a retrial. This holding decides the case, but we cannot refrain from going beyond the suggested errors of commission in this charge to notice one of singular omission. The opening words of the charge were: "The defendant here is charged by the grand jury of this county with having committed the crime of murder by shooting a man by the name of Scherbring on the 14th day of last July," and there all allusion to the crime charged or the elements constituting the crime ended. The indictment alleged murder in the first degree, but no explanation was given of the facts necessary to be shown to warrant a conviction, either by reading the statute or by equivalent oral statement. Nor were the jury informed that under sections 786, 790, and 1097 of the Code, if they found that the prisoner did shoot the deceased, unless they also found deliberation and premeditation, they could return a verdict of murder in the second degree only. On the contrary, having said to them that the only question left was, "Did the defendant shoot him?" the court furnished them with two forms of verdicts, the first of which was: "We, the jurors in this action, find the defendant not guilty;" and the other was: "We, the jury in this action, find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment." The court was not called upon in this case, under the evidence, to instruct in regard to manslaughter, at least without a request therefor; but to omit to define the degrees of murder, and give the jury the liberty of saying under which head the facts proved a crime, was so great an oversight that it is to be accounted for only upon the theory that the discussion of the facts to so much length overshadowed the fundamental law of the case, and caused it to be forgotten. The judgment is reversed, and a new trial granted.

HYDE v. UNION PAC. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Utah. June 5, 1891.)

RAILROAD COMPANIES — INJURIES TO CHILD ON TRACK — DAMAGES — MENTAL ANGUISH — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

1. In an action against a railroad company for killing plaintiff's child, evidence was introduced, over defendant's objection, as to the grief of the father; and the court charged on the subject of damages that the jury were to consider the comfort the parents might take with the child in bringing it up. Held, that such rulings were not objectionable, as authorizing damages for the father's mental anguish; the instruction being but slightly different, if any, from directing the jury to take into account the loss of the child's society, and the evidence a natural inference, which the jury would draw for themselves; and which, although erroneously admitted, was presumably harmless, since there was no contention of excessive damages.

2. In an action against a railroad company for killing a child four or five years old, the evidence showed that the child wandered away from home, and went to sleep on the track, near a public crossing and school-house, where children were frequently passing, and that the engineer saw an object there when between 200 and 300 yards away, but could not tell what it was until within 30 feet, when it was too late to stop. Held, that the failure to slow down so as to be able to stop, if it became necessary, was negligence; and that the child was not such a trespasser as to prevent recovery, even though plaintiff himself was negligent in permitting it to wander there unattended.

P. L. Williams, for appellant. J. L. Rawlins, for respondent.

ANDERSON, J. This is an action by the plaintiff to recover damages for the death of his infant son, aged between four and five years, whose death is alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The plaintiff lived at Honeyville, a small village on the line of the defendant's road, and was in the employ of the defendant as a section hand at the time of the accident; his house being situated about a quarter of a mile from the railroad track. On the day of the accident the plaintiff was at work on the line of the defendant's road several miles from his home. The mother of the child was away from home, and the evidence fails to disclose when she went away, or whether the child was left in the care of any one. There were five children in all in the family, but their ages are not shown by the evidence. The child wandered away from home, and went to sleep between the rails of the track of the defendant's road, at a point in the village of Honeyville near where a public highway crosses the railroad track, upon which there is considerable travel, and was run over by a train of cars and killed. There was a store close by, and a school-house not far off, and children were frequently on and along the track at this point. The accident occurred about noon, on a clear day in the month of July. The train was a work train, composed of a locomotive, tender, and 10 cars, and was running with the tender in front of the engine. Both the engineer and fireman testified they saw the child when it was from 200 to 300 yards away, but thought it was a piece of cloth or paper, and could not tell what it was until they got within about 30 feet of where it lay, when they discovered it was a child by seeing its hair, but that it was then too late to stop the train before reaching it. They further testified that they did not slacken the speed of the train when they saw the object on the track until they ascertained it was a child, when they immediately did all they could to stop the train as soon as possible, but that the train could not be stopped in a less distance than about 125 feet. At the trial a witness was asked the following question: "I will ask you if you observed child had upon his father when you saw him there." The witness was permitted to answer this question over the objection of the defendant, his answer being as follows: "I noticed he was very much grieved, from his moaning and speaking of his child." Permitting this question to be asked and answered, together with the instructions of the court on the measure of damages, is claimed to be contrary to the rule laid down by this court in Webb v. Railway Co., 24 Pac. Rep. 616, and the case of Munro v. Dredging, etc., Co., 84 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. Rep. 303.

The instructions of the court on the subject of the measure of damages were as follows: "Now, if you pass both of these questions in favor of the plaintiff, then you would come to the question of damages,—the amount that should be assessed in favor of the plaintiff for the damages that he has sustained; and, in determining that question, you are to take into consideration all the circumstances of the case, the age of the child, the kind of child that it was, and take into consideration the assistance that it might be to the parents in future years; and you may also take into account the loss of society, and the comfort that the parents might take with this child in rearing it and bringing it up, and the reliance that they could place upon it in the future years for their support and maintenance, and you can take into account all these things in determining what they should receive as compensation for the loss they have sustained. It should not be determined in a mere sentimental way. It should be determined in as nearly a business way as it is possible for jurors to determine such questions, and determine it judicially and reasonably, and not in a vindictive way, but determine it fairly and reasonably, having in view compensation to the parents for the loss they have sustained; and, when you have determined that, that would be the amount of your verdict." The part of the instructions which is objected to is that which says to the jury that they might consider "the comfort that the parents might take with this child in rearing it and bringing it up." It is contended in argument that the testimony objected to, together with the instructions, authorized the jury to give damages for the mental anguish of the father for the death of his child. We think the court erred in permitting the witness to testify that the father appeared grieved by the death of his son, but we do not think the defendant could have been prejudiced by it; for it was a natural if not necessary inference, which the jury would have drawn from the fact of the death of his child without such evidence, that the father should feel grieved. It was held by this court in Webb v. Railway Co., supra, that the mental anguish or suffering of the surviving relatives of the deceased was not an element of damage for which a recovery could be had, and we do not think the instructions given in the present case can fairly be construed to lay down a different rule. To say to the jury that they might consider "the comfort that the par-it and bringing it up" is but slightly, if any, different from saying to them that they might take into account the loss to the parents of the society of the child; and, as the amount of the verdict ($2,000) is not claimed to be excessive, we think the defendant suffered no prejudice because of the rulings of the court.

It is contended that the plaintiff was guilty of such contributory negligence in permitting a child of such tender years to get upon the track of the railroad untended by some older person that he ought not to be permitted to recover. The questions of the negligence of the parents and of the railroad company were submitted to the jury under proper instructions by the court, to which no objection is taken, and we see no reason for disturbing their verdict on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence. But, even if the parents were guilty of contributory negligence, we think, under the circumstances of this case, such negligence should not defeat a recovery. Although an injured party may be guilty of negligence contributing to the injury complained of, yet he is entitled to recover against a defendant who, after discovering the plaintiff's negligence, fails to use due diligence to prevent accident, but who goes ahead wantonly or recklessly and commits the injury. It is now the well-settled law that "the party who last has a clear opportunity of avoiding the accident, notwithstanding the negligence of his opponent, is considered solely responsible." 1 Shear. & R. Neg. § 99, and cases cited. See, also, Beach, Contrib. Neg. p. 58, § 18; 1 Redf. R. R. (6th Ed.) p. 225. The case of Keyser v. Railway Co., 56 Mich. 559, 23 N. W. Rep. 311, was very similar in its material facts to the case at bar. In that case a child two years and six months old strayed upon the defendant's track, and was lying down between the rails when it was struck by the engine, and seriously injured. The country where the accident occurred was low and wet, and grown up to brush and berry bushes, and but sparsely settled, and a locality where to find a child upon the track would be least expected. The train was running at the rate of 30 or 35 miles per hour, and could not be stopped in a less distance than from 400 to 500 feet. The child was seen by the engineer and fireman when the engine was about 3,000 to 2,500 feet from him, but they thought it was a pig or a stick of wood until the engine was within about 1,200 feet of him. The court held that it was negligence as a matter of law for the engineer not to "slow down the speed of his engine to such a rate that, in approaching it, he could have stopped his train, if necessary, to prevent injury before reaching the object of danger." See same case in 66 Mich. 391, 33 N. W. Rep. 867. We think in this case that, when the servants of the defendant saw an object on the track, in a place frequented by children and others, and failed to slacken the speed of the engine so as to be able to stop the train before striking the child, it was negligence, and that plaintiff's child was not such a trespasser as to prevent a recovery against the defendant for the reckless or negligent acts of the defendant, when the injury could have been avoided by proper care and caution by defendant's engineer. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

WEBB v. DENVER & R. G. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Utah. June 5, 1891.)

INJURIES TO CAR-REPAIRER—FELLOW-SERVANTS—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

1. Plaintiff's decedent, a car-repairer, while engaged in removing a broken brake-beam, and assisting to couple the car with a chain, so that it could be set out for repairs, was killed by the unexpected movement of the engine. The court charged, in an action against the railroad, that fellow-servants were such as directly co-operate with one another in the same department of service, or such that their usual duties bring them into habitual association; and that plaintiff was entitled to recover, if the engineer was employed in a department separate and distinct from that in which decedent was employed, and if the latter's death was the result, not of his own negligence, but of that of the engineer in moving his engine without warning. Held, that such instructions were proper.

2. A verdict for $4,995 was not so excessive as to justify reversal, where decedent, at the time of his death, was a strong healthy man 28 years old, of good habits, and earning $1.75 per day.

Appeal from district court, third district; C. S. ZANE, Justice.

Bennett, Marshall & Bradley, for appellant. J. L. Rawlins, for respondent.

ANDERSON, J. This action is brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's decedent, Louis T. Webb, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The case was before this court on a former appeal, (Webb v. Railway Co., 24 Pac. Rep. 616,) and was reversed, and another trial was had in the district court, and plaintiff recovered a verdict and judgment in the same amount as at the first trial. A motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and this appeal is from the judgment and from the order overruling the motion. At the trial, by stipulation between counsel, the evidence embodied in the record upon the first appeal was read to the jury. The court gave the same instructions to the jury that were given upon the first trial, except as to the measure of damages, and the same requests, made and refused at the first trial, were made and refused at the second. Plaintiff's decedent was a car-inspector and repairer in the yards of the defendant at Salt Lake City. An east-bound train, at the station, in switching, pulled out the draw-head of a refrigerator-car, and the train separated. The forward part was backed up, and broke the brake-beam of the car ahead; the forward part of the train was moved forward, and the conductor called Rice, the car inspector and repairer in charge of the shop and yards at the station, to remove the broken brake-beam so that the cars could be coupled with a chain, and the broken car set out of the train for repairs. He came with the deceased as an assistant, and they removed the broken brake-beam. The conductor got a chain from the engine, and put it on the refrigerator-car, and then signaled the engineer to back for coupling, and he backed so that the cars came within about 18 inches of each other, and stopped, and Rice and the deceased were standing by. A brakeman went in to make the coupling with the chain, but was unable to do so, and the deceased stepped in the side opposite the brakeman to assist in making the coupling with the chain, and, while both were down on their knees, the forward cars were permitted to come back, and crushed the head of deceased, killing him instantly. It is insisted by counsel for the defendant that the engineer and the deceased were fellow-servants, and that, therefore, it is not liable for the negligence of the engineer in negligently moving the engine back ward, whereby deceased was killed. The instructions given the jury by the court on this point, and which are claimed to be erroneous, are as follows, to-wit: (1) "The court charges you that if you find from the evidence that the death of Louis T. Webb was caused without fault or negligence on his part, while he was between the cars assisting the brakeman to couple the same, on account of the negligence of those in charge of said train in moving or backing said train, without notice or warning to said deceased, you will find in favor of the plaintiff; unless you also find that such backing of the train was due solely to the negligence of the fellow-servant of said deceased engaged in the same department of service." (4) "The court further charges you that servants of the same master, to be co-employees or fellow-servants, so as to exempt the master on account of injuries sustained by or resulting from the negligence of the other, must be such as are directly co-operating with each other in a particular line of employment, or such that their usual duties shall bring them into habitual association, so that in the use of reasonable diligence they may exercise a mutual influence upon each other promotive of proper precaution." (5) "If the jury find that the death of Louis T. Webb was caused, without fault or negligence on his part, by the negligence of the engine-driver or other person in charge of said freight train, and that such engineer or other person was at the time engaged in a separate and distinct department of service from that in which said deceased was engaged, then you will find a verdict for the plaintiff." We think the instructions state the law correctly, and are in conformity with the rule laid down by this court in Daniels v. Railway Co., 23 Pac. Rep. 762. See, also, Railway Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184; Railway Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590. In the last case cited, Justice FIELD says, (page 653, 116 U. S., and page 596, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep.): "The words, 'same general business,' have reference to the general business of the department of service in which the employee is engaged, and do not embrace business of every kind which may have some relation to the affairs of the employer, or even be necessary for their successful management. If any other construction were adopted, there would be no such thing as a separate department of service in the business of railroad companies; for whatever would tend to aid in the transportation of persons and property would come under the designation of its general business." We have examined all the instructions given and refused in connection with the evidence, and find no error. It is contended that the damages are excessive. The deceased was 28 years old when he was killed. He was in robust health, was industrious, and of good habits, and was receiving $1.75 per day from the defendant. We cannot say that, under these circumstances, $4,995 is so excessive as to justify a reversal on that ground. The judgment of the district court is affirmed.

LOWE et al. v. HARDY et al. ASHTON et al. v. SAME. RAYBOULD et al. v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Utah. April 18, 1891.)¹

LEGISLATIVE POWERS—CONSOLIDATION OF SCHOOL DISTRICTS—TAXATION—LEVY.

1. By Act Leg. Assem. Utah 1890, §§ 100-116, the separate school-districts in Salt Lake City were abolished and consolidated into one, and their separate property became the property of the whole district. The value of the property in the districts was unequal, and in some no taxes were collected or levied at the date of consolidation. An injunction was sought by taxpayers in an old district to restrain the collection of taxes in the new because not uniform. Held, that the legislature had power to abolish and consolidate the districts, and to apportion their property, and the manner of the apportionment was a legislative question, which the court cannot review.

2. The school trustees, having estimated the amount needed for school purposes, reported it to the tax-payers; who thereupon voted a levy of 1 per cent., which, upon the valuation for that year, would raise the sum required. The county officials, however, extended the tax upon the roll of the following year, thus raising thrice the sum required, which would necessarily be used for school purposes outside of the old district, which had been abolished, and its property merged in a new one. Held that, in construing Comp. Laws Utah 1888, § 1918, providing for the computation of taxes by county officials upon the assessment roll, the court would give effect to the intention of the tax-payers, and, to prevent injustice, would require the tax to be collected upon the roll of the year in which it was voted.

ZANE, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from district court, third district; T. J. ANDERSON, Justice.

Stephens & Schroeder, for appellants. Walter Murphy and P. L. Williams, for respondents.

BLACKBURN, J. Up to March 13, 1890, Salt Lake City was divided into 21 school-districts, each district having its own officers and the power to levy taxes for school purposes. The plaintiffs are tax-payers of district No. 11, as it existed up to and prior to March 13, 1890; and the trustees of said district were authorized to provide funds for the support of public schools in said district under a statute then in force, as follows: "All school taxes, whether levied by trustees or by a special meeting called for that purpose, shall be computed from the valuations of the county assessment roll, and shall be levied during the month of April, 1886, and during the month of December of each year thereafter; and, within ten days after any such meeting shall have been held, the school trustees shall make a certified statement of the per cent. of the taxes so levied to the county clerk, and to the county assessor. The county assessor shall assess therefor, at the same time and in the same manner that he assesses for territorial and county taxes, and he shall give to district school tax-payers the same notices as are required by law to be given to tax-payers of territorial and county taxes." Section 1918, Comp. Laws 1888. It is also provided in section 1915: "Whenever it shall be necessary to raise funds to purchase, repair, or furnish school-houses, or for other school purposes, an estimate of the approximate cost thereof shall be made by the trustees, and the rate per cent. may be fixed at any sum, not exceeding two per cent. per annum, as shall be decided by a majority vote of the property tax-payers in said district present at a meeting called for that purpose, to be assessed and collected as a special tax upon all the taxable property of the district."

By the authority of these statutes, in December, 1889, the trustees of said district, at a meeting called for the purpose, estimated the needs of the district for school purposes for the coming year to be the sum of $5,500, which was received by the tax-payers at the meeting; and they estimated that 1 per cent. upon the assessment value of the property of the district for 1889 would raise the amount necessary, and voted the levy of a tax of 1 per cent., and the trustees duly certified the same to the county clerk and the county assessor. The assessor and collector extended the tax upon the assessment roll of 1890, instead of upon that of 1889; and upon that roll the tax voted would amount to over $16,000,—vastly in excess of the amount needed; and the collector is now proceeding to collect the same. The legislature of Utah territory, at its session in 1890, passed an act abolishing the 21 school-districts in Salt Lake City, and consolidated them all in one district, and provided that the property of the several districts should belong to the consolidated district. It also appears that the property of the districts is vastly unequal, and that some of them have taxes uncollected in large amounts, and many of them have no taxes levied, and almost no property of any kind. These facts are alleged in plaintiffs' complaint, and they ask that the collection of this tax in district No. 11 be enjoined, and for general relief. To the complaint the defendants interposed a demurrer, which was sustained, and the appellants appeal, and allege—

1. That this tax is void because it operates so unequally in the different parts of the city, as the law is that all taxes must be uniform.

It is conceded that the legislature has authority to abolish these districts, and consolidate them into one, and apportion the property. How that apportionment should be made is a legislative question, and not for the courts; and, the legislature having acted upon that question, it is presumed that it did all that was necessary, and the court cannot interfere. Hence this contention is untenable. Cooley, Tax'n, p. 179, and following, and notes.

2. It is claimed by appellants that this tax was not fully levied, so as to cover property of the district, before it was abolished. The district went out of existence the last day of June, 1896, and the assessment roll of that year was completed at that time, so that, even if the tax was computed upon the assessment roll of that year, it was complete, and became a debt due district No. 11.

3. Appellants also contended that this tax was voted and levied upon the assessment roll of the year 1889, and not upon that of the year 1890. We think this contention is tenable, and should be sustained. Under the statute, the trustees of the district made an estimate of the funds needed for school purposes, and reported to a meeting called for that purpose that $5,500 was needed, and upon the assessment roll of 1889 the tax-payers computed that a 1 per cent. levy would raise that amount, and voted that levy. They wanted $5,500, and they intended to levy that amount, and they voted a levy of 1 per cent., because, computed on the assessment roll of 1889, that would raise the amount needed. They had not in mind the assessment roll of 1890. If that intention can be carried out by a reasonable construction of the statute authorizing the levy, without doing violence to its wording, we think it ought to be done. The statute provides the levy is to be made in December; that the trustees are to report the amount needed, and the tax-payers are to vote the per cent. necessary to raise that amount. In order to do that, the per cent. to be levied must be ascertained from the assessment roll of that year, not from that of the succeeding year, for it has not been made. It seems logically conclusive that the extension and collection of this tax so levied should be upon the assessment roll of the year in which the tax is levied. But the statutes say "the collector shall collect this tax at the same time and in the same manner," etc., "as the territorial and county taxes are collected." And it is said that this provision makes it conclusive that this tax should be computed upon the assessment roll of the succeeding year. Collecting this tax at the same time can as well be done, computed upon the assessment roll of 1889, as upon that of 1890, and collecting it in the same manner only has reference to the mode of collection, as by distraint, suit, or the sale of property, and does not in any way determine how the amount of the tax is to be computed. Therefore no violence is done to the terms of the statute, if the amount of this tax is computed upon the assessment roll of 1889. We think that was the intention of the legislature, and certainly it was that of the tax-payers. If the amount of the tax is computed upon the assessment roll of 1890, the levy exceeds by $11,000 the amount intended to be voted by the tax-payers, and makes the amount to be collected over $16,000,—a pretty large amount for one school-district to pay. If this district had not been abolished, this excess of collection would have been for its benefit in the future; but now, if collected, it goes for educational purposes outside the district which pays it. This district ought to be protected, and courts ought to find a remedy. The statute is capable of two interpretations,—one that the tax levied should be computed, and the amount ascertained to be collected, on the assessment roll of 1889, and the other on the assessment roll of 1890. One interpretation collects the tax that was voted and intended to be levied; the other raises $11,000 more than was intended, and compels this district to pay over $11,000 more than was intended, and, under the law as it now stands, this amount will go for the support of all the schools of the city, and the tax-payers of that district will pay that much more than their share of the school expenses of the city. Can any one claim that such was the intention of the legislature? Courts, unless compelled by the express wording of statutes, should interpret them so as to do good, and not evil; so as to work out equity and justice, and not wrong and oppression. We conclude therefrom that it is the duty of the collector, in collecting this tax, to compute the amount to be collected upon the assessment roll of 1889. This case is reversed, and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

The same question is involved in the case of Ashton et al. v. Hardy et al. It is therefore reversed and remanded.

The same principles are also in question in the case of Raybould et al. v. Hardy et al. But the complaint does not raise the particular question upon which the foregoing decision turns. It is therefore reversed and remanded, with leave to the plaintiffs to amend their complaint.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LOCATION OF COUNTY SEAT—DIVISION OF COUNTY.

1. The act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to create and organize the counties of Alta and Lincoln, to locate the county-seats of said counties, and to apportion the debt of Logan county," held unconstitutional.

2. An act to divide a county, and attach the part cut off to another county, without submitting the proposition to a vote of the people in the segregated part, is in violation of section 3, art. 18, of the constitution.

MORGAN, J. On the 3d of March, 1891, the legislature passed an act entitled "An act to create and organize the counties of Alta and Lincoln, to locate the county seats of said counties, and to apportion the debt of Logan county." The first section establishes the county of Alta, composed of the territory of Alturas county as it then existed and about half of the contiguous territory of Logan. Section 2 establishes the county of Lincoln from the residue of the territory theretofore belonging to Logan. Section 3 makes Hailey, then the county-seat of Alturas county, the county-seat of Alta county. Section 4 makes Shoshone the county-seat of Lincoln county. Section 5 authorizes the governor to appoint the county officers of the two counties thus established. Section 6 provides that all the county records, books, money, office furniture and fixtures, and all other personal property belonging to Logan county, and all real estate situate in the county of Lincoln, thus organized, before belonging to Logan county, shall become the property of Lincoln county, and that the commissioners of Lincoln county shall within 30 days cause all records, books, funds, and other personal property of said Logan county to be transferred to Shoshone. Section 7 provides that all public buildings, records, books, furniture, money, real estate, and personal property theretofore belonging to Alturas county, shall become the property of Alta county. Section 9 provides that all the indebtedness of Logan county shall be assumed and paid by Lincoln county, and that all the indebtedness of Alturas county shall be assumed and paid by Alta county. Under and by virtue of this act the commissioners of Lincoln county demanded the said books, records, and personal property then in the custody of Wesley B. George, the duly elected and qualified clerk of the district court, and ex officio auditor and recorder of Logan county, which being refused, the county of Lincoln, on the 17th day of April, 1891, filed its petition in this court for a writ of mandate to compel said George to deliver said property to Lincoln county. On the same day the said George filed his demurrer to said petition, and alleges that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The issue thus formed raises the question as to the constitutionality of the act of March 3, 1891.

Considerable of the argument of the cause related to the question as to whether the counties, as recognized by the constitution in section 1, art. 18, as they then existed, could be abolished by act of the legislature. In the view I take of the cause it is not necessary to determine this question. It will also be apparent that it is not necessary to decide the question as to whether defendant, George, being duly elected in pursuance of the provisions of the constitution, is such a constitutional officer that he cannot be deprived of his office by an act of the legislature. The question that must determine this case is, can a portion of the territory of one county be cut off and attached to another without a vote of the people, residing in the segregated portion, consenting thereto, in the manner adopted in this act? The first paragraph of section 3 of article 18 of the constitution is as follows: "No county shall be divided unless a majority of the qualified electors of the territory proposed to be cut off, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such division: provided, that this section shall not apply to the creation of new counties." What is the evident intent of the act under consideration? What was the object to be effected? What is the result accomplished? The object was not, certainly, to change the names of the two counties. If that had been desired it could have been effected by a direct act for that purpose, as the constitution does not forbid it, and the act says nothing about changing the names of the counties of Logan and Alturas. It could not have been desired to abolish the counties of Alturas and Logan. Nothing is said in the act about abolishing the counties, and they do not seem to be abolished. The same territory that before the passage of the act constituted the counties of Alturas and Logan, under this act constitutes the counties of Alta and Lincoln. No new territory is added to them; none is taken away; but the larger half of the county of Logan is cut off, and attached to the county of Alturas, and the names of the two counties changed. There were two counties before; there are but two now. It is evident that the whole intent and object of the act was to cut this body of territory from the county of Logan, and attach it to the county of Alturas. In fact, I understand the counsel did not deny that this was the sole object. But the constitution says this cannot be done except by a vote of the people. The legislature cannot do indirectly what it cannot do directly. People v. Marshall, 12 Ill. 391; Craig v. State, 4 Pet. 410. Says the court in the case first above mentioned: "No means can be constitutional which effect an unconstitutional object. While we would not extend the prohibitions of the constitution so as to embrace measures and objects not manifestly and clearly within the design of its framers, yet, where that is undeniably the case, then by no means whatever should it be allowed to be evaded." See, also, Rock Island Co. v. Sage, 88 Ill. 589; Gotcher v. Burrows, 9 Humph. 589. It is the duty of the court to give both the statute and the constitution such construction as will give effect to both, unless the statute is so clearly repugnant to the constitution as to admit of no other reasonable construction. Doan v. Board, (Idaho,) 26 Pac. Rep. 167, and cases there cited. Suppose the court should hold that this provision of the constitution could be evaded in the manner adopted by this act, then successive legislatures could go on and sever a portion of the territory of one county and attach it to another in every part of the state, and continue the work indefinitely, without the vote of the people in any case.

It will be seen that it would render this provision of the constitution of no effect whatever, as the legislature and the court would have clearly pointed out a method by which it might be evaded. I think the creation of a new county under the proviso in this section must be held to be the creation of an additional county, which the legislature may do out of any territory it may see fit, and without a vote of the people. The constitution is the fundamental law of the state; must control all branches of the government. No evasion, however specious, can be permitted. No amount of circumlocution can divide a county, and attach the part cut off to another, without compliance with section 3, by submitting the proposition to a vote of the people. We are not permitted to consider the apparent necessity of the case, nor the injustice under which any county may be laboring. Wrongs, if they exist, can only be righted by constitutional means. We can only say thus it is written in the constitution. To cut off a portion of any county, and attach the part thus detached to another county, without a vote of the people in the segregated part, would be in direct violation of the clause referred to, and therefore void. The importance of the cause and the ability of the counsel engaged has induced us to examine the cases cited with more than ordinary care, but we have not been able to arrive at a different conclusion. The writ of mandate is denied, with judgment for costs against the relator, and execution may issue therefor.

HUSTON, J., (concurring.) I approach the consideration of this case with a full recognition of the fact that, when called upon to pass upon the validity of an act of a co-ordinate branch of the government, courts have a delicate duty to perform, but it is a duty the obligation of which must not be evaded or shrunk from. I recognize further the potency of the rule which requires that, before pronouncing an act of the legislature invalid, the court should be fully satisfied that such act is clearly repugnant to some provision of the organic law of the state. In this view let us consider the questions involved in this case. Section 1, art. 18, tit. "County Organization," of the constitution of Idaho, reads as follows: "The several counties of the territory of Idaho, as they now exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of this state." Section 2 of said article is as follows: "No county-seat shall be removed unless upon petition of a majority of the qualified electors of the county, and unless two-thirds of the qualified electors of the county voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such removal. A proposition of removal of the county-seat shall not be submitted in the same county more than once in six years, except as provided by existing laws. No person shall vote at any county-seat election who has not resided in the county six months, and in the precinct ninety days." Section 3 of said article 18 is as follows: "No county shall be divided unless a majority of the qualified electors of the territory proposed to be cut off, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such division: provided, that this section shall not apply to the creation of new counties. No person shall vote at such election who has not been ninety days a resident of the territory proposed to be annexed. When any part of a county is stricken off and attached to another county, the part stricken off shall be held to pay its relative proportion of all existing liabilities of the county from which it is taken." Section 4 of the same article reads: "No county shall be established which shall reduce any county to an area of less than four hundred square miles, nor shall a new county be formed containing an area of less than four hundred square miles." On the 3d day of March, 1891, the legislature of the state of Idaho enacted a law entitled "An act to create and organize the counties of Alta and Lincoln, and to locate the county-seats of said counties, and to apportion the debt of Logan county." The sole purpose and effect of this act was to segregate or strike off from Logan county nearly one-half its territorial area, and attach the part so stricken off to Alturas county, and to change the name of Alturas to Alta, and that of Logan to Lincoln. The provision for the apportionment of the debt of Logan county was a necessary sequence. Was this act, so passed, repugnant to the provisions of the constitution of the state above quoted, or to any of them? We must take this constitution as we find it, as it is presented to us by its makers,—the people. It is not within the purview of our authority or the limits of our jurisdiction to bate, or set aside, or treat as naught, any jot or tittle thereof, and "no accepted canon of construction can justify us in adding to the constitution qualifying words of our own, suggested only by outside considerations, which may or may not have been of weight with the convention in framing, or the people in adopting, that instrument." Cooley, Const Lim. Provisions similar to those above cited from the constitution of Idaho, are found in many of the constitutions of other states, and there has been no more disturbing element in the legislation and litigation in many of the states than that which arises from the organization of counties, and the location and changing of county-seats, and the changing of county boundaries. The elements of greed and self-interest enter so largely into the consideration and discussion of these questions that men have been prone, as shown in the history of several of the western states, not only to override constitutional provisions, but to set aside all legal restraints, and resort to brute force, to carry out their purposes in this direction. Idaho, while a territory, had some experience in this sort of legislation, of which, doubtless, the framers of our constitution were not unmindful; hence we find in our constitution a provision unknown to that of the older states, and which can only be found in the constitutions of nine states of the Union, to-wit, Missouri, California, Colorado, N. Dakota, S. Dakota, Washington, Montana, Texas, and Idaho, to-wit, section 1 of article 18. The first appearance of this provision we find in the constitution of Missouri adopted in 1875. We are not at liberty to ignore or treat as meaningless this provision of the constitution more than we could any other. Its incorporation into the organic law by the makers thereof was for a purpose. Doubtless they mean what the language of the section plainly expresses,—that the existing county organizations should remain as such, subject only to such change as was permitted by the constitution. A careful examination of the authorities will fail to show a single case in which the right of the legislature to abolish a county has been recognized in any state whose constitution contained a provision like that of section 1 of article 18 of the Idaho constitution. The judges of the supreme court of the state of Missouri (55 Mo. 295) did hold that “counties are subdivisions of the state for governmental purposes, and there can be no doubt about the constitutional power of the general assembly to create, alter, abolish, and regulate them as expediency may demand, so that no vested rights are interfered with.” This opinion was rendered in 1873, and it is significant that in the constitution adopted by the people of Missouri in 1875, the following provision appears for the first time in the organic law of that state: Section 1, art. 9. “The several counties of this state, as they exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of the state.” I have been unable to find a single case in any of the states, whose constitutions contain this provision, where the legislative right to abolish a county has been upheld by the courts. The contention of the plaintiff would make this provision of our constitution a mere “oyez” clause, having no purpose or intention, save to give utterance to a self-evident fact. I dare not so mock the wisdom of the makers of our constitution. It may be conceded as elementary that the legislature has entire control of the questions of county organizations and county boundaries, except where limited by the inhibitions of the constitution; but the plaintiff contends that there are no inhibitions upon the power and authority of the legislature in this matter contained in the constitution; that the first clause in section 3 of article 18: “No county shall be divided unless a majority of the qualified electors of the territory proposed to be cut off, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such division,”—is rendered null and void by the proviso “that this section shall not apply to the creation of new counties.” Without doubt this section is unhappily constructed. Strictly read, the proviso would apply to the whole of section 3, and yet the legislature did not so construe it, for they made provision in the act under consideration for the apportionment of the debt of Logan county, as required by the closing paragraph of section 3. Surely it would require most cogent reasoning to induce any court to arbitrarily set aside a provision of the constitution so plainly and unequivocally expressed, and which is palpably intended to reserve to the people so valuable and important a right as that of having a voice in the decision of a question in which they are the parties most interested. I cannot believe that it was the purpose of the makers of our constitution to thus “palter in a double sense” with the people whom they were representing, to so “keep the word of promise to their ears, and break it to their hopes.” The constitution distinctly proclaims that “no county shall be divided unless a majority of the qualified electors of the territory proposed to be cut off, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such division.” There is nothing equivocal, nothing ambiguous, in this language. The limitation upon the legislative power is direct, palpable, and imperative. The obvious intent, purpose, and effect of the act in question was to cut off or segregate a portion of Logan county, and attach the same to Alturas county. Not for the purpose of creating a new county in the sense that term is evidently used in section 3; but solely, entirely, and exclusively for the purpose of enlarging the area of Alturas county. That this was the sole purpose of the act is so plain “that he who runs may read.” The changing of names of the two counties from Alturas to Alta, and from Logan to Lincoln, was but a weak invention, of no more operative force than Faulconbridge’s boast: “And if his name be George I’ll call him Peter.” The makers of the constitution recognized the doctrine that even local governments, “long established, should not be changed for light and transient causes,” or be left entirely to the caprice of legislative bodies, to the exclusion of the rights, interests, and wishes of the people who are most interested therein. But we are told that this view does away entirely with the powers of the legislature, clearly allowed by the constitution to form new counties. A mere glance at the map of Idaho will furnish a complete answer to this objection. A very wilderness of new counties can be formed out of the area of this state without the slightest impingement of any of the provisions of the constitution. But if the contention of the plaintiff is to obtain, the whole internal structure of the state, both territorial and political, will be left to the mutative whims of each succeeding legislative assembly, and the protective provisions of the fundamental law will stand, “like counters in a barber’s shop, as much for mock as mark;” and gerrymandering will assume the position of an exact science.

No better rule, it seems to me, can be found for the guidance of courts in the decision of these cases, than that expressed by Chief Justice BRONSON in Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 547. Says that learned jurist in his opinion in that case: “It is highly probable that inconveniences will result from following the constitution as it is written. But that consideration can have no force with me. It is not for us, but those who made the instrument, to supply its defects. If the legislature or the courts may take that office upon themselves, or if, under color of construction, or upon any other specious ground, they may depart from that which is plainly declared, the people may well despair of ever being able to set any boundary to the powers of the government. Written constitutions will be more than useless. Believing, as I do, that the success of free institutions depends upon a rigid adherence to the fundamental law, I have never yielded to considerations of expediency in expounding it. There is always some plausible reason for latitudinarian constructions which are resorted to for the purpose of acquiring power; some evil to be avoided, or some good to be attained by pushing the powers of the government beyond their legitimate boundary. It is by yielding to such influence that constitutions are gradually undermined, and finally overthrown. My rule has ever been to follow the fundamental law as it is written, regardless of consequences. If the law does not work well, the people can amend it; and inconveniences can be borne long enough to await that process. But if the legislature or the courts undertake to cure defects by forced and unnatural constructions, they inflict a wound upon the constitution which nothing can heal. One step taken by the legislature or the judiciary in enlarging the powers of the government opens the door for another, which will be sure to follow; and so the process goes on until all respect for the fundamental law is lost, and the powers of the government are just what those in authority please to call them." Says Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, (5th Ed.) p. 86, note, "We agree with the supreme court of Indiana, (Green-castle Tp. v. Black, 5 Ind. 557, 565,) that in construing constitutions courts have nothing to do with the argument ab inconvenienti, and should not bend the constitution to suit the law of the hour." What was intended to be done, what was done, by the passage of the act under consideration? Was any new county formed? The proposition is absurd; the position is untenable. The simply enlarging the area of one county by appropriating a portion of an adjoining county cannot, it seems to me, be seriously claimed to be the organization of a new county, even if the ceremony of rechristening of both counties is resorted to. It is suggestive of the view which the legislature had of the meaning of the provisions of section 3, art. 18, of the constitution, that at the same session at which the act under consideration was passed the same body enacted a law dividing the county of Ada, and erecting from the part segregated an entirely new county to be called "Canyon County," and submitting the adoption thereof to a vote of the people of the segregated territory. What rights have the people of Ada county, under the constitution, which are not shared equally by the people of Logan county? Is the constitution to receive one construction in behalf of the people of one county, and an entirely different interpretation when the rights and interests of the people of another county are involved? Is not this, in the language of the supreme court of Indiana, above cited, "bending the constitution to suit the law of the hour?" The proposition of counsel that the provisions of the constitution are only applicable when in the judgment of the legislature it is expedient to make them so, is something more than startling, it is "monstrous and heretical." We can find no authority in support of such a view. There would be little use for written constitutions if such a rule could obtain. Constitutional provisions cannot be regarded as directory merely, to be obeyed or not, within the discretion of either or all of the departments of government. Hunt v. State, (Tex.) 3 S. W. Rep. 233. A strained construction or astute interpretation is not to be given to relieve against local or individual hardships. Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385. While it is true that the constitutions of very many of the states contain clauses similar to section 4, art. 18, of the Idaho constitution, it is equally true that only in the constitutions of the nine states above mentioned will a provision similar to that of section 1 of article 18 of the Idaho constitution be found; and I have been unable to find a single case in any of those nine states where the authority of the legislature to abolish existing counties has been sustained.

The case of State v. Larrabee, 1 Wis. 200, is not in point. Section 7, art. 13, of the constitution of Wisconsin provided that "no county with an area of nine hundred square miles or less shall be divided, or have any part stricken therefrom, without submitting the question to a vote of the people of the county, nor unless a majority of all the legal voters of the county voting on the question shall vote for the same." Washington county contained less than 900 square miles exclusive of that part of Lake Michigan within its boundaries. It was claimed that so much of Washington county as was covered by Lake Michigan should not be included in estimating its area; and that therefore the act of the legislature segregating a portion of said county, and erecting the county Ozaukee from the territory so taken off, was in violation of said section 7, art. 13 of the constitution. The court held that in estimating the area of Washington county the portion covered by Lake Michigan should be included, and this took it out of the provisions of said section 7, art. 13. The other question decided by the court in that case, touching the effect of the segregation and organization of the new county upon the county-seat, has no applicability here. The case of Attorney General v. Fitzpatrick, 2 Wis. 542, is only another phase of the same question, arising under the same act, and upon the same facts. The other authorities cited by counsel for plaintiff in support of the proposition that the legislature is supreme in the matter of creating or abolishing counties, being all decisions from states whose constitutions have no provision in similitude with section 1, art. 18, of our constitution, cannot be considered of weight herein. It seems to me that the language of Judge CATON in People v. Marshall, 12 Ill. 396, is peculiarly applicable to this case. Says that learned judge, in the closing part of his opinion: "There is, no doubt a certain degree of plausibility in the course of argument by which this law is attempted to be sustained. It is truly said that the constitution is a restraint upon legislative powers, and there is no doubt but this law might be passed unless prohibited by the constitution. From this it is argued that, as there is no express prohibition to abolish counties, it is within the power of the legislature to do so, and from necessity there must be authority to organize the disorganized territory. But this reasoning is more specious than sound. As we have before seen, it leads inevitably to the overthrow of the paramount law of the state. No means can be constitutional which effect an unconstitutional object. While we would not extend the prohibitions of the constitution, so as to embrace measures and objects not manifestly and clearly within the design of its framers, yet where that is undeniably the case, then by no means whatever should it be allowed to be evaded." Suppose the legislature of Idaho, in their wisdom, had, in the language of counsel, decided that it was to the advantage of the people inhabiting that portion of the state of Idaho now known and designated as Ada county, to have that county abolished, and the territory of which it is composed attached to Washington county, and should enact a law to that effect, without submitting the question to a vote of the people to be affected thereby, can it be seriously contended that such an act would be constitutional? Or suppose a legislature of Idaho, not actuated or prompted thereto by wisdom, or any principle of righteousness or justice, but "moved and instigated by the devil," as it is said the legislatures of other states sometimes are, should "decide it is to the advantage" of the people inhabiting that portion of Ada county lying north of Main street in Boise City, that such territory should be attached to Boise county, and should pass an act to that effect, without submitting it to a vote of the people to be directly affected thereby, will it be claimed for a moment that such a law could be sustained as constitutional? And yet all these consequences are involved in the acceptance of the contention of the plaintiff. Say the supreme court of Tennessee in James Co. v. Hamilton Co., 14 S. W. Rep. 601: "A county is a government within a government, and its voters must be consulted in all matters pertaining to it. It is not created, nor can it be destroyed, by an arbitrary legislative breath. The county was made at the instance of the people and for its people, and can be changed or abolished only, when at all, by their consent. If the legislature may dissolve one county and divide it out among its neighbors, it may abolish all, and destroy the state;" and it must be remembered that the state constitution of Tennessee contains no such provision as section 1, art. 18, of the Idaho constitution. It is evident to my mind that section 3, art. 18, of the constitution does not, as it stands, clearly express the intention of the makers of that instrument. A careful analysis of the section will, I think, make this apparent. It seems to me that the proviso is misplaced in that section. Evidently it was the intention of the makers of the constitution that so much of section 3 as required a submission to the people of any proposition for the dividing of any county should not apply to the creation of a new county, and no further. My own view, therefore, is that, to express the evident intention and meaning of the makers of the constitution, section 3, art. 18, should be construed to read: "No county shall be divided unless a majority of the qualified electors of the territory proposed to be cut off, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such division. No person shall vote at such election who has not been ninety days a resident of the territory proposed to be annexed: provided, that this section shall not apply to the creation of new counties. When any part of a county is stricken off and attached to another county the part stricken off shall be held to pay its relative proportion of all existing liabilities of the county from which it is taken." I do not think it was the intention of the makers of the constitution that the proviso in section 3 should apply to the last clause of said section. There is no reason grounded in any principle of equity or justice which would make the people of a segregated portion of a county responsible for a pro rata portion of the existing liabilities of the old county in case of a division of the county, and not in a case where the same territory was segregated for the purpose of forming or creating a new county. I am unhesitatingly of the opinion that the act of the legislature of March 3, 1891, segregating a portion of Logan county therefrom, and annexing the territory so segregated to Alturas county, was not the creation of a new county in any sense, and that said act is void, as contravening the provisions of section 3, art. 18, of the constitution of Idaho; that the provisions of said act abolishing the counties of Alturas and Logan are void as contravening section 1, art. 18, of said constitution; and that the writ of mandate should be denied.

SULLIVAN, C. J., (dissenting.) I am unable to concur in the opinion of the majority of the court. The question involved in this cause is whether a certain act of the legislature entitled "An act to create and organize the counties of Alta and Lincoln, to locate the county-seats, and to apportion the debt of Logan county," is in conflict with the constitution. "A state constitution is an instrument of restriction and limitation upon powers already plenary, so far as it affects the powers of the government and the objects of legislation." State v. Lancaster Co., 4 Neb. 537; People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 545; People v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 401. It is a well-established principle that the law-making power of the legislature is supreme, subject only to the limitations imposed by the constitution. In other words, that which the constitution prohibits from being done determines the power of the legislature under it. McMillen v. Lee Co., 6

Iowa, 391; People v. Blodgett, 18 Mich. 127. It is also a well-established rule that an express power to make laws is not necessary to enable the legislature to make them. The court is called upon, in this case, to declare a solemn legislative enactment unconstitutional and void. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, p. 192, says: "The power to declare a legislative enactment void is one which the judge, conscious of the fallibility of human judgment, will shrink from exercising in any case where he can conscientiously and with due regard to duty and official oath decline the responsibility." Courts have not the power to declare acts of the legislature void simply because, in the opinion of the court, such acts are repugnant to natural justice and expediency. Mr. Cooley says on this point, (Const. Lim. pp. 201, 202:) "The rule of law upon this subject appears to be that, except when the constitution imposes limits upon the legislative power, it must be considered as practically absolute, whether it operates according to natural justice or not, in any particular case. The courts are not the guardians of the rights of the people of the state, except as those rights are secured by some constitutional provision which comes within the judicial cognizance. * * * It cannot run a race of opinions upon points of right, reason, and expediency with the law-making power." Effect should be given to this act, unless it is clearly repugnant to the constitution. The rule of decision is, where the constitutionality of a statute is questioned, if there is any doubt, such doubt must be resolved in favor of the statute. "To doubt is to sustain the act." Sedg. St. & Const. Law, 409; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 88, 192, 222, 230; Winch v. Tobin, 107 Ill. 212; Wulff v. Aldrich, 124 Ill. 592, 16 N. E. Rep. 886; Sharpless v. Mayor, etc., 21 Pa. St. 164. "It must be clearly, plainly, and palpably in violation of the constitution." Hess v. Pegg, 7 Nev. 30; Township of Mountclair v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 147, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Morrison v. Springer, 15 Iowa, 304; Stewart v. Supervisors, 1 Amer. Rep. 241, 242.

Construed by the light of the above principles and rules, is said act unconstitutional? That is the question. Article 18 of the constitution, entitled, "County Organization," contains all of the inhibitions upon the legislature in regard to the organization of new counties. The first four sections of said article are quoted by Mr. Justice HUSTON, in his opinion; but he bases his opinion upon the first and third sections thereof. The fourth section of said article is substantially the same as section 1, art. 7, of the constitution of Illinois, as to the area of counties, and is as follows: "No new county shall be established which shall reduce any county to an area of less than four hundred square miles; nor shall a new county be formed containing an area of less than four hundred square miles." It was decided by the supreme court of Illinois in People v. Marshall, 12 Ill. 392, that an act of the legislature abolishing two counties, and of their territory creating a new one, was not in conflict with said section, "el-ther in letter or spirit." As the people of Idaho adopted this provision of the constitution of Illinois, the rule is that they also adopted the judicial interpretation given to said section by the highest court of that state. Hess v. Pegg, 7 Nev. 23; Leavenworth Co. v. Miller, 7 Kan. 479; Daily v. Swope, 47 Miss. 367. The act in question is not repugnant to section 4. Mr. Justice HUSTON places great stress upon section 1 of said article 18, which section is as follows: "The several counties of this state, as they now exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of this state." The learned justice states that he has been unable to find a single case, in any of the states whose constitutions contain the above provision, where the legislative right to abolish a county has been upheld by the courts. I have been unable to find a single decision, from any of the states whose constitution contains said provision, where the courts have held that said section was a prohibition upon the legislature from abolishing a county. If said section prohibits the legislature from abolishing a county, I submit, then, that it is a prohibition from changing the boundaries in any manner whatever, for said section recognizes the counties of this state "as they now exist." It is admitted by my associates that the legislature has the power to organize new counties. If a new county is organized, it must be conceded that the boundaries of some county or counties must be changed, and that such county or counties so changed would not thereafter "exist" as it or they "existed" at the date of the adoption of the constitution. The entire territorial limit of the state was included in 18 counties, and if the counties must continue as they then "existed," no new counties could be formed, unless the state acquired territory that was not within its limits at the date of the adoption of the constitution. If this section prohibits the legislature from abolishing a county, it prohibits the change of county boundaries in any manner and for any purpose. If this position is tenable, what becomes of the proviso of section 3? If by said section the counties of the state are made constitutional counties, they must each continue to exist as they "existed" at the date of the adoption of the constitution, or until the constitution is amended, permitting a change in their territorial existence or boundaries. Nearly every state constitution of which I have any knowledge recognizes the counties of such states; and many, if not all, state constitutions name each and every county of their respective states. The constitution provides for county government and county organization, but this of itself is not a prohibition upon the legislature from extinguishing a county government and establishing another in its stead, over the same territory, in connection with other territory. County government cannot be abolished by the legislature, so that the state and people would be deprived of it; and no effort has been made by the legislature to do away with county government. The mere recognition of a county by the constitution should not be construed into an inhibition on the legislature from abolishing it.

Section 3, art. 18, provides as follows: "No county shall be divided unless a majority of the qualified electors of the territory proposed to be cut off, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such proposition: provided, that this section shall not apply to the creation of new counties. No person shall vote at such election who has not been ninety days a resident of the territory proposed to be annexed. When any part of a county is stricken off and attached to another county, the part stricken off shall be held to pay its relative proportion of all then existing liabilities." By the proviso in said section it is declared that in the creation of new counties said section shall not apply. When applied to the creation of new counties, the constitution should be construed as though said section was not contained therein. The only prohibition placed upon the legislature in regard to dividing counties and changing county lines is contained in said section 3, and the prohibition therein contained does not apply to the creation of new counties. Section 3 is not to be considered, and is not applicable to the division of counties, made for the purpose of creating new ones. The power of the legislature is unrestricted, in the creation and organization of new counties, to the extent and out of such territory as it may deem best, so long as no county is created with an area of not less than 400 square miles, which limitation is contained in section 4, art. 18. It is maintained by Mr. Justice HUSTON that said section 3 is unhappily constructed, and that, strictly construed, the proviso would apply to the whole section. The rules of construction would need to be carried to an extreme limit to hold that said proviso does not apply to the whole section. The proviso is in very terse and plain English, and declares that "this section" shall not apply to the creation of new counties. It is too plain to require construction. It is claimed that the legislature did not construe said proviso to apply to all of said section, for the reason that "they made provision in the act under consideration for the apportionment of the debt of Logan county, as required by the closing paragraph of section 3." Said entire section applies to the striking off of a part of one county, and attaching the part so stricken off to another county, then in existence. The effect of said section is to leave to the choice of the people, as expressed by their votes, whether they will be removed from one existing county to another. The last paragraph or sentence of said section is as follows: "When any part of a county is stricken off and attached to another county, the part stricken off shall be held to pay its relative proportion of all then existing liabilities of the county from which it is taken." I do not understand why one of my associates claims that the legislature, by the act in question, apportioned the debt of Logan county, as required by the paragraph above quoted, when section 9 of said act is as follows: "All of the indebtedness of Logan county shall be paid by Lincoln county." There is not an intimation in said act requiring that that part of Logan county taken, in connection with Alturas county, to form Alta county, shall pay its relative proportion of all then existing liabilities of Logan county, but specifically requires Lincoln county to pay all of the indebtedness of Logan county. Said last paragraph of section 3 is not a prohibition on the legislature from apportioning the debts of the counties from which territory may be taken to organize new counties as may be just and equitable.

In the opinions of the majority of this court it is held that the words "new counties," as used in the constitution mean "additional counties." I do not think that construction tenable. Had it been the intention of the framers of the constitution to confine the meaning of the word "new" to an increase in the number of counties, they would have used the word "additional," or some term that clearly expressed the idea that the new counties to be created must increase the number of counties. In the case of People v. Dubois, 23 Ill. 548, and People v. Bangs, 24 Ill. 184, it was held that the legislature could increase the number of circuits, but that it could not deprive a judge of his office by creating a "new circuit" out of the territory from which such judge was elected, when such new circuit, so created, was not an additional circuit. The provision of the Illinois constitution, permitting the legislature to increase the number of circuits, is very different from the constitution of Idaho. Section 7, art. 5, provides: "The state shall be divided into nine judicial circuits, in each of which one circuit judge shall be elected by the qualified voters thereof, who shall hold his office for a term of six years, and until his successor shall be commissioned and qualified; provided, the general assembly may increase the number of circuits to meet the exigencies of the state." It will be observed that the state of Illinois was divided, by said section of the constitution, into nine circuits, and the legislature was authorized and empowered to increase the number of circuits to meet the exigencies of the state. Section 15 of the same article provides that, "whenever an additional circuit is created," etc. The word "new" is used in said decisions to designate the circuit created by said act. The court held that a "new" circuit had been created, but that such "new" circuit was not an additional circuit; that the number of circuits were not increased; hence said act was repugnant to the constitution. Had the framers of the constitution intended that the legislature should be confined to the creation of additional counties, apt words would have been used, and the proviso in section 3 would have read: "Provided, that this section shall not apply to the creation of additional counties." Webster defines the word "new" to mean "having existed but a short time;" "recently established." A new county does not necessarily mean an additional county. If three of the counties of the state should decrease in population and wealth, so as not to be able to sustain a county government, or for any other reason the legislature should conclude that it was for the best interest of the people to create a new county out of the territory of the three, such county, so created, would be a new county, within the meaning of the term "new county" as used in the constitution. Only two sections of the constitution refer to the creation of new counties, to-wit, sections 3, 4, art. 18. In section 3 the word "new" is used as follows: "Provided, that this section shall not apply to the creation of new counties." And in section 4 as follows: "No new county shall be established; * * * nor shall a new county be formed containing less than four hundred square miles." Said section 3 cannot apply to a legislative act creating a new county. The constitution places but one restriction upon the legislature in the creation of new counties, and that is that no county shall be created with an area of less than 400 square miles. Such new county need not necessarily be an additional county. Mr. Justice MORGAN, in his opinion, says: "It could not have been desired to abolish the counties of Alturas and Logan. Nothing is said in the act about abolishing the counties, and they do not seem to be abolished." Would not said counties have been abolished, provided said act had been held constitutional, as effectually as if said act had contained a section, or several sections, directly declaring them abolished? They certainly would.

The assessment roll of Alturas county for 1888 (before Logan and Elmore counties were created from Alturas) shows the total assessed valuation of Alturas to have been $3,837,362. A careful estimate, made by the assessor, shows that about $975,000 of that amount was in the present county of Alturas. The assessment roll of Alturas county for 1889 shows the assessed valuation to have been $814,387; assessed valuation for 1890, $649,104; being a reduction, for one year, of $165,283, and for two years a reduction of $326,896. This shows a decrease in the taxable property of Alturas county for the years 1889 and 1890 of about 33 per cent. In population, the loss in Alturas county, since 1888, is about 33 per cent., as indicated by the election returns. This great decrease in population and wealth may have been one of the causes that induced the legislature to pass the act under consideration. I only state these facts, by way of reply to the proposition of the majority of the court, as to one of the causes or reasons the legislature had for passing said act. This court "cannot run a race of opinions upon points of right, reason, and expediency with the law-making power," as stated by Judge Cooley, supra. This court has no authority to inquire into the motives of the legislature in the passage of the act under consideration. Wright v. Defrees, 8 Ind. 298; Attorney General v. Supervisors, 33 Mich. 239, Cooley, Const. Lim. 223, and note 4, p. 223. Because the legislature passed an act dividing Ada county, and erected from the part segregated a new county, to be called "Canyon County," and submitted the question to a vote of the people living in the segregated territory, it is suggested in the opinion of one of my associates that the legislature placed one construction upon the constitution for the people of Logan county, and a different construction for the people of Ada county. If the legislature has the power to create new counties without submitting the question to a vote of the people, the fact of having submitted the question to a vote of the people is no reason for charging the legislature with interpreting the constitution one way when applied to one county, and directly the opposite when applied to another. There is nothing in the constitution requiring the legislature to exercise all the power which it has. It is claimed that a dangerous power would be left in the hands of the legislature if it had the power to create new counties out of any territory it might deem best. Had the framers of the constitution so thought, they no doubt would have inserted in the constitution such provisions as the constitutions of Illinois or Tennessee contain, prohibiting the legislature from dividing a county, for any purpose, without a vote of the people. On the contrary, they were very careful to provide that section 3, art. 18, should not apply to the creation of new counties; that being the only section that prohibits the legislature from dividing a county without first submitting the question to a vote of the qualified electors. This court is not authorized to so interpret the constitution as to place restrictions upon the legislature which are not warranted by the plain meaning and intent of the constitution. The entire matter of the creation of new counties has been left by the people in the hands of the legislature, with but one restriction, to-wit, that no county shall be made to contain an area of less than 400 square miles. This indicates that the people were not afraid of the "mutatious whims of each succeeding legislature," or that "gerrymandering will assume the position of an exact science." Nor should this court "suppose" that the legislature would be "moved and instigated by the devil" to divide any county in this state, and for that reason attempt to place restrictions or inhibitions on the legislature which the constitution does not clearly warrant. Other departments of our government are, as I believe, quite as apt to be controlled by "mutatious whims" and "moved and instigated by the devil" as is the legislative branch. It has been held by the supreme court of North Carolina that the legislature had the general power to alter the boundaries of counties, to create new ones, or to destroy a county altogether. Mills v. Williams, 11 Ired. 558; Granville Co. v. Ballard, 69 N. C. 18. The people of North Carolina have adopted a new constitution since said decisions were rendered, and did not prohibit therein the legislature from abolishing a county whenever it saw fit to do so. The people were not afraid to leave that power with the legislature. It has been held by the supreme courts of other states that the legislature, under constitutions similar to that of Idaho, had the power to abolish, alter, modify, and create counties. State

v. McFadden, 23 Minn. 40; Opinion of Judges, 55 Mo. 296; Division of Howard Co., 15 Kan. 194; Republica v. McClean, 4 Yeates, 899; State v. Choate, 11 Ohio, 511; Hinkel v. Stevens, (Kan.) 3 Pac. Rep. 581; Attorney General v. Fitzpatrick, 2 Wis. 542-548; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 46, 63, 65. The constitution of Illinois, in force at the time of the rendition of the decision of People v. Marshall, supra; and the constitution of Tennessee in force at the dates of the decisions of Gotcher v. Burrows, 9 Humph. 585; Marion Co. v. Grundy Co., 5 Sneed, 492; and James Co. v. Hamilton Co., (Tenn.) 14 S. W. Rep. 601,—prohibited the legislature from dividing a county for any purpose whatever, without submitting the question to a vote of the people, and are not in point. The opinion of the court in James Co. v. Hamilton Co., supra, was rendered October 4, 1890, and the court says: "The fact that the question [as to the power of the legislature to abolish a county] has only arisen in two cases, (People v. Marshall, supra, and the case at bar,) goes to show that legislatures have heretofore interpreted constitutions as giving no such power, either by implication or in terms." This decision should be given no weight as authority in this case for the following reasons: (1) It proceeds upon the theory that a state constitution is a grant of power to the legislature, and that, unless the power to abolish a county is granted the legislature does not possess the power, when it is a well-established principle that a state constitution is an instrument of restriction and limitation upon powers already plenary. (2) The constitution of Tennessee prohibits the change of county lines for any purpose, without a vote of the people, either for the creation of new counties or otherwise. (3) Prior to said decision, the point as to whether the legislature had the power to abolish a county had been decided by the supreme courts of several different states, (authorities cited, supra,) while the court says: "The question has arisen in but two cases," to-wit, the Illinois case, and the case then before that court. The only states whose highest courts have held that the legislature had not the power to abolish a county for the purpose of creating a new one, that I have any knowledge of, are Illinois and Tennessee; and the constitutions of said states prohibit, in terms, the legislature from dividing a county for the purpose of creating a new county or otherwise, without submitting the question to a vote of the people. When the constitution of Idaho was framed it was known that the legislature had exercised the power of changing the boundaries of counties and creating new ones, and that certain consequences resulted therefrom. The framers of the constitution saw fit to prohibit the legislature from striking off a part of one county and attaching it to a county then in existence, without submitting the question to a vote of the people residing in the part to be stricken off, but expressly provide that such inhibition shall not apply to the creation of new counties. Section 2, art. 7, of the Illinois constitution was incorporated into section 8, art. 18, of the Idaho constitution; and, the framers of the constitution knowing the construction that the supreme court of the state of Illinois had placed upon said section in People v. Marshall, supra, they inserted a proviso, thus clearly indicating that they did not intend to adopt the interpretation given said section by said court.

In interpreting the constitution this court should not apply a prohibition on the legislature which the constitution itself declares shall not be a prohibition. The convention that framed our constitution included some of the most eminent lawyers of the state. With the constitutions of other states before them, and the interpretations thereof as given by the courts of last resort, they did not place any restrictions on the legislature in the creation of new counties except as to area. Last section 3 should be interpreted to apply to the creation of new counties, the framers of the constitution were very careful to insert a proviso, thus showing the intention to leave the entire matter of the creation of new counties with the legislature, unrestricted, except as to area. The intention of the framers of the constitution is manifest, from the manner in which section 3 deals with the subject, in making provision for existing liabilities of the counties, when a part of one is stricken off and attached to another. Was the creation of Alta and Lincoln counties a creation of new counties, within the meaning of that term as used in the constitution? As before shown, the creation of a new county does not necessarily mean an additional county. A "new county" is a new county organization, erected over and upon territory which had not before comprised, in itself, a county. Alta county included a part of the territory of what was formerly Logan, and all of the territory of what was formerly Alturas. Lincoln county included a part of what was formerly Logan county, but not the whole. Hence Alta and Lincoln counties are new counties, within the meaning of that term as used in the constitution. A new county organization was by said act erected over territory, which had not before comprised, in itself, a county. If the legislature has not the power to create new counties by dividing a county as Logan was divided in the creation of Alta and Lincoln counties, then the proviso of section 3 is not the controlling part of said section, and is given no effect whatever in the interpretation of said section; and, to apply the quotation of Mr. Justice HUSTON, it would stand in said section, "like counters in a barber's shop, as much for mock as mark." The act in question does unite a part of what was formerly Logan county to what was formerly Alturas, but within the meaning of section 3, art. 18, it does not strike off a part of Logan county and attach it to Alturas, because Logan and Alturas counties were, by said act, extinguished. The legislature, by this act, does not undertake to do indirectly what it was prohibited from doing directly. Two new counties were created out of Logan and Alturas counties. A part of Logan county was not stricken off and attached to Alturas county; but a new county was created, and the legislature, in creating said new counties, used constitutional means, and effected a constitutional object, to-wit, created two new counties.

It is contended that the office of clerk of the district court of the county of Logan was created, and the term of office fixed by the constitution, and that the defendant was legally elected to said office, and that he could not be legally deprived thereof except by the expiration of the term for which he was elected. The fact is that the defendant held his office by appointment made by the governor. From our view of this case that makes no difference. In the case of Republica v. McClean, 4 Yeates, 399, the court held that the commission of the officer became void by the political annihilation of that part of the county for which the officer was commissioned. "Article 5, § 16, provides for a clerk of the district court for each county in the state, and fixes the tenure of office; yet both office and tenure of the clerk of the district court in and for a particular county are dependent upon the existence of such county." If the county is extinguished by the legislature, the office falls. People v. Morrell, 21 Wend. 577; Hinkel v. Stevens, (Kan.) 3 Pac. Rep. 531; State v. Choate, 11 Ohio, 511; Hagerty v. Arnold, 13 Kan. 367. County officers have no such vested right to their offices as would, under the constitution of Idaho, prohibit the legislature from abolishing a county in the creation of a new county. Laramie Co. v. Albany Co., 92 U. S. 307. The case of Rock Island Co. v. Sage, 88 Ill. 539, is not in point, for the reason that the constitution of Illinois prohibits the legislature from changing county lines without submitting the question to a vote of the people. Section 2, art. 7, is as follows: "No county shall be divided, or have any part stricken therefrom, without submitting the question to a vote of the people of the county, nor unless a majority of all the legal voters of the county voting on the question shall vote for the same." In that case the legislature undertook to change the lines of a county without submitting the question to a vote of the people, which act was expressly prohibited by said section of the constitution. The proposition which Mr. Justice HUSTON mentions as having been advanced by counsel, to-wit, that the provisions of the constitution are only applicable when in the judgment of the legislature it is expedient to make them so, is a proposition that I have not been able to find advanced in any of the briefs submitted in this case, and is one that I did not hear advanced, or even intimated, in the oral argument of this cause. The counsel on both sides of this cause are, as I believe, too eminent and honorable to advance such an infamous proposition. In the case of Edwards v. Railway Co., (Colo.) 21 Pac. Rep. 1011, the court says: "The view that a solemn legislative provision is a useless and lifeless thing should be entertained when no reasonable intentment can be fairly deduced therefrom after diligent and industrious search, aided by all pertinent rules of statutory interpretation." A reasonable intentment can be fairly deduced from the act in question, and said act can be construed to stand without the slightest impingement on the provisions of the constitution. The act in question is not repugnant to any provision of the constitution, and the writ should issue as prayed for by the relator.

HABEAS CORPUS—VENUE OF CRIME—COMMITMENT.

In habeas corpus, where the evidence certified by the committing magistrate fails to show the venue, the commitment is fatally defective; and where the application is to the supreme court, and the expense of supplying such evidence therein would be burdensome to the parties, the prisoner will be discharged. GROESBECK, C. J., dissenting.

Application for writ of habeas corpus.

Hugo Donzelmann, for petitioner. Atty. Gen. Potter, for the State.

CONAWAY, J. This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, and is heard in this court upon the petition of Brenner, the return or answer of the sheriff of Carbon county, defendant herein, the demurrer of petitioner to said answer, and the testimony taken below and certified to this court by the committing magistrate. It appears that petitioner is held by virtue of a commitment, after a preliminary examination by a justice of the peace of Carbon county, upon a charge of fraudulently selling land as unincumbered which he had formerly disposed of by a mortgage which has not been discharged. We find it unnecessary to pass upon the several questions raised by the pleadings and the argument in this matter. The committing magistrate certifies that the testimony sent here is all the testimony taken in the case. The word "testimony" is not synonymous with "evidence;" but, if documentary evidence had been introduced below, it would have been produced by some witness, and must have been referred to in the testimony of such witness. As no such documentary evidence is so referred to, it is clear that this record contains all the evidence introduced at the preliminary examination before the justice of the peace; and probably the committing magistrate in his certificate, and the stenographer in his oath, both to the effect that the testimony sent to this court is all the testimony taken at the preliminary examination, use the word "testimony" in the sense of "evidence." Saying nothing of the objections raised as to the sufficiency of the complaint, and to the form of the warrant of commitment, we find the evidence totally insufficient to support the commitment. There is nothing showing that the transaction charged to be criminal occurred within the territorial jurisdiction of this court. There is not even a hint as to where it occurred. There is not a scintilla of evidence as to venue, which, of course, is fatal to the existing commitment. So far all is plain. What should be done in the matter is a more difficult question. Our statute provides that the court or judge, upon a hearing of this kind, may consider the testimony taken before the committing magistrate, if it be in writing, and any other evidence procured, and may remand, commit, or discharge the petitioner, according to the circumstances of the case. No other evidence has been produced. We are loth to impose upon the parties the inconvenience and expense of appearing here for examination with the witnesses. Neither will it do to establish the practice of releasing persons charged with crime, and thus giving guilty parties an opportunity to escape justice on account of defect, however serious, in the proceedings before committing magistrates. Petitions for habeas corpus should, as a general thing, be presented to the judge nearest the place where the petitioner is restrained of his liberty, and parties will be held very strictly to this rule, except where special and very cogent reasons exist for a departure from it. This judge can hold the re-examination, when necessary, upon the spot, and do it as expeditiously and economically as the committing magistrate could. But this case, we think, may well be left to the authorities of Carbon county. Another prosecution can be begun there if the cause of justice require it. Under all the circumstances appearing in this case, we think the petitioner should be discharged, and it is so ordered.

MERRELL, J., concurs.

GROESBECK, C. J., (dissenting.) I concur in the result reached by my learned brethren. I do not think, however, that the failure to prove the venue is a sufficient ground for the discharge of the petitioner, however fatal such a lack of proof would be on the trial of a criminal case. This defect can be supplied in habeas corpus proceedings reviewing the action of a committing magistrate, under section 1296 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that the replication to the answer and return to the petition for habeas corpus may deny the sufficiency of the testimony to justify the action of the committing magistrate, on the trial of which issue all written testimony before such magistrate may be given in evidence before the court or judge hearing the writ, in connection with any other testimony which may then be produced; and also under the provisions of section 1301, Rev. St., which states that, "although the commitment of the plaintiff may have been irregular, still, if the court or judge is satisfied from the evidence before them that he ought to be held or committed, either for the offense charged or any other, the order may be made accordingly." In effect, these provisions of the habeas corpus act operate as an appeal from the action of the committing magistrate,—a practice that is recognized by statute in many jurisdictions, and approved by the law-writers. Under the constitution of this state this court is clothed with original jurisdiction in habeas corpus, and exercises this jurisdiction in the method prescribed by law. I have no doubt that the statutory power to hear additional evidence includes the right to hear such evidence as may supply and cure defects in the preliminary examination, or that may tend to establish the guilt or innocence of the petitioner.

The complaint in this case was brought under section 1046 of the Revised Statutes, which makes it a felony, after once selling, bartering, or disposing of any tract of land, etc., to knowingly and fraudulently sell, barter, or dispose of the same. The proof shows that the petitioner mortgaged a tract of land, and afterwards sold the same to the prosecuting witness. Under a statute similar to ours, the supreme court of California held that the giving of a mortgage on land, and afterwards selling the same, did not fall within the provisions of the statute of that state, as the prior mortgaging of the premises could not be deemed to be a disposing of the same, within the intent of the statute, as the purpose of the act was confined to dealings concerning the title to the property, and looking to the parting with the title to it; and that, if merely to mortgage is to dispose of lands within the act, then to give a second mortgage would be to dispose of them a second time, and would or might be a crime; and, further, that under the same reasoning it would be a criminal offense for one to convey lands upon which he had already placed an incumbrance by way of mortgage. People v. Cox, 45 Cal. 342. This reasoning is sound, and can well be applied to the parallel case before us. Penal statutes must be strictly construed, and nothing can be injected into a criminal statute to extend its terms, or to include by inference or implication other offenses than those clearly defined therein. As it appears from the evidence that the acts of the petitioner did not constitute an offense as defined by the statute upon which it is admitted the complaint was made, he was rightfully discharged.

DOWNES v. PARSHALL et al.

(Supreme Court of Wyoming. April 27, 1891.)

TERRITORIES—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—BANKRUPTCY—ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

1. Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, subd. 4, providing that congress shall have power to establish "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States," does not qualify the plenary legislative power of congress over the territories; and hence Rev. St. U. S. § 1851, providing that the "legislative power of every territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States," authorized the legislature of Wyoming to pass Rev. St. Wyo. § 118, declaring that any creditor accepting a dividend from the property of an assignor shall release him from all further liability on the claim.

2. The provision in such act, requiring a release, is not in conflict with Rev. St. U. S. § 1925, providing that the legislature of Wyoming shall not pass any law impairing the rights of private property.

3. The statute does not require that the deed of assignment shall provide for the disposition of the dividends of those who refuse to accept them and release the assignor, and a failure to so provide does not convert an assignment under the statute to one at common law.

Appeal from district court, Laramie county.

J. J. Rowen, J. Q. Charles, and J. R. Smith, for appellant. Lacey & Van Devanter, for appellees.

CONAWAY, J. Plaintiff in error filed his petition in the office of the clerk of the district court for Laramie county, July 17, 1890, praying an order of the court requiring and directing the defendant assignees to pay to plaintiff in error the dividend theretofore declared by them in the course of the administration of the estate of the said assignor, and such other dividends as might, from time to time, be lawfully declared and ordered, without the execution of the release of said assignor, as required by section 118, Rev. St. Wyo. 1887. On July 21, 1890, a final order was made in and by said district court, overruling and denying the prayer of said petition, to which final order plaintiff in error then and there excepted. He asks in this court the reversal of the final order.

The only question presented in the court below or in this court is the effect as to the plaintiff in error of said section 118, Rev. St. Wyo. It is urged that this section is in its nature and effect a bankrupt or insolvent law, and that the legislature of the territory of Wyoming had no power to pass a bankrupt or insolvent law. Without discussing the question as to how far this section 118 partakes of the nature of a bankrupt or insolvent law, and waiving the question as to what the effect would be upon the other portions of the assignment law if this section should be found invalid, we will consider the power or authority of the legislature to pass such a law. The argument of the plaintiff in error, stated briefly, is that the authority of the legislature of Wyoming territory was derived from congress; that congress could confer no greater power than it had itself; and that congress had no power or authority to pass a bankrupt or insolvent law for Wyoming territory. This argument rests upon the assumption, which is made as the basis of the argument, that the power of congress upon this subject is derived from and limited by subdivision 4 of section 8 of article 1 of the constitution of the United States, conferring upon congress power to establish "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States." As to this contention it is sufficient to say that the power of congress to legislate for the territories is not derived from nor limited by this or any other express provision or provisions of the constitution. As to the extent of this power the supreme court of the United States says: "All territory within the jurisdiction of the United States, not included in any state, must necessarily be governed by or under the authority of congress. Congress may not only abrogate laws of the territorial legislatures, but it may itself legislate directly for the local government. It may make a void act of the territorial legislature valid, and a valid act void. In other words, it has full and complete legislative authority over the people of the territories and all departments of the territorial governments. It may do for the territories what the people, under the constitution of the United States, may do for the states." National Bank v. County of Yankton, 101 U. S. 129. It is thus apparent that the doctrine that the general government is one of limited powers granted by the states, and enumerated in the express provisions of the constitution, or derived by necessary implication from such enumerated powers, however just and salutary, as applied to the states, has no application to the territories of the United States. The power of congress to legislate for the territories is not to be compared to nor measured by its power to legislate for the people of the states. It is not a power which was granted to the general government in the adoption of the constitution by the states. It is not one which was withheld by them. It is one which they never possessed, either to grant or to withhold. It is one of the essential and most important attributes of sovereignty; a sovereignty which no state ever possessed or claimed or attempted to exercise outside of its own boundaries. The source of this plenary power of legislation for the territories our courts have seldom, if ever, attempted to define. As to its existence, there is at this day no question. "Perhaps the power of governing a territory belonging to the United States, which has not, by becoming a state, acquired the means of self-government, may result necessarily from the facts that it is not within the jurisdiction of any particular state, and is within the power and jurisdiction of the United States. The right to govern may be the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire territory. Whichever may be the source from whence the power is derived, the possession of it is unquestioned. In legislating for them [the territories] congress exercises the combined power of the general and of a state government." Insurance Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet. 541. This language was commented upon and explained in the case of Dred Scott v. Sandford, but not so as to interfere with its application to cases such as the one at bar. "The distinction between federal and state jurisdictions under the constitution of the United States has no foundation in these territorial governments; and consequently no such distinction exists, either in respect to the jurisdiction of the courts or the subjects submitted to their cognizance. They are legislative governments, and their courts legislative courts; congress, in the exercise of its powers in the organization and government of the territories, combining the powers of both federal and state authorities. There is but one system of government or of laws within their limits, as neither is subject to constitutional provisions in respect to state and federal jurisdiction." Benner v. Porter, 9 How. 242.

It would seem that, beyond a doubt, the legislature of the territory of Wyoming had power and authority to pass the statute in question, including section 118, under the act of congress conferring legislative power extending "to all rightful subjects of legislation, not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States," (Rev. St. U. S. § 1851,) unless the exercise of that power is subject to some other objection than the one now under consideration. It is claimed that such is the case. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff in error that section 118 is within the congressional inhibition against the enactment of any law impairing the rights of private property. Id. § 1925. It may be that this language will include a law impairing the obligation of a contract, and that the principle contended for is correct; but it is not applicable, under the existing state of facts, to this case. The petitioner cannot claim and receive the advantages of the assignment law of Wyoming without subjecting himself to its conditions.

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff in error that, admitting that the assignor might have made a statutory assignment, securing the benefit of the statutory provision for his release by creditors accepting dividends, still he has not done so, but he has made a common-law assignment, under which no release can be had, thus waiving his right to such release. A careful scrutiny of the instrument does not reveal wherein it is not a statutory assignment. No single provision of the statute seems to have been violated or disregarded. It is argued that it is not a statutory assignment because it does not provide for the disposition of the dividends of those who refuse to accept their dividends and release the assignor. The statute does not require that it should. It would be difficult for the assignment itself to provide for this without being open to the objection of making preferences or reserving benefits to the assignor, or else in some way establishing a trust not for the equal benefit of creditors, and therefore in violation of the statute. The release is a matter which the statute provides for, and not the assignment; a result which the statute causes to follow the execution of an assignment according to the statutory terms; a result which the assignor can secure only by making his assignment comply with the requirements of the statute. When he has done this, the law provides for all else. It is also urged that the absence of a provision in the assignment for the disposition of unaccepted dividends makes the instrument vague, uncertain, and inoperative. We do not think so. The courts will be at no loss as to how these dividends should be disposed of under the law. It is contended that to require a release as the condition of paying a dividend is to make the assignment one for the benefit of releasing creditors only, in violation of its terms. This view is entirely erroneous. In fact, all of these objections apply rather to the statute than to the assignment. The law declares any assignment void "which gives preference of one debt or class of debts over another." The legislature did not consider this inconsistent with the provision that any creditor accepting his dividend should "release the assignor from all further liability on the claim or claims on which said payment may be made." Neither will the courts so consider it. None of the proceeds of the assigned property can go to the assignor until all the debts are paid. If the law operates to prefer releasing creditors, it is not the fault of the assignor; and, if this is a defect in the law, it is one that the courts cannot remedy. It does not appear but that all may be paid. The statute secures to each creditor the right to participate in the benefits of the assignment on equal terms with every other creditor. The deed of assignment is in strict conformity with the statute, and both operate for the equal benefit of all creditors, and place them on an equal footing. Two cases are referred to by plaintiff in error as supporting his argument that the assignment is not a statutory one. They are In re Bird, 39 Minn. 520, 40 N. W. Rep. 827, followed by In re Fuller, 42 Minn. 22, 43 N. W. Rep. 486. When these cases were heard, the assignment law passed in 1876 was in force in Minnesota, and it did not provide for any release. There was also an insolvent law in force in that state, not in terms like our assignment law, which did provide for a release. It provided that the assignment might be made for the equal benefit of all creditors who should file releases of their claims. What was really decided was that the assignors had not brought themselves within the terms of the insolvent law. Were these cases in point, we should hesitate long before following them, even if the great weight of authority were not the other way. The New Jersey courts, and the courts of a number of other states, whose statutes are more like ours than were those of Minnesota, uphold provisions similar to ours for the release of assigning debtors. We are able to decide this case in accordance both with the great weight of authority and with the plain and peremptory language of the statute. The order of the district court is affirmed.

ROY V. UNION MERCANTILE CO.

(Supreme Court of Wyoming. April 27, 1891.)

ATTACHMENT — FRAUDULENT ASSIGNMENT — APPEARANCE — BILL OF EXCEPTIONS — QUESTION NOT RAISED BELOW.

1. In attachment, where defendant denies the allegations of the affidavit, and has a trial on that issue, he cannot complain for the first time in the supreme court that the verification of the affidavit was defective.

2. Where, on attachment, defendant is personally served with summons, and appears to take issue upon the allegations of the affidavit, but makes no defense in the main action, the court acquires complete jurisdiction.

3. The fact that one who has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors retains possession of the property, and uses it in his business as before, without any attempt for nearly a month to carry out the purpose of the assignment, is sufficient evidence of fraud to sustain an attachment.

4. Where the bill of exceptions was allowed after the term, and the record fails to show that time was given under the Wyoming statute providing that time may be given for that purpose, the supreme court cannot review the ruling of the trial court on a motion for new trial.

5. Where the bill of exceptions fails to state that it contains all of the evidence, the court will not review the ruling of the trial court upon a motion for new trial on the ground that the judgment is not sustained by the evidence.

Error from district court, Laramie county.

J. C. Thompson and J. J. Rowen, for plaintiff in error. Lacey & Van Devanter, for defendant in error.

CONAWAY, J. This cause, which is brought in this court by petition in error by Horace A. Roy, who was defendant below, was begun by defendant in error in the district court of the first judicial district for Laramie county, November 18, 1886. The petition was filed and summons issued on that day. An affidavit for attachment and the proper undertaking were filed at the same time. The order of attachment was issued December 11th following. This is termed an "alias order," but it is the only one in the record, and is admitted to be the only one served. It was served December 15, 1886. On the 8th of October previous, plaintiff in error had made an assignment of all his property not exempt from execution, ostensibly for the benefit of his creditors, and had filed inventories of such property assigned on November 10 and 11, 1886, including the property seized by virtue of the attachment. He retained possession of the property assigned until it was so seized, which was on December 15, 1886. Plaintiff in error appeared in the court below, but did not contest the causes of action alleged against him in the petition of plaintiff, the defendant in error here. He traversed those allegations of the affidavit for attachment which called for and authorized the issuance of the writ, and moved the dissolution of the attachment on the ground that those allegations were untrue. Evidence was introduced, and a trial had, upon this issue. This motion was overruled, and he excepted. He objected to taxing the costs of the attachment proceedings as part of the costs of the cause, and to including them in the judgment. This motion was overruled, and he excepted. These are the matters complained of in the petition in error.

An objection claimed to be jurisdictional is raised in this court for the first time. It is based upon an alleged defect of form in the verification of the affidavit for attachment, and it is claimed, in one of the briefs of counsel, with some citations of authorities, that it is fatal to the jurisdiction in the attachment proceedings. This is followed by a numerous citation of authorities in an additional brief, to the point that errors or omissions which render the judgment void may be taken advantage of at any stage of the proceedings, and that questions which go to the jurisdiction are never waived. In this way, an alleged defect in the jurisdictional basis of the ancillary attachment proceedings seems to be perverted into an attack upon the jurisdiction of the court to hear and determine the cause to which these proceedings were appurtenant. As to this, it is sufficient to say that the juris-isdiction of the court to render judgment in this cause in no manner depended upon the attachment proceedings. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter beyond question. The record shows that jurisdiction of the person of the plaintiff in error was obtained by personal service of a summons upon him, and this was followed by his appearance in the court below, and such proceedings there as to amount to a submission to the jurisdiction. It may well be held that an appearance by a party to object to the jurisdiction, to move the court to dismiss the action for want of jurisdiction, or to move the court for any action, or ask the court for any relief, not involving the exercise of jurisdiction, but rather a refusal to exercise it, would not be an acknowledgement of the jurisdiction of the court or a submission to it. On the other hand, an appearance and moving the court for any action, or asking for any relief involving the exercise of jurisdiction, is such a submission and acknowledgment. Such was the course of the plaintiff in error in the court below. He appeared, but raised no question of jurisdiction. He made no defense to the causes of action alleged against him in the petition. But he did deny such allegations of the affidavit for attachment as authorized the issuance of the writ, and introduced evidence and had a trial upon the issues thus presented. He was then in court for all purposes. Waples, Attachm. p. 393. After this, it seems, it was too late to raise any question as to the sufficiency of the affidavit in any respect, or even as to its existence. He was no longer in position to question the validity of the attachment or the resulting lien, whatever might have been the case as to others. Drake, Attachm. § 112, and cases there cited. Much less can he now be heard to urge such matters as being fatal to the jurisdiction of the court, or as rendering the judgment void. If he had raised the objection in time, the utmost it could have accomplished, in any event, would have been the dissolution of the attachment. This would not have affected in any degree the jurisdiction of the court in the cause, to which the attachment proceeding was a mere incident. A tree is not felled by sawing off a limb. All that was really necessary to say upon this point is that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this cause by law, and of the person of the plaintiff in error by the personal service of the summons upon him. In deference to the labored and ingenious arguments of counsel, we have discussed the matter, perhaps, at undue length.

But one other point is urged on behalf of plaintiff in error. It is insisted that the action of the court below in overruling the motion of plaintiff in error to dissolve the attachment, and consequently allowing the costs of the attachment to be taxed as part of the costs of the action, and in refusing a rehearing and a new trial upon these points, is not sustained by the evidence. It would seem that the state of the record is such as to present two insuperable objections to the consideration of this point: First, the bill of ex-

1. As to the allowance of the bill. The law in force at the time of this trial, and until changed by the Session Laws of 1890, required that the party excepting should reduce his exception to writing, and present it to the court for allowance. It further provided that time might be given to reduce the exception to writing, but not beyond the first day of the next succeeding term of court. Then, if true, it was the duty of a majority of the judges composing the court, or of the court or judge before whom the trial was had, to allow and sign it. Under this law, a majority of the supreme court of the territory of Wyoming had held that the exception might be presented to and allowed by the judge in vacation. In 1890 the legislature, no doubt desiring to make the court in the future unanimous on the question, passed a law to the same effect. In this record it does not appear that any time was given to reduce the exceptions to writing, and to present them to the court or judge thereof. In such case, it is evident that any time beyond the trial term could be taken, if at all, only by consent of the opposite party. No such consent appears. At page 192 of the transcript of the record appears the following: "Each of the foregoing orders and decisions having been duly entered on the record of the court in the case, the defendant forthwith, after the entry of the orders and decisions, caused to be noted at the end thereof, on said record, the exception thereto. The foregoing bill of exceptions is hereby settled and allowed. [Signed] W. L. MAGINNIS, Chief Justice, Judge, etc. [Seal.]" This is followed on the next page, without any intervening matter, by an attestation by the clerk under the seal of the court, dated February 11, 1889; and this is all that the record discloses of this branch of the case. It does not show that the plaintiff in error had any time given him beyond the term to reduce his exceptions to writing and present them to the court or judge. It does not show that this was done within any time which could lawfully have been given for such purposes, i. e., not beyond the first day of the next succeeding term. This cause was tried at the term of court commencing in November, 1886. The court will take judicial knowledge of the fact that the next succeeding term would convene in the following May, and the record reveals that this last-mentioned term was in fact held. It is not doubted that if time had been given until the first day of the May, 1887, term, to reduce the exceptions to writing, the judge might, in the exercise of a wise judicial discretion, have taken additional time to examine and settle the bill of exceptions. It is a violent assumption that he would take from May, 1887, to February, 1889, for that purpose. At all events, the record does not show that the exceptions were even reduced to writing within the utmost time that could lawfully have been given. This court has no legal right and no disposition to ignore or evade these positive provisions of the statute. The provisions, especially as to time, are salutary. It is a matter of no small importance that the exceptions should be reduced to writing and presented for allowance promptly, while the matters of exception are fresh in the mind of the judge and counsel. It is also desirable that there should be, within some reasonable time, an end to litigation.

2. The bill of exceptions nowhere states that it contains all of the evidence introduced in the trial of the issue in the attachment proceedings. Where a judgment or finding is assailed as not sustained by sufficient evidence, this is indispensable. This court cannot say whether or not the judgment of the court below, including, as it does, the costs of the attachment proceedings, is sustained by the evidence, unless it is affirmatively shown that all of the evidence upon which such judgment or finding was rendered is before this court. This should be done by the bill of exceptions itself. It is argued for plaintiff in error that the certificate of the clerk sufficiently shows that the transcript of the record contains all of the evidence. It is not competent to show this fact by the certificate of the clerk. The truth of the bill of exceptions, as to whether or not it correctly and fully states all of the evidence, as well as to all other of its contents, is to be ascertained by the trial court or the judge thereof, and authenticated, when so ascertained, by the signature of the judge. The office of the certificate of the clerk, in so far as it affects the bill of exceptions, is simply to identify it as the identical bill which is made part of the record in the cause in the court below. With the truth or falsity of its contents he has nothing to do, and his certificate cannot and does not go to these questions at all. Neither does it attempt to do so. The language of the certificate in this cause, so far as it affects this question, is to the effect that "the hereto annexed and next following leaves, numbered from 1 to 192, both inclusive, are a full, true, and correct transcript of the files, proceedings, journal entries, and record in the action," etc. To construe this into an assurance that the transcript so certified to contains all of the evidence is to hold that the "files, proceedings, journal entries, and record" must contain all of the evidence. Such is not the law. The evidence need not be part of the record, unless made so by the bill of exceptions, and then only so much of it as is necessary to explain the exceptions. Where the exception to a verdict of a jury, or a finding or judgment of the court, is that it is not sustained by the evidence, it is necessary to set forth the entire evidence. The bill of exceptions does not show that this is done. Therefore, as well as for reasons already given, we cannot consider the question whether the judgment of the court below is sustained by the evidence or not.

We announce these views all the more cheerfully because, waiving these questions, if they can be waived, or considering that we may be mistaken in them, we find that the evidence presented by the bill of exceptions, whether it be all of the evidence or only a part, is amply sufficient to sustain the judgment of the district court. The plaintiff in error himself testifies that he retained possession of the property assigned, after the assignment, the same as before, and used it in his work and business just the same. He explains his possession as that of the assignee, as his agent. Such possession of the assigned property, by the assignor, after making the assignment, is very generally held to be presumptive evidence of fraud. It is not material that the assignor claims that he holds such possession as agent of the assignee. It is the fact of possession that the law regards, and not the pretext or excuse for such possession. When to the fact of possession is added the continual use of the property for his own benefit, with no movement towards carrying out the avowed purpose of the assignment, and nothing done in the interest of creditors, from November 18th to December 15th, this would seem to be something more than mere evidence of a fraudulent purpose in making the assignment, sufficient to avoid it; it would seem to be, pro tanto, to the extent of the value of the benefit derived by the assignor from the use of the assigned property, as well as in the delay, and the deterioration of the property by using it, an actual, accomplished fraud. These are some, but by no means all, of the matters appearing from the evidence, which courts have very generally concurred in recognizing as the ear-marks of fraud; and these are sufficient, at least, to raise a presumption of fraud, and to sustain the attachment. There is an attempt to justify the retention of possession of the assigned property by the assignor on the ground of delay by the assignee to execute his bond, as such, until the day the attachment suit was commenced. The law of voluntary assignments in force in Wyoming at the time of these proceedings did not allow the assignee to dispose of the real estate conveyed to him by the assignment before executing his bond. This was the only restriction. When not prohibited by the statute, or by terms imposed by the assignor in the deed of assignment, an assignee may execute his trust, as such, without giving bond. Besides, plaintiff in error retained possession of this property, after the assignee executed and filed his bond, on the 18th day of November, until the property was seized under the attachment, the 15th day of December, and all this time used it as his own. All this appears from the testimony of plaintiff in error himself. There were a large number of exceptions taken to rulings of the trial court in the admission and rejection of testimony. These are, however, not urged by the present attorneys for plaintiff in error. The most that could be said of these exceptions, allowing them all to be valid and well taken, is that, in that event, they would constitute error without prejudice; for, on the testimony of plaintiff in error alone, the judgment must be affirmed.

STATE ex rel. MADDOX v. KENNEY, Auditor.

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 15, 1891.)

MANDAMUS — TO STATE AUDITOR — PAYMENT FOR STATE REPORTS.

Comp. St. Mont. div. 5, § 1993, provides that the state reporter shall publish 300 copies of each volume of the State Reports, "provided that the same shall be paid for at the rate of six dollars for each volume of 600 pages, and that each volume of more than 600 pages shall be paid for at the same rate for the number of pages exceeding 600," and that upon delivery the auditor "shall issue to the said reporter a warrant for the amount to be found as provided above, and also a warrant for the sum of three hundred dollars, to cover the expenses of stationery and clerical work: * * * provided, that the whole expense of publication and preparation of a full volume of such Reports shall not exceed the sum of two thousand one hundred dollars." Held, that mandamus will lie to compel the auditor to issue a warrant to the reporter for the payment of all pages in excess of 600 at the rate of $6 for 600 pages.

Application for mandamus by State ex rel. Fletcher Maddox against E. A. Kenney, state auditor.

Thos. C. Bach, for petitioner. H. J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HARWOOD, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the state auditor to draw a warrant in favor of relator for the sum of $150, claimed to be due and payable to him from the state, pursuant to the statute, to complete the payment for 300 copies of volume 9 of the Supreme Court Reports of this state. Relator is official reporter of the supreme court. By provisions of statute it is his duty to edit and cause to be published reports of the opinions and decisions of said court, in volumes of not less than 600 pages each. It appears by relator's affidavit that he prepared for publication and caused to be published volume 9 of such Reports; that the same contained 650 pages; and that on the 13th day of January, 1891, pursuant to the provisions of statute, relator delivered to the librarian of the Montana library 300 copies of said volume; that under the provisions of section 1993, div. 5, Comp. St., hereinafter quoted, the state auditor issued to relator a warrant for the sum of $6 per volume for said volumes, amounting to the aggregate sum of $1,800, and for the further sum of $300, "to cover the expenses of stationery and clerical work in the preparation" of said volume, and refused to issue relator a warrant for any greater amount. There is no controversy as to the facts in this case. The contention as to the true intent and meaning of said section 1993, div. 5, Comp. St., and an interpretation thereof, will determine this case. Said statute, as found amended, (16th Sess. Laws, p. 218,) provides as follows: "Sec. 1993. The reporter of such volume shall print and bind three hundred copies of such edition at the expense of the state; provided, that the same shall be paid for at the rate of six dollars for each volume of six hundred pages, and that each volume of more than six hundred pages shall be paid for at the same rate for the number of pages exceeding six hundred; and upon the reporter's delivering to the librarian of the Montana library three hundred copies of such edition, the auditor of the state shall issue to the said reporter a warrant for the amount to be found due as provided above, and also a warrant for the sum of three hundred dollars, to cover the expenses of stationery and clerical work in the preparation of each volume; provided, that the whole expense of publication and preparation of a full volume of such Reports shall not exceed the sum of two thousand one hundred dollars to the state." Relator insists that under the provisions of the statute quoted he is entitled to $650 per volume for said reports delivered to the librarian, inasmuch as the volume contained 650 pages, or the further sum of $150 from the state.

REPORTS, VOL. 10.

What is the true intent and meaning of the legislative assembly, as manifest by the language of said statute? The statute itself prescribes a rule relative to its construction which will aid in answering this question. That rule is found in section 630, Code Civil Proc., declared as follows: "In the construction of a statute or instrument the office of the judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted; and where there are several provisions or particulars, such a construction is, if possible, to be adopted, as will give effect to all." Now, there is no difficulty in giving effect to all of the "provisions and particulars" of the statute in question. In expounding the intention manifest in a statute all of its provisions should be considered. Referring to section 1992, which is a part of the same act, we find it provides that the reporter "shall publish a volume of such Reports as often as there is sufficient matter to form a volume of not less than six hundred pages." A volume of 600 pages fills the requirement of the statute in that particular, and is undoubtedly "a full volume," referred to in the second proviso of section 1993. The payment for preparation, printing, and delivery of 300 copies of a volume containing 600 pages is limited to $2,100. The relator asks nothing more than that for 600 pages, bound in said volume. No doubt the provision is wise, for without the requirement fixing the minimum quantity of matter which shall constitute a volume of Reports the state might, in the course of publication, be found paying the same rate for a volume containing much less matter. But as there may be a greater or less number of pages bound in a volume, the legislative assembly provided that the volumes of our Reports should not contain "less than six hundred pages," and also provided "that the same shall be paid for at the rate of six dollars for each volume of six hundred pages, and that each volume of more than six hundred pages shall be paid for at the same rate for the number of pages exceeding six hundred," and that the auditor "shall issue to said reporter a warrant for the amount to be found due as above." The "amount to be found due as provided above" means simply $6 for the volume of 600 pages, with payment at the same rate for any additional pages bound in the same volume, which was simply a mathematical calculation. If more than 600 pages are bound in volume 9, and this paid for, the excess will not have to be paid for in volume 10, nor will the state have to pay any sum whatever "to cover expenses of stationery and clerical work" in the preparation of such excess over 600 pages. We think, without doubt, the relator is entitled to the further sum of $150, under the provisions of the statute quoted. To hold otherwise would deny all force and effect to the provision for the payment for the preparation, printing, and binding of the matter contained in the volume in excess of 600 pages. To our view, every provision and particular of the law may be given its full force and effect according to the evident intention of the legislative assembly. It is ordered that the writ of mandate issue as prayed for in the relator's petition.

OELS V. HELENA & L. SMELTING & REDUCTION CO.

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 15, 1901.)

CHANGE OF VENUE—PLEADING.

1. Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 59, provides that actions on contract may be tried in the county in which the contract was to be performed, and actions for torts in the county where the tort was committed, subject, however, to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as provided in the act. Held that, where an employe brought suit in Jefferson county for personal injuries received while employed upon a railroad therein, a change of venue will not be granted, although such railroad is owned by a smelting company whose principal place of business is in another county.

2. A complaint which alleged that the railroad was situated in Jefferson county, and that at the time of the injury plaintiff was "in the employment of the defendant as brakeman * * * upon such railroad" sufficiently sets forth where the contract of employment was to be performed.

Appeal from district court, Jefferson county; THOMAS J. GALBRAITH, Judge.

Action for personal injuries by N. C. Oels against the Helena & Livingstone Smelting & Reduction Company.

Callen, Sanders & Shelton, for appellant. R. G. Davies, for respondent.

HARWOOD, J. This appeal is from an order made by the district court of the fifth judicial district, within and for Jefferson county, denying appellant's motion for a change of the place of trial from said county to the county of Lewis and Clarke. For the purposes of this appeal it is admitted that defendant is a corporation, and has its principal place of business at the city of Helena, county of Lewis and Clarke. The cause of action alleged in plaintiff's complaint is to the effect that at a stated time defendant was the owner and in control of a certain railroad lying within the county of Jefferson, used by defendant for the transportation of ores over the same from its mines to its smelter; that plaintiff was in the employment of defendant as brakeman upon certain cars drawn upon and over said railroad by steam motive power; that while in such employment, and in the performance of his duty as such brakeman, through the negligence and carelessness of defendant, and without fault or negligence on the part of plaintiff, he received certain bodily injuries, which are set forth and described, whereby he alleges that he was damaged in the sum of $20,000. Defendant filed a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint, and an affidavit of merits, setting forth, among other things, the fact that defendant is a resident of the county of Lewis and Clarke, and was there served with summons in this action; and, upon the facts set forth, demanded that the place for the trial of said action be changed to the county of Lewis and Clarke. It is provided in section 61, Code Civil Proc., that, "if the county in which the action is commenced is not the proper county for the trial thereof, the action may, notwithstanding, be tried therein, unless the defendant, at the time he appears and answers or demurs, files an affidavit of merits, and demands in writing that the trial be had in the proper county." Plaintiff's counsel in his brief urges the point that such demand was not made at the time of filing the demurrer, and for that reason the motion for change was properly overruled. But the record does not show when the affidavit of merits and demand for change was filed. Nor is there any showing that the motion for change of place of trial was overruled on the ground that the demand was made too late. It is also admitted by counsel that said affidavit and demand, as well as the other papers contained in this record, were used on the hearing of defendant's motion for a change. For these reasons we do not pass upon that point, but will consider the main question as to the right of defendant to the change demanded. It is provided in section 59, Id., that "actions on contract may be tried in the county in which the contract was to be performed, and actions for torts in the county where the tort was committed, subject, however, to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in this act." Counsel for appellant contends that, in view of the peculiar language of the complaint in this action, it must be held to be an action for the breach of a contract relation, and that it does not appear by the terms of the contract, as set forth, where the same was to be performed, and therefore the change demanded should be granted. It clearly appears from the complaint that a contract relation of employer and employee existed between plaintiff and defendant, and the complaint also shows that the contract of employment and service was to be performed in Jefferson county. It is alleged that the railroad upon which defendant was employed was "lying within the county of Jefferson;" and that plaintiff, at the time of the injury complained of, "was in the employment of the defendant as brakeman upon certain cars propelled by steam upon said railroad;" and that, while plaintiff was performing his duty "upon a car in the service of defendant upon said railroad," the alleged injury occurred. We do not agree with the learned counsel for defendant that it does not appear from the language of the complaint where the contract set forth therein was to be performed. If plaintiff was employed by defendant in the capacity of brakeman upon its railroad, "lying within the county of Jefferson," the contract for service must be performed in Jefferson county. Then the injury alleged, and for which plaintiff demands the payment of damages, is also averred as having been committed in Jefferson county. This is an example of those cases of which Mr. Bishop remarks: "There is in the legal field a not well-defined space, within which tort and contract mingle or blend or overlap each other, in ways partly plain and familiar and partly obscure." Bish. Non-Cont. Law, § 72; Bish. Cont. §§ 183-187, 216, 228. But, in whatever view counsel may regard this action as respects its nature, we do not think defendant is entitled to a change of place of trial on the grounds presented. It is unnecessary to pass upon the point presented, as to the residence of a corporate existence; for, should we hold as contended by defendant, still it would not be entitled to a change of place of trial on the ground of residence, for the reasons above set forth. The order appealed from is affirmed, with costs.

GALLATIN CANAL CO. v. LAY.

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 23, 1891.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—DAMAGES AND BENEFITS—RECORD—AMENDMENTS TO STATEMENT FOR NEW TRIAL.

1. In actions for damages, where land was taken for canal purposes, the testimony of a witness as to damages may be considered, although he does not testify as to benefits.

2. A court need not make separate findings of damages and benefits, when there is no evidence of benefits in any sum whatever.

3. Where amendments were allowed to a statement on motion for a new trial by inserting words and matter at different places, and the same were tacked at the end of the statement with reference to pages and lines, the supreme court will not consider such amendments.

Appeal from district court, Gallatin county; FRANK HENRY, Judge.

Henry C. Smith and E. P. Cadwell, for appellant. Chas. S. Hartman, for respondent.

DE WITT, J. This is an appeal from an award of damages for the taking of land of the respondent for the purposes of a canal. Commissioners were appointed in the statutory manner, who appraised the amount of damages. From their award defendant appealed to the district court, wherein the matter was tried by the court, and findings made in favor of defendant in the sum of $215, the value of the land taken, and for $785 damages. Judgment was entered accordingly. The canal company appeals from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and from the judgment. We will examine the points presented by counsel for appellant.

1. Appellant argues at the bar that the decision is not supported by the evidence in that there was no evidence of the value of the land at the date of the summons, basing his position upon section 609, Code Civil Proc., which provides that the actual value of the land at the date of the summons shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken, and basis of damages to property not actually taken, but injuriously affected. But the record discloses no specification upon this point, and it cannot be considered. The last utterance of this court on that question is in Carron v. Wood, 10 Mont. —, 26 Pac. Rep. 388.

2. There is evidence of a number of witnesses that the land taken was worth $20 an acre. The court found that the land was worth $215. Appellant contends that there is no testimony of the number of acres taken, and hence no evidence by which the court could arrive at a total of $215. Again, consulting the specifications, we find, "fifth," that the appellant expressly specifies that it is admitted that there were 10½ acres taken by the canal, which acreage, at the value of $20, gives a total of $215, as found by the court.

3. Appellant claims that there was error, in that witnesses were interrogated, and allowed to testify, as to damages in gross, as he calls it; whereas they should have testified as to damages and injuries to the premises, and again as to benefits; and, citing appellant's brief, "the difference, if any, is the damage allowed to the land not taken, but the result is for the court, and not the witnesses,—it is the conclusion for the court to find, not for the witnesses to state." As a matter of course, evidence as to all damages is competent, and evidence as to all benefits is competent. But counsel seem to take the position that the witness must not speak of damages, unless, in the same utterance, he tells what he knows of the benefits,—that is to say, that he must have them each in his mind at once, and weigh them each; and that when he has finished speaking he must have presented either a net result, or the facts from which the hearer may at once deduce the net result, and say what is the balance in favor of damage, if any,—that is to say, that when a witness, in his testimony, finally informs the court or jury what the damage is, the sum arrived at must be a balance after deducting the benefits. But, in the nature of things, when a witness is asked as to damages, he thinks of injuries alone as distinguished from benefits, and responds accordingly; and when the inquiry is as to benefits, his reply is upon that subject. Appellant objects that the questions were directed to damages alone, and not to benefits, and that he, inquiring about damages, should have elicited information about benefits. The simple reply to appellant's position is that, if the canal company were interested in proving benefits, they had ample opportunity for cross-examination to ascertain whether respondent's witnesses had considered benefits in arriving at their figures, and of introducing direct evidence on that point. We have recently touched upon this proposition in Carron v. Wood, supra.

4. Appellant insists that there should have been separate findings of the court of the amount of damages and benefits. But the condition of the evidence upon the subject of benefits makes this matter immaterial to the appellant in this case. The whole evidence as to benefits is that two witnesses said that the cattle could drink from the canal. One said that if there is any seepage it would make the grass grow better, and another said that the canal makes water all the time, and he found it very convenient to have water upon all his fields. Not a witness testifies that the canal was a benefit in any sum whatever. A finding of benefits in any amount could not, therefore, have been sustained by the evidence; and if, on the evidence, the court had found that there were no benefits, such finding would not have helped the appellant. We are of opinion that appellant has no complaint on this ground. In the preparation of the statement, on motion for a new trial, it appears that amendments were suggested by the respondent. The amendments were allowed by the district judge in the following language: "The foregoing statement, after the same has been amended by allowing the amendments offered by the defendant, * * * is allowed and settled." The amendments refer to changing words and inserting matter at different places in the statement in its original draft. Instead of making the amendments as the court ordered, and putting them into the statement at the appropriate places, the compiler tacked them on at the end of the statement, in their original language, with reference to pages and lines of the original draft. When a copy of the statement is made and sent to this court, with pages and lines all changed, and this court undertakes to arrange the amendments in their proper places, (work which should have been done by the compiler,) the matter is wholly unintelligible. The result is that we will disregard the amendments. We have heretofore endeavored to speak of this matter in unmistakable language, and we add this utterance to a long line of remarks in former cases. We find no error in the record. The order and judgment of the district court are affirmed, with costs.

WATERBURY V. BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF DEER LODGE COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 15, 1891.)

COUNTY SUBJECT TO GARNISHMENT—DEBT OF OFFICER.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 189, providing that all persons having possession or control of credits or property of defendant, or owing him, shall be liable as garnishees, etc., and Gen. Laws Mont. § 202, providing that the word "person" may extend to bodies politic and corporate, a county may be garnished for debts owed by it to one of its officers.

2. Such construction of the statutes is not contrary to public policy, as tending to impede the exercise of its functions, and to impair the usefulness of its servants.

Appeal from district court, Deer Lodge county; CHARLES S. MARSHALL, Judge.

The plaintiff herein brought an action in the justice's court against Thomas Harnon. The defendant in that action was at that time a deputy-sheriff of Deer Lodge county, working in that capacity upon a fixed salary. The action before the justice of the peace was upon a money demand, and the plaintiff therein obtained, in the ordinary manner, a writ of attachment against the property of the defendant Harnon. In pursuance to this writ of attachment the constable levied upon and attached in the possession of, and under control of, the defendant herein the sum of $347.81 belonging to said Harnon, and due and owing him from the defendant herein, by delivering true copies of the writ, and leaving the same with the chairman and clerk of the board of county commissioners and treasurer of the county, together with notices that all debts owing by the county to said Harnon, and all credits and other personal property in the possession of said county belonging to said Harnon, were attached in pursuance to said writ. Afterwards plaintiff recovered judgment against Harnon in the justice's court for $210.40. Execution was issued, which was served upon the county, with similar notice of garnishment as in the service of the writ of attachment; that at the time of the service of said respective writs the said county had in its possession and was owing said Harnon $347.80, and answered the writ by its chairman and clerk to that effect. The judgment against Harnon has not been satisfied, and the county defendant herein has not paid any part of said money to plaintiff in that action. The said sum of money was due from the county to said Harnon for services as deputy-sheriff and expenses about said office. At the time of the levy the county had allowed said sum to Harnon. The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, of which the foregoing is a summary, and the decision of the district court was asked upon the point whether the defendant herein, under those facts and the law, can be charged as garnishee as to the sum of $347.80, or any part thereof. The district court gave judgment for the county, and plaintiff Waterbury appeals from that judgment. The portion of the laws subject to construction are as follows: Code Civil Proc. § 189. "All persons having in their possession or under their control any credits or other personal property belonging to the defendant, or owing any debts to the defendant, at the time of service upon them of a copy of the writ and notice, as provided in the last section, shall * * * be liable to the plaintiff for the amount of such credits," etc. A statutory construction of the word "person" is found in section 202, Gen. Laws, which says: "The word 'person' may extend and be applied to bodies politic and corporate." Section 744, Gen. Laws, provides "that each organized county of the state shall be a body politic and corporate, and, as such, shall be empowered for the following purposes: To sue and be sued; to make all contracts and do all other acts in relation to the property and concerns [of the county] necessary to the exercise of its corporate or administrative powers; to exercise other and further powers as may be specially conferred by law," etc. The question now before this court is simply whether the county defendant is liable as garnishee under the facts agreed upon and the law as cited.

George B. Winston, for appellant. Henri J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., and W. S. Shaw, Co. Atty., for respondent.

DE WITT, J., (after stating the facts as above.) This action arose while this commonwealth was a territory of the United States, and the laws applicable to the contention are set forth in the introductory statement. The garnishment of towns, cities, and counties has been the subject of such conflicting views in different states, and being a first impression in this court, we incline to adopt the language of Judge Welch in City of Newark v. Funk, 15 Ohio St. 463: "In other states authorities are quite conflicting; so much so, that we do not feel bound by any of them, and see nothing to prevent us from deciding the question as an original one, according to our own views of public policy and the meaning and intent of the statute." This conflict to some extent, but by no means wholly, dissolves, upon an inspection of the statutes upon which the decisions are made. In 2 Wade, Attachm. §§ 345, 419, are marshaled the states holding diverse views, and the author concludes that the majority is against holding municipal corporations as garnishees. But the author doubts the soundness, and questions the reason, of the rule. There is eminently respectable opinion upon the other side of the question. An analysis of the cases would be interesting, but we will not enter upon it, by reason of the direct conflict of the decisions, even upon similar statutes; and, furthermore, we are of opinion that the statutes of this state are so much more explicit upon the subject under consideration, that many of the decisions of sister states are inapplicable, and that, in view of our statute, the weight of authority is not against the liability of a county as a garnishee. It is not doubted that the statute may exempt a county from the process of garnishment. Our statute does not so exempt a county; and, if they are to be exempted, the authority must be found elsewhere than in the express declaration of the statute. Again, the statute may subject a county to this process. Now what do we find in the written law? It declares that "all persons" having in their possession or under their control any credits or other personal property belonging to the defendant, or owing debts to him, etc., shall be liable to the process. Furthermore, that the word "person" may be applied to "bodies politic and corporate." Hence counties, as "bodies politic and corporate," are brought within the meaning of the word "persons," and all persons may be garnished. It is therefore no strained conclusion to say that a county is subject to the process. Speaking of holding a county as garnishee, Judge RIDDLE (Wallace v. Lawyer, 54 Ind. 506) says: "And the decisions are generally made upon statutes authorizing corporations, in terms, to be garnished; yet the courts hold that the general word 'corporation' must be restricted to mean private or ordinary business corporations, and not extended to embrace municipal corporations, or bodies politic and corporate. The words used in the statute of this state are 'persons' or 'corporations,' in general terms." But the statute of Montana, as above noticed, goes further than to use the words "persons" or "corporation" in general terms, as in Indiana, and the remarks of the judge in that case, and the authorities to which he refers, lose their force in this court. It is a general principle that one who may be sued may be garnished by the creditor of the person who may sue. Counties, with us, may be sued, (section 744, Gen. Laws,) and, therefore, under the general rule, they would be subject to garnishment. They, in this respect, do not come within the reason of exempting a sovereign state from garnishment, which sovereignty may not be sued, or ordinarily subjected to process of the courts. It being clear that the statute does not expressly exempt counties from garnishment, and it being equally clear that the letter of the statute is such that it can be reasonably applied to a county as a subject of garnishment, is there anything in the spirit of the law or the doctrine of public policy which prohibits such a construction?

We will examine, in the light of the statute, the reasons adduced for exempting counties from this process of the courts. It is objected that there is practical difficulty in summoning an artificial entity, like a county, to be examined on oath respecting its possession of property of the debtor, as provided in section 190, Code Civil Proc., and that so summoning its officers is a serious interruption to the business of the county and its officers. We cannot agree with this view. The statute (section 749, Gen. Laws) expressly provided a method for service of process against a county in all legal proceedings. In another portion of the statute (section 72) service of a summons upon a county is provided for. Answering a garnishment is by no means as large an affair as appearing in an action as a defendant. The statute providing a method for summoning a county in legal proceedings, we can see no particular difficulty in its appearing. There was certainly none in this case, and no derangement of the county's business. Again, it is said that the writ does not lie against a county by reason of its being contrary to public policy; that disasters to the public would ensue if the writ were allowed, and public servants would be impaired in their usefulness. In Wallace v. Lawyer, supra, it was held that a county cannot be held to answer as to its indebtedness to an execution debtor for his salary as an officer of such county in proceedings supplemental to execution. This case cites with approval Merwin v. City of Chicago, 45 Ill. 133, which was a case of garnishment of a municipal corporation, in which the court, by LAWRENCE, J. says: "The only question presented by this record is whether municipal corporations in this state are liable to the process of garnishment. This court held in City of Chicago v. Hasley, 25 Ill. 595, that the property of such a corporation could not be levied on and sold under execution. This decision was placed upon the grounds of public policy. However strong the obligation of a town or city to pay its debts, it was considered that to allow payment to be enforced by execution would so far impair the usefulness and power of the corporation in the discharge of its government functions that the public good required the denial of such a right. * * * Although this decision is not conclusive upon the question before us as res adjudicata, yet the entire spirit and reasoning upon which it is based must lead us to hold that a municipal corporation is not liable to the process of garnishment. The question has been often before the American courts, and, although the decisions are not uniform, in a large majority of the cases it has been held that the writ would not lie. The reason given for these decisions is uniformly the same, and is substantially that given by this court in the case in 25 Ill.: 'It must be decided as a question of public policy. These municipal corporations are in the exercise of governmental powers to a very large extent. They control pecuniary interests of great magnitude, and vast numbers of human beings, who are more dependent on the municipal, for the security of life and property, than they are on either the state or federal, government. To permit the great public duties of this corporation to be imperfectly performed, in order that individuals may the better collect their private debts, would be to pervert the great objects of its creation.' Thus it is observed that 45 Ill. 133, on the subject of garnishment of a municipal corporation, adopts the reasoning of 25 Ill. 595, in the matter of an execution against the corporation, on a judgment obtained directly against the corporation. The grounds for denying an execution against a corporation are most satisfactorily put in 25 Ill., City of Chicago v. Hasley. The court well points out the disasters which might follow the levy of execution against the city of Chicago; how the seizure of the water-works would precipitate a water famine, the levy upon fire-engines would expose to the horrors of conflagration, and the seizure of revenues would paralyze government. To these views we have no dissent. But we cannot follow the Illinois court in 45 Ill. when it applies these arguments to the matter of garnishment of the municipal corporation. By garnishment the water-works, fire-engines, public buildings, and revenues of the corporation are not seized. The corporation is simply required to hold, and finally pay over, a sum of money or property, in which it has no interest, to one person rather than another. Its business is not interrupted; its property is not touched; its functions are not deranged.

Returning to the case at bar, we cannot agree that there is any reason why the great public duties of a county need be imperfectly performed, or that its business is in any danger of derangement, if it be compelled, by process of a court, to pay the salary of a servant to that servant's creditors. The county has no suit to defend, no counsel to employ, no witnesses to collect and pay. It has no burden cast upon it, and no duty to perform, except to act as temporary stakeholder, to await the determination of a court, in an action in which the county has no interest.

The argument of public policy as to inconvenience to the county and its officers does not reach our mind with sufficient force to impair another view of law and of right that is recognised throughout the civilized world; that is, that debtors should pay their debts. This, of course, with the modification that the means of livelihood should be left to the debtor, which view is embodied in the laws of exemption from execution, which in this state are very liberal. The debtor's earnings for 30 days prior to the levy of a writ are exempt from seizure. The servant of the county is thus secured in his support, if he earns it, and the county is not liable to lose the services of competent officers. Indeed, it has never been observed that a county has difficulty in obtaining employees to do its work, and the county may surely obtain as good service from those who pay their debts as from those who avoid such payment, and are protected in the avoidance by the unsatisfying doctrine of public policy.

We conclude that there is no substantial argument from public policy which requires us to read the law as to garnishment of counties differently from what its letter seems to us to declare. Counties are not exempted from garnishment by statute. On the contrary, their liability to the process is within the letter of the law. We find nothing in the spirit or the doctrine of public policy which induces to add to or take from the letter. The judgment of the district court is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to that court to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $210.40, and interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from the 12th day of March, 1888, and for the costs of this appeal.

WATER-RIGHTS—TRIAL—FAILURE TO MAKE FINDINGS.

In an action to restrain the diversion of water from a creek claimed by plaintiffs, the court found that plaintiffs were entitled to the use of waters therein, but did not find specifically how much; it also found that defendant was entitled to use so much of the water as flowed in the north channel of the creek. The plaintiffs requested the court to find the number of inches of water to which they were entitled. Held, that to avoid a multiplicity of suits, and in order to finally determine the rights of the parties, the finding should have been made; especially as Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 280, provides that no judgment shall be reversed for want of a finding of facts, at the instance of any party who shall not have requested such finding.

Appeal from district court, Deer Lodge county; D. M. DURFER, Judge.

Roblison & Stapleton, for appellants. O. B. O'Bannon and Forbis & Forbis, for respondent.

BLAKE, C. J. The complaint alleges, in substance, that the plaintiffs (who are the appellants) are the owners of 500 inches of water flowing in Tin-Cup Joe creek, and have been using the same more than 18 years; that their predecessors in interest made an appropriation thereof in 1867 for the purpose of irrigating crops; that the defendant (who is the respondent) has been for a long time diverting this water from the stream, and depriving the plaintiffs of its use, and threatens to continue such diversion. The complaint was verified July 26, 1887. The answer consists of denials, which admit, however, that the plaintiffs are the owners of 80 inches of said water, and that the same has been used since 1867 by the plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest, and that the plaintiffs are the prior appropriators thereof. The answer denies that defendant has deprived the plaintiffs of the use of said water, or has threatened to continue any diversion thereof, and "denies that five hundred (500) inches of said waters are or always have been required or needed to irrigate the land mentioned in the complaint, or any greater amount than one hundred and forty-four (144) inches." The answer was filed July 30, 1887. The relief prayed for was a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendant from diverting said water, and depriving the plaintiffs of the same. The action was tried by the court without a jury, and the following findings of fact were filed: Prior to the year 1879, the ditch in controversy was constructed by the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest, and their "right to the water was recognized by all parties from that time." The plaintiffs, since the year 1879, "have used the said ditch and waters of said Tin-Cup Joe creek to the full capacity of the said ditch, when there was sufficient water to fill the same, and without any interruption from said defendant. * * * That at the time of the commencement of this action the plaintiffs were entitled to the use of the waters of Tin-Cup Joe creek to an amount of not less than eighty (80) inches, nor more than one hundred and forty-four (144) inches, measured by the laws of Montana, the exact amount it is unnecessary to find herein, for the reason set out in findings hereinafter mentioned. That the plaintiffs on the day of the commencement of this action, and for some time previous thereto, and during the irrigating season of 1887, had been using the waters of said creek to the full extent of their right to said waters, as far as defendant is concerned. * * * That defendant, at the time of the commencement of this suit, was entitled to use of the waters of said creek the amount of which flowed in the north channel of Tin-Cup Joe creek. * * * That the defendant, in the year 1880, appropriated the water that was flowing in said north channel, and used every year thereafter, up to the commencement of this suit, said waters so appropriated, for the irrigation of a tract of land owned by the defendant. * * * That the waters of said Tin-Cup Joe creek divide at the point * * * into two channels, one called the 'South Channel,' and the other the 'North Channel,' and that the waters naturally flow in said channel in the following proportions, to-wit, one-third in the north channel, and two-thirds in the south channel. * * * That the defendant in the year 1887 used only the waters flowing in said north channel, and in no greater amount than he had used in the preceding years after his said appropriation. * * * The defendant has not diverted or used any of the waters of said creek belonging to or owned by the plaintiffs, or either of them. * * * The point of diversion on the part of defendant is below the point of diversion of the plaintiffs. * * * The defendant takes the water out of the north channel of said creek, and by means of a ditch carries it to the south channel, below the head of plaintiffs' ditch, and from said south channel runs the water into a ditch which carries it onto defendant's land. * * * That at the time of the commencement of this action, and for a time previous thereto, and thereafter, waters to the amount of from fifteen to thirty inches were flowing down said south channel past the head of plaintiffs' ditch." The court found, as a conclusion of law, that "the plaintiffs are not entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from diverting the water," and judgment was entered for the defendant for his costs.

It appears from one bill of exceptions that "at the trial of said cause, after the same had been argued by counsel, and before the same was submitted to the court for its decision, the said plaintiffs, among other things submitted to the court to find on as facts, asked the court to find definitely the amount of water that plaintiffs were entitled to and owned, and drew up a finding, and presented the same to the court, to find on as to the same, and which requests were as follows: * * * That plaintiffs own, and have ever since prior to the year 1879 owned, the waters of said Tin-Cup Joe creek, to the extent and amount of — inches, measured under a six-inch pressure, and in the manner provided in the laws of Montana for the measurement of water; and that the court failed to find on said question as to the definite amount of water owned by plaintiffs." It is evident that this was one of the material issues in the case, and we are unable to find a legal reason for its omission by the court. The rights of the parties demanded that this matter should be passed upon so that the litigation growing out of the controversy might be finally determined. The plaintiffs are entitled by appropriation to the prior use of a certain quantity of the water which flows in Tin-Cup Joe creek, and it is not a valid finding to state that this is not less than 80 inches, and not more than 144 inches. The diversion of the stream into channels is not a controlling element. We take judicial notice of the laws of nature, and can say that the proportion of the water which will run in the branches of this stream must change from year to year, and be liable to sudden variations by freshets, floating objects, shifting sands, or other causes. One-third of the water of Tin-Cup Joe creek may be found in the north channel to-day, and this portion, through natural forces, may increase or diminish to-morrow. The rights of litigants cannot be based upon such uncertainties. If we assume that, through the action of the causes which have been specified, there are 80 inches of water in this stream, and that one-tenth thereof is flowing in the south channel, and the remainder is in the north channel, what can be claimed by the appellants for their prior use, under the findings? It is maintained by the respondent that this issue is immaterial, inasmuch as the court has found that the appellants have enjoyed without interruption their right to the water in controversy. We concede that the supreme court of California has often asserted the rule that a judgment will not be reversed through the failure to find upon certain issues which would not require a different judgment. Johnson v. Perry, 53 Cal. 851; Roberts v. Haley, 65 Cal. 397, 4 Pac. Rep. 885; People v. Center, 66 Cal. 551, 5 Pac. Rep. 263, and 6 Pac. Rep. 481; Malone v. County of Del Norte, 77 Cal. 217, 19 Pac. Rep. 422. These decisions have been made under a Code of Civil Procedure which does not embody many provisions relating to findings of facts which are enforced in this state. In North v. Peters, 188 U. S. 271, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346, Mr. Justice LAMAR in the opinion said: "In the case of Dole v. Burleigh, 1 Dak. 227, 46 N. W. Rep. 692, on which counsel for appellant mainly relies, the trial court omitted to find upon a material issue presented by the pleadings, but it made no additional findings. The court laid down and applied the long-established principle, nowhere controverted, that the findings of fact by a court, like a special verdict, must decide every point in issue, and that the omission to find any material fact in issue is an error which invalidates the judgment." Our statute has affixed to this doctrine the following restrictions: "No judgment shall be reversed on appeal, for want of a finding in writing, at the instance of any party who at the time of the submission of the cause shall not have requested a finding in writing, and had such request entered in the minutes of the court." Code Civil Proc. § 280. The exceptions supra show that the appellants complied with this and other requirements of the Code. The answer does not contain any allegations of facts, and prays for a judgment for costs, and admits, as already construed, that the plaintiffs have the prior right to the use of 80 inches of the water of Tin-Cup Joe creek. Yet there is a finding by the court, without any qualification, that the respondent is entitled to the water which was flowing in the north channel. The statute, supra, secures, if possible, more firmly than ever the right of a litigant to the judgment of a court upon the material issues to be tried and decided, regardless of their effect. When a proper request for such finding has been refused, it is not a sufficient justification, in an equitable proceeding, to insist that the result would not have been altered. The judgment of the court below, if affirmed, compels the appellants to bring another action, in order that this issue may be finally adjudicated. We are of the opinion that a multiplicity of suits can be prevented by remanding the case for further proceedings. It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the judgment be reversed, and the cause be remanded, with directions to the court below to find the facts requested on the testimony taken, and such further testimony as may be taken before the court, and enter judgment thereon.

STARE DECISIS—DECREE AGAINST PARTY UNDER DURESS—ESTOPPEL.

1. Bamford v. Bamford, 4 Or. 30; Wetmore v. Wetmore, 5 Or. 469; and Hall v. Hall, 9 Or. 453,—followed on the principle of stare decisis; and Weiss v. Bethel, 8 Or. 523, so far as the same is at variance with those cases, is overruled.

2. If a decree be rendered against a party while under duress, so that such party is unable to conduct his or her case properly, the remedy of such party is to apply to the court in such case to be relieved from the decree as soon as such duress is removed. A party cannot at the same time take advantage of the decree which results favorably to him and object to another part of it on the ground of duress, when it is alleged that the entire decree was procured while such party was under duress.

Appeal from circuit court, Umatilla county; JAMES A. FEE, Judge.

The object of this suit is to obtain a decree adjudging the plaintiff to be the owner of an undivided one-third of certain real property described in the complaint, situated in Umatilla county, and for a partition thereof, and for an account of the rents and profits. The complaint is not the usual complaint in partition, but it sets out the facts upon which the plaintiff relies to establish her interest in the property in controversy; in other words, pleads the evidence of her title. This is briefly as follows: That plaintiff and one William Ross were duly married in Umatilla county, Or., on the 19th day of July, 1886, and thereafter lived together as husband and wife until February 28, 1888, at which time this plaintiff commenced a suit for a divorce in the circuit court of Morrow county, Or., on the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment and of personal indignities; and that on the 16th day of March, 1888, a decree of divorce was allowed by said court, dissolving said marriage, for the causes alleged in complaint. That at the date of the decree said William Ross was the owner of all the real property described in the complaint in fee-simple, and that no mention was made in plaintiff's complaint for a divorce of any property whatever, nor was any property right or interest mentioned or adjudicated therein, nor was there any adjudication regarding the above-mentioned real estate belonging to said William Ross in said suit. That on the 1st day of April, 1888, William Ross died intestate, and the defendant Thompson is his administrator, and the other defendants are his only heirs at law. It is also alleged that Ross employed the attorney who prosecuted said suit for a divorce for the plaintiff, and that she was prevented by duress from setting up in that suit her claim to said real property. The defendants demurred to this complaint, which demurrer was overruled, and an answer filed, and the evidence taken, and upon final hearing a final decree was entered dismissing plaintiff's suit, from which this appeal was taken.

J. J. Balleray, for appellant. L. B. Cox, for respondents.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The plaintiff's right in this case depends upon the construction to be given section 499, Hill's Code, which is as follows: "Whenever a marriage shall be declared void or dissolved, the party at whose prayer such decree shall be made shall in all cases be entitled to the undivided one-third part in his or her individual right in fee of the whole of the real estate owned by the other at the time of such decree, in addition to the further decree for maintenance provided for in section 501; and it shall be the duty of the court in all such cases to enter a decree in accordance with this provision." Bamford v. Bamford, 4 Or. 30, is the earliest case in this court in which this section of the Code received a construction. It was there held that in a suit for divorce, when the complaint contains no allegations concerning property, and the decree contains nothing on the subject, the party in whose favor a decree is granted does not acquire either a legal or equitable right to the property of the adverse party by the decree; and it was further held in that case that, when real property is transferred from one party to another by a decree granting a divorce, the judgment roll should contain a description of the land transferred, and that the investigation concerning property must be had in the same suit. In Wetmore v. Wetmore, 5 Or. 469, it was held that whenever a marriage contract shall be dissolved, the party at whose prayer such decree is obtained is entitled peremptorily, under section 495, Civil Code, (Hill's Code, § 499,) to the undivided one-third part of all the real estate shown to be owned by the other party at the time such decree was made; and that, when a husband conveys the bare legal title to a third party in trust for his use, to prevent the marital rights of the wife from attaching thereto, such third party is a proper party to the proceeding. In Weiss v. Bethel, 8 Or. 523, a question very similar to the one presented by this record was before the court, and, without noticing either of the adjudications already referred to, or making a word of comment or explanation therefor, this court seemingly departed from what had already been decided, and held the suit maintainable as to this question, but defeated the plaintiff on other grounds.

WATSON, J., announced the opinion of the court in this case. The next case in which the question arose in this court was Hall v. Hall, 9 Or. 452. It was a suit for a divorce. The court in that case granted a divorce to the respondent, and then proceeded to render a decree in her favor in general terms for the undivided one-third of all the real property then owned by the appellant, under section 499 of the Code. There was no allegation in the complaint, or in any of the pleadings, as to the existence of such property, nor any claim for such relief. Nor did the decree find that the appellant owned any such property, or described any such. The appellant claimed that this part of the decree was erroneous. WATSON, J., also delivered the opinion in this case, in which he observed: "After as thorough an examination as we have been able to give the subject, we are not satisfied that the principles enunciated in Bamford v. Bamford are incorrect, and we feel constrained to acknowledge its authority as decisive of the question before us." The decree, so far as it attempted to affect the real property of the appellant, was therefore reversed, and in all else affirmed. Finally, in Houston v. Timmerman, 21 Pac. Rep. 1037, 17 Or. 499, the subject is incidentally alluded to by LORD, J., although the question now under consideration was not before the court. But the court remarked: "It is true, in the divorce suit the property was described in the complaint and decree, which, since the decision in Bamford v. Bamford, 4 Or. 30, has been deemed essential to reach the property of the guilty party, but it is apprehended that neither allegation nor proof concerning the lands is necessary, but that it is enough, and a sufficient compliance with the latter clause of section 499 of the Oregon Code, to say in effect that the party obtaining the divorce is thereby entitled to one-third of the real property owned by the other, whatever it may be," citing Barrett v. Failing, 6 Sawy. 475, 3 Fed. Rep. 471. The question before the court in Barrett v. Failing, supra, was whether or not a decree of divorce rendered in the state of California could operate extraterritorially and affect the title to property in Oregon under this statute, and the court very properly held that it could not; but in passing on this question the court took occasion to express some views on the subject at variance with what had been held by this court. Under this state of opinion in this court, I think Bamford v. Bamford, supra, Wetmore v. Wetmore, supra, and Hall v. Hall, supra, controlling, and that they ought to be adhered to and followed. They have stood unquestioned for many years, have become rules of property; and it is doubtful whether they ought now to be overruled, even if the court, as now constituted, should be of the opinion that the other is the better construction of the statute. But it is believed by the writer that these cases lay down the correct rule. I think it would be an anomaly in chancery practice to require or allow the court to make a decree that shall have the effect to divest the title to real property out of one of the parties to the suit, and transfer it to another, when the pleadings are entirely silent as to such property. Such a practice would necessarily introduce such a degree of uncertainty in relation to the title to real property affected as would, in the course of a few years, become very embarrassing. Besides this, according to well-settled principles of chancery practice, a decree which is to operate on the title to real property by divesting the title out of one of the parties and transferring it to the other, operates upon the thing itself in the nature of a proceeding in rem; and it is not perceived how the court can properly act upon such a subject when the thing to be affected is undescribed and unknown to the court, and the record is entirely silent in relation to every fact which, in ordinary cases, gives the court jurisdiction, and enables it to act. The plaintiff alleges that she was under duress, and for that reason did not set up in her complaint a claim for the property now in controversy. It is believed that this allegation is not supported by the evidence; but, if it was, her remedy was to apply in that case to the court to be relieved from the decree as soon as the alleged duress was removed, which, in this case, according to her evidence, was when the decree was entered. We are the better satisfied with the conclusions reached for the reason that when the divorce proceedings were commenced the defendant deposited in one of the banks in the city of Pendleton a deed to the plaintiff for about 1,200 acres of land, to be delivered to her when the decree was rendered, which deed she accepted, and retained after the entry of such decree. The evidence also shows that plaintiff received personal property and money to the amount of $2,000 or more. She brought nothing to her husband at the marriage, only lived with him for a few years, and was not troubled with the cares of a family; and it appears to us she has not been unfairly dealt with. In reaching the conclusion above indicated, it is proper to add that the case of Weiss v. Bethel, supra, so far as the same varies from the doctrines of this case, is overruled. The decree appealed from must be affirmed.

LORD, J., (specially concurring.) Upon the merits I concur in the result. But I am not prepared to say that by an omission or failure to allege the property owned by the defendant in the complaint, if there be a decree for a divorce, and that the party obtaining it is entitled to one-third of the real property of the defendant, that such party acquires no rights thereby under the statute.

PLEADING—ANSWER—GENERAL DENIAL—WRITS—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION.

1. A denial of "any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief" as to certain material facts alleged, is a good denial, and creates an issue to be tried.

2. An affidavit for an order for service of summons by publication must specify the property, and show that the defendants have property within the state.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from circuit court, Umatilla county; MORTON D. CLIFFORD, Judge.

W. F. Butcher, for appellants. E. De Peunt, for respondent.

LORD, J. This is a suit to foreclose a mortgage alleged to have been executed by J. P. Miller, deceased, in his life-time, and his wife, Ida Miller, to the plaintiff. In this suit there are two appeals, in each of which there is presented a question for our consideration and determination. These will be examined in the order stated, namely, that of the defendant C. A. Barrett, as administrator, first, which presents the question as to the sufficiency of his denials to the facts alleged in the complaint. As to such facts he denies "any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief," which the trial court treating as insufficient, rendered a decree in favor of the plaintiff upon the pleadings. It must be admitted, then, if the denials of the administrator on information and belief were sufficient, they did raise material issues to be tried, and it was error as against him to have given judgment upon the pleadings. Of this, we think, there can be no doubt upon principle, or under the adjudications of this state. The denials of the administrator are of "any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief" as to the facts alleged. This, within the ruling of Wilson v. Allen, 11 Or. 154, 2 Pac. Rep. 91, was a good denial, where it was held that a denial of "any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief" as to the existence of particular facts was a sufficient or good denial under the Code. This being so, we must hold that the denials of the administrator were sufficient, and raise material issues to be tried, which made it error for the court below to give judgment on the pleadings. In the course of the argument it was suggested that an administrator could not deny on information and belief in such case, as the deceased would have been required, if living, and the suit against him, to have made positive denials as to the facts alleged and now in controversy. From the nature of the case it is not always possible for an administrator to have such knowledge of the facts or circumstances attending a transaction as the party to them, and whom he represents by reason of his death, and as a consequence he could not make positive denials of such facts. Yet, in the interest of the estate, it may be necessary to put the plaintiff upon his proof; otherwise, to exclude the administrator from making such denials might work great and manifest injustice to the estate. In our judgment the administrator was authorized to make such denials, and, this being so, and the denials sufficient to raise material issues to be tried, it results that the court erred in giving a decree against him upon the pleadings, and must be reversed.

We now come to the other appellants upon whom service was attempted to be had by publication, which is the ground of the other appeal. The objection here is that it does not appear from the affidavit upon which the order of publication was made that the appellants had any property within this state. The provisions of the Code as to this requirement are found in section 55, subd. 3, and section 56 of Dedy's Code. Sections 56, 57, Hill's Code. The affidavit states that "the suit is brought to foreclose a certain mortgage on real property situated in this county, made and delivered by the said J. P. Miller, deceased, in his life-time, and by the defendant Ida Miller, his wife." There is nothing in the affidavit to show that the appellants were the heirs at law of the said John P. Miller, deceased, or that they have any interest in any property situated in this county. All that appears is that the suit was brought to foreclose a certain mortgage on real property situated in the county, but there is no specification of the property which is the subject of the mortgage and the suit, nor any fact or circumstance alleged, directly or indirectly, to indicate that the appellants have any interest in such property whatever, or that they are in any way related, as heirs at law or otherwise, to the said John P. Miller. Unless the appellants have some interest in the property, and such property is specifically brought within the jurisdiction of the court, how is the plaintiff to maintain a suit against them on account of such mortgage? In Pike v. Kennedy, 15 Or. 420, 15 Pac. Rep. 637, the facts alleged in the affidavit specified the property that was the subject of the mortgage and suit, showing that it was situated in the county and state, and disclosed that the defendants still owned the property when the affidavit for the order was made. The result is that the affidavit nowhere discloses that the defendants have any property in this state. There is not even a bare assertion to that effect, nor is the property specified. No principle is better settled than that the requirements of the statute, in cases of this sort, must be complied with when service by publication is sought to be had on absent defendants. "When," said Mr. Justice FIELD, "constructive service of process by publication is substituted in place of personal citation, and the court, upon such service, is authorized to proceed against the person of an absent defendant not a citizen of the state, or found within it, every principle of justice exacts a strict and literal compliance with the statutory provisions." Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 350. The affidavit is certainly fatally defective in the particulars noted, and the order based upon it cannot be sustained. It results, then, that the court did not acquire jurisdiction of the appellants, and that the judgment or decree, as against them, is void.

ADAMS v. COUCH et al.

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. April 4, 1891.)

PLEADING — DEMURRER — EJECTMENT — TITLE TO SUPPORT.

1. Where a pleading is demurred to, all the facts well pleaded are admitted for the purposes of the demurrer.

2. Section 411, Code Civil Proc. Neb., does not authorize a recovery in ejectment on a register and receiver's duplicate receipt.

3. The land department of the government will not be interfered with by the courts while it has charge of any contest proceedings between adverse claimants of the land.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from district court, Oklahoma county.

Amos & C. M. Green and H. S. Cunningham, for appellant. Dale & Stanley, A. B. Hammer, and Selwyn Douglas, for appellees.

SEAY, J. This is an ejectment which comes to this court on appeal from the third district Oklahoma court, JOHN G. CLARK, J. The petition is as follows:

"The plaintiff, a citizen of the United States, residing in the county aforesaid, brings suit against the said defendants, who are also residents of the aforesaid territory and county and citizens of the United States, and for cause of action says that the plaintiff is the homestead settler on the following tract of land situated and being in the county of Oklahoma and territory aforesaid, and more particularly described as follows: The south-west quarter of section thirty-three, township twelve north, of range three west, containing one hundred and sixty acres. That on the 23d day of April, 1889, he filed homestead entry on said tract of land in the United States land-office at Guthrie, Oklahoma, being application and homestead entry number nine, and received duplicate receipt of the receiver of said land-office, being duplicate receipt number nine, a copy of which is hereto filed, and marked 'Exhibit A.' Plaintiff states that by reason of his settlement and entry aforesaid he became the equitable owner, and legally entitled to the possession, of the aforesaid land, and that he still resides on a part of said land, and occupies and cultivates the same as his homestead; and that he is legally entitled to the possession of the entire tract under and by virtue of his aforesaid settlement and homestead filing. That under and by virtue of section four hundred and eleven of the Code of Civil Procedure, under the title of 'Evidence,' of the statute of the state of Nebraska, made applicable to and extended over the territory of Oklahoma by the provisions of the act of congress approved May 2, 1890, establishing and providing a territorial government for said territory, it is provided as follows: 'The usual duplicate receipt of the receiver of any land-office, or, if that be lost or destroyed or beyond the reach of the party, the certificate of such receiver that the books of his office show the sale of a tract of land to a certain individual, is proof of title equivalent to a patent against all but the holder of an actual patent.' The plaintiff states that, being the owner as aforesaid, and entitled to the possession, of the aforesaid tract of land, said defendants did, on or about the 1st day of October, 1889, unlawfully enter upon and occupy about forty-five acres off the south end of said tract of land, being all that part lying south of the extension of the street called 'Grand Avenue,' of the city of Oklahoma, on and through said tract of land, and all the east eighty acres of said tract of land, and still illegally and unlawfully and forcibly hold and occupy the part of said tract aforesaid, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of five hundred dollars. The plaintiff says he is the legal owner, and entitled to the possession, of the aforesaid land so wrongfully, illegally, and forcibly occupied, held, and detained as aforesaid by said defendants; whereof he prays judgment for the recovery of the possession of said land, together with five hundred dollars damage for the wrongful detention thereof, and for other proper relief. A. & C. M. GREEN, H. S. CUNNINGHAM & D. C. LEWIS, Attorneys. JOHN C. Adams says he is the plaintiff, and that he believes the statements of the foregoing petition are true. AMOS GREEN, Attorney J. C. Adams. Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 8th day of September, A. D. 1890. WILL H. CLARK, Clerk. By HENRY P. GREEN, Deputy.

"Copy Exhibit A. Copy 4,138. Homestead. Receiver's duplicate receipt, No. 9. Application No. 9. Receiver's Office, Guthrie, I. T. April 23rd, 1889. Received of John C. Adams the sum of fourteen dollars * * * cts., being the amount of fee and compensation of register and receiver for the entry of south-west quarter of section 33, in township 12 N., of range 3 W., under section 2290, Revised Statutes of the United States. $14.00. C. M. BARNES, Receiver."

The special answer of Cynthia Couch is as follows:

"Comes now Cynthia Couch, one of the above defendants, and for answer to plaintiff's complaint and petition filed herein states: (1) That, to-wit, April 22, 1889, she was the lawful wife of William Couch, and remained his wife until he departed this life on —, 1889. (2) That, to-wit, April 22, 1889, said William Couch settled upon, improved, and began a residence upon the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ sec. 33, twp. 12 N., R. 3 W., the same being the land described in plaintiff's petition, filed herein, and continued such settlement, residence, and improvement upon said land until he departed this life. (3) That at the time said William Couch settled upon the land as aforesaid the same was a part of the public domain, open to settlement, under and by virtue of the provisions of the general homestead law, which said law was duly enacted by the congress of the United States, and was in force and effect in the territory of Oklahoma, and was the only law under which said land could be segregated from the public domain of the United States. (4) That afterwards, and within ninety days from the date of his said settlement as aforesaid, said William Couch filed in the United States land-office at Guthrie, Oklahoma, his homestead application to enter the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 33, twp. 12 N., of range 3 west, as his homestead, and at the same time submitted affidavits to show his qualifications to enter said land under the general provisions of the homestead law applicable to the territory of Oklahoma, and which said application so filed as aforesaid was by the land-office at Guthrie, Ok., rejected for the reason that said land had been previously entered as a homestead by the plaintiff in this action. (5) Defendant further avers that within ninety days from April 22, 1889, the said William Couch filed in the United States land-office at Guthrie, Ok., his contest affidavit, duly corroborated, in manner and form as provided by the rules of practice in force in said land-office, at Guthrie, Ok., his contest affidavit, duly corroborated, in manner and form as provided by the rules of practice in force in said land-office, and in said contest affidavit alleged in substance that he, William Couch, settled upon, improved, and began his residence upon the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, sec. 33, twp. 12 N., of range 3 west, on the 22d of April, 1889, prior to the date upon which said John Adams filed his homestead entry for said tract of land, and prior to the date upon which said John C. Adams settled upon the same, and further alleged that said John C. Adams was disqualified from entering any land as a homestead within the territory of Oklahoma for the reason said Adams entered the territory of Oklahoma subsequent to March 2, 1889, and prior to noon of April 22, 1889, with the intent to settle upon lands therein, and asked the register and receiver to grant him relief by canceling the homestead entry of said Adams, and to permit his, William Couch's, application for said land to be placed on record. (6) Defendant avers that at the time said William Couch settled upon the tract of land as aforesaid, and at the time he filed his homestead application therefor, and contest affidavit against the entry of plaintiff herein, the United States land-office at Guthrie, Oklahoma territory, was by virtue of the acts of congress vested with full jurisdiction to try and adjudicate all questions arising between plaintiff herein and said William Couch, relating to the rights of said parties to file their entry for said land, and to try and determine which of said parties had the exclusive right to occupy and hold possession of the same; and, further, that the United States land-office, now located at Oklahoma City, O. T., now has all the powers and jurisdiction heretofore vested in the Guthrie land-office; and that the matters in controversy pending between the aforesaid parties are still undetermined in said land-office at Oklahoma City. (7) Defendant further avers that the United States land-office at Oklahoma City has full and complete jurisdiction to determine all matters set forth in plaintiff's petition filed herein; that such jurisdiction is by the congress of the United States vested in said land-office; and that congress has by special enactment created the land-office at Oklahoma City, for the purpose of trying all matters set forth in the plaintiff's petition; and that this court has no jurisdiction to hear or determine the questions set forth in said petition. (8) Defendant further avers that she, as the widow of William Couch, deceased, is entitled to all rights in the tract of land described in plaintiff's petition, which were vested in William Couch at the time of his death. (9) Defendant denies the right of the court sitting in and for the county of Oklahoma, Ok. Ty., to eject the defendant from the tract of land described in the plaintiff's petition, or in any manner to interfere with her use and occupation of the same. Wherefore defendant prays a dismissal of this action. CYNTHIA COUCH. By her Atty., FRANK DALE."

John M. Dawson filed an answer which is as follows: "Comes now John M. Dawson, one of the above-named defendants, and for a separate answer to the complaint of the plaintiff says: First. That he denies each and every material allegation made by the plaintiff in his said complaint. Second. Defendant denies that plaintiff is the owner of, or entitled to the possession of, said tract of land described in his complaint, as against this defendant. Third. Defendant alleges the truth to be that the supposed title of plaintiff was obtained illegally, wrongfully, and fraudulently, for that, whereas, on April 23, 1889, at Guthrie, Indian Territory, and before the issuance of the receipt set out in plaintiff's complaint, he, the said plaintiff, was required, as a condition prior, and did take and subscribe, a certain affidavit in words and figures, to-wit: 'Land-Office at Guthrie, I. T., April 23rd, 1889. I, John C. Adams, of Oklahoma, applying to enter (or file) for a homestead, do solemnly swear that I did not enter upon and occupy any portion of the lands described and declared open to entry in the president's proclamation dated March 23rd, 1889, prior to 12 o'clock noon of April 22nd, 1889. [Signed] JOHN C. ADAMS. Sworn and subscribed before me this 23rd day of April, 1889. [Signed] JOHN I. DILLE, Register.' That said affidavit was material, and without which said receipt would not have been issued. That said John I. Dille was an officer of the United States, duly empowered to administer oaths for such purposes. Defendant avers that said affidavit was wholly false and untrue, and that the plaintiff did enter upon and occupy a portion of the lands described and declared open for entry in the president's proclamation dated March 23, 1889, prior to 12 o'clock noon, of April 22, 1889, by reason whereof the said receipt set forth in plaintiff's complaint was illegally, unlawfully, and fraudulently obtained, and should not be pleaded as evidence of title or right of possession in this action as against the defendant. Defendant further avers that on, to-wit, May 23, 1889, he filed in the land-office at Guthrie, Indian Territory, his affidavit of contest against the homestead entry of the plaintiff, charging plaintiff with being disqualified, by reason of the facts set forth in the third paragraph of this answer, from making entry of said lands. That this defendant was the first legal settler and occupant upon said tract. A hearing on said contest has been ordered by the land-office at Oklahoma City, before which said cause is now pending. Fifth. Defendant further avers that the title to said land described in plaintiff's complaint is in the United States, and that by reason thereof, and his contest aforesaid, and his application for title thereto, he has fully conformed and complied with all the conditions required by the interior department of the United States in prosecuting said contest, and has an equitable title and by reason of prior occupancy a right to the possession of said land. Sixth. That the defendants Cynthia Couch and Robert Higgins claim adversely to this defendant, and that they have some right or equity in and to the title and possession of said tract of land; that the claim and equitable title of this defendant is superior to that of either of said defendants; that the same would be destroyed, and the defendants irreparably injured, by ousting him of his possession before the final determination of the respective claims to the title of said land. Seventh. That the defendant went into possession of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, 33, 12, 3 W. I. M., while the same was open, unimproved, and unoccupied; that he has placed thereon permanent improvements of the value of \$1,500.00, and occupies the same as a permanent residence with his family. Defendant here specifically disclaims any act or intention to do in any manner trespass upon or interfere with the inclosure, improvement, or possession of plaintiff. Eighth. That there is now a suit pending between the same parties, and for the same subject-matter, before the United States land-office at Oklahoma City, Ok. Ty.; that the same is undetermined, and that said land-office has the original and exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine the respective rights of all parties litigant in and to the title to said tract of land described in plaintiff's complaint. Wherefore defendant John M. Dawson prays the judgment of the court in his behalf. [Signed] JOHN M. DAWSON. By his Attorneys, HAMMER, HUDSON & LEACH."

Robert M. Higgins filed no answer, but relies upon the following stipulation and agreement made by counsel: That in the hearing of this case the "rights of alleged prior settlers might be passed upon, same as if raised by answer; also, rights of contestants as to possession when the entry is made after a filing,—what right such gives as to possession,—same as if set up in answer." This agreement seems to cover substantially all the questions raised by the answers of Couch and Dawson. To these answers the plaintiff filed the following demurrer: "That said answers do not state facts sufficient to constitute any defense to the cause of action in plaintiff's petition stated." The facts, as alleged and denied in the pleadings, may be briefly summarized as follows: The petition substantially states that plaintiff, being a citizen of the United States, having the right so to do, filed his homestead entry (No. 9) for the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 33, township 12 N., of range 3 W., in the United States local land-office; and that upon full compliance with the law, and residing upon and being in possession of a part, he became the equitable owner, and legally entitled to the possession, of the whole of said tract of land. That the defendants afterwards unlawfully entered upon and occupied part of the land, to plaintiff's damage in the sum of \$500, for the possession of which and damages he asks judgment. Defendant Cynthia Couch says her husband, in his life-time, settled upon, improved, and began a residence on the property in dispute on April 22, 1889, and continuously resided thereon till his death, since which time she has resided thereon, and held unbroken possession of his title. That within 90 days after the 22d of April, 1889, he took steps in pursuance to law to enter said land, and his application was rejected because of the previous entry of the land by plaintiff, whereupon he filed his contest as provided by law, and asked the cancellation of plaintiff's entry, for the reason that plaintiff entered the territory subsequent to the 2d of March, and prior to the 22d of April, 1889, in violation of the law. That contest is now pending before the local land-office at Oklahoma City, which has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all matters of controversy between them, and that this court has no jurisdiction to interfere with her use and occupancy of the land described. John M. Dawson, after denying each and every allegation of the petition, and charging plaintiff with having forfeited his rights by entering the territory prior to 12 o'clock noon of April 22, 1889, and occupying a portion of the land in controversy, avers that he, (Dawson,) on the 23d day of April, 1889, filed his contest affidavit, charging the plaintiff with the violation aforesaid, and averring that he, defendant, was the first legal settler and occupant upon said land, and that said contest is now pending and undetermined before the local land-office at Oklahoma City; that the title is still in the United States, but by reason of the foregoing facts he has an equitable title, and on account of his prior settlement and occupancy he is entitled to the possession of the land; that a judgment of ouster would destroy his title, and deprive him of his home, which is of the valuation of \$1,500, and which he built upon the land, and in which he now resides with his family. Dawson then pleads the pendency of the contest proceedings as a bar to this action, and denies the jurisdiction of this court to hear and determine it. Robert M. Higgins relies upon the stipulations, which seem to be broad enough to cover all the questions raised by the answers of Couch and Dawson. The plaintiff bases his right to recover in this case upon the fact that he entered the land, and that his receipt of the receiver entitles him to the possession of the whole tract, under the provisions of section 411, p. 790, St. Neb., which was put in force here by the organic act. The defendants rely for their defense mainly upon three propositions: (1) That the plaintiff entered the territory for the fraudulent purpose of securing a homestead prior to the 22d day of April, 1889, without authority of law; (2) that they are prior settlers, and took legal steps to secure their rights within 90 days after actual settlement; (3) that the matters now in controversy are pending before the local land-office, which has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine them, and that this court has no jurisdiction in the premises. Plaintiff, by demurring to the defendants' answers, admits all the facts well pleaded therein, and asks this court to declare as a matter of law said facts are insufficient to constitute any defense to the cause of action as stated.

The case of Wilson v. Fine, 38 Fed. Rep. 789, is referred to as authority for plaintiff. This is an ejectment case, in which plaintiff claims under a "duly-certified final certificate from the proper officers of the United States land department, under the homestead laws; that, plaintiff being in possession of the premises as the legal owner, the defendant unlawfully and with force entered upon the same, and ejected the plaintiff therefrom, and has ever since wrongfully held possession thereof from the plaintiff." To this complaint the defendant demurred for that the same "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The only question was as to the sufficiency of the petition. The court said this plaintiff is "the assignee and vendee of a recognized settler on the premises under the homestead law * * * to whom an official certificate was issued to the effect that he had complied with the law, and was entitled to a patent." The defendant being a mere intruder and trespasser, and plaintiff being entitled to the patent, we think the demurrer was properly overruled. The case of Colwell v. Smith, 1 Wash. T. 92, (decided in 1860,) is also quoted as authority for the position taken by the plaintiff. We are unable to see that it supports plaintiff's contention. "The complaint alleges that plaintiff, claiming under the pre-emption laws of the United States, was in the exclusive possession of 160 acres of land, * * * was wrongfully ousted and deprived of his possession by the defendant, and seeks a writ of restitution." The case was tried by a jury who found that plaintiff was in the possession of the whole tract, and was wrongfully ousted by defendant. It does not appear that any answer was filed, or whether any defense was set up, and yet the court held that it had no jurisdiction to determine, upon conflicts between two persons claiming by priority of settlement, (both of whom are in actual possession of different portions of the tract,) so far as to dispossess one or the other from the entire claim, and then declined to give the plaintiff any relief until he filed a stipulation not "to deprive the defendant of such possession as he may have, of his dwelling-house or inclosures, made and exclusively occupied by himself." The court in that early day saw the necessity of leaving such conflicts under the control of the proper officers of the land department.

Section 411, supra, provides that "the usual duplicate receipt of the receiver of any land-office * * * is proof of title equivalent to a patent against all but the holder of an actual patent." What sort of a receipt is meant by this section? Is it what is known as the "filing papers," which is the initiatory step to secure the inceptive right to the land; or does it refer to the "final receipt," which entitles the holder to a patent? In Morton v. Green, 2 Neb. 454, which was an ejectment under section 411, supra, the court held that ejectment would not lie; that to entitle him to recover the plaintiff "must produce a patent, or show that he holds a final certificate in harmony with the government." In Dale v. Hunneman, 12 Neb. 221, 224, 10 N. W. Rep. 711, the court says: "To entitle the plaintiff to recover under the Code, he must possess a legal title in the premises, and state in his petition that he is entitled to the possession." When he secures his "final certificate," which shows that he has paid for the land, and is entitled to a patent, it would seem that such a title ought to be sufficient to support ejectment, for it is held in Carroll v. Safford, 3 How. 460 that "the final certificate obtained on the payment of the money is as binding on the government as a patent." Langdon v. Sherwood was ejectment. That case went up on appeal from Nebraska, and is reported in 124 U. S. 74, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429. Plaintiff offered in evidence a certificate of the register of the land-office at Omaha, dated August 14, 1857, of the location by one Wright of a military land-warrant upon the land in controversy, which was objected to. Mr. Justice MILLER quoted with approval from Bagnell v. Broderick, 13 Pet. 436, that "congress has the sole power to declare the dignity and effect of titles emanating from the United States; and the whole legislation of the federal government in reference to the public lands declares the patent the superior and conclusive evidence of legal title. Until its issuance the fee is in the government, which, by the patent, passes to the grantee; and he is entitled to recover the possession in ejectment." He then says: "The defendants in error rely upon section 411 of the Nebraska Code of Civil Procedure, which is analogous in its provisions to the statute of Arkansas, referred to in the case of Hooper v. Schelmer, [28 How. 235.]" After quoting the section in full he says: "But, whatever effect may be given this statute, it is obvious that in the circuit court of the United States it cannot be received in establishing the legal title of the holder of such certificate. That certificate is given for the purpose of vesting in the receiver of it an equitable right to demand the patent of the government after such other proceedings as the laws of the United States and the course of business in the departments may require." On page 85 he further says: "To receive this evidence, and to give it the effect of proving a legal title in the holder of such receipt, because the statute of the state proposes to give it such an effect, is to violate the principle asserted in Bagnell v. Broderick,—that it is for the United States to fix the dignity and character of the evidences of title which issues from the government. And it is also in violation of the other principle settled by the cited decisions, that in the courts of the United States a recovery in ejectment can be had alone upon the strict legal title, and that the courts of law do not enforce in that manner the equitable title evidenced by these certificates." It seems to be clear that the supreme court of Nebraska construed section 411 to refer to the final receipt, which vests a title in the holder, and entitles him to a patent; and it is our duty to follow that construction. In that state there are several kinds of entry of United States lands for which duplicate receipts are taken, to-wit, the homestead, the pre-emption, timber culture, and desert lands. The original entry is evidenced by filing papers. After all the requirements of the laws of congress relating to homestead, pre-emption, timber culture, or desert lands, as the case may be, have been fully complied with, the plaintiff becomes entitled to the "final receipt," which in its turn arms him with a legal title against all the world except the United States, and, as against the government itself, the right to demand and receive a patent. In consideration of the fact that congress, in organizing this territory, gave us certain of the laws of the state of Nebraska for our local government, until such time as our territorial legislature should enact a Code; that section 411, supra, was given to us as a rule of evidence only, if it should be, and so far as it might be, "locally applicable," and not inconsistent with the organic act, or with the constitution and laws of the United States; and in view of the universal rule of the highest court of the nation that a patent gives the superior title, without which ejectment cannot be maintained in the courts of the United States,—the conclusion is inevitable that section 411 is not "locally applicable" here. Certainly not with the construction placed upon it by the plaintiff.

We might now consider the demurrer with reference to the defenses set up in the answers as to the disqualification of the plaintiff to enter the land, the prior settlement of the defendants, the setting up the pendency of the contest proceedings by the defendants, and the plea to the jurisdiction of this court, and stop there; but as the eminent counsel on both sides (who took a wide range in the argument) expressed a desire and signed an agreement (heretofore referred to) to the effect that these questions should be considered by the court, we are not unmindful of the great importance (to the homesteaders throughout the territory) of a careful discussion at this time of these questions. While we regard it, ordinarily, as the better course, to pass only upon such questions as are decisive of the case, we feel that for the public good, and for the purpose of checking (so far as it is within the scope of our power and duty) unnecessary and expensive litigation, we should at least give our views on the question of jurisdiction raised by the pleadings, the decision of which will dispose of the other questions preceding it.

In the case of Empey v. Plugert, 64 Wis. 603, 25 N. W. Rep. 560, the plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he settled on the land in dispute as a homestead claimant under the laws of the United States, and complied with the requirements of the law by continued residence and cultivation, so as to entitle him to the final certificate therefor, of which fact he made due proof before the land department; and that, by a final decision of the secretary of the interior, he was denied the right to said certificate; and that he has continued to reside upon and keep possession of said land; that the defendant entered upon the land by force, regardless of the plaintiff's rights, paid the amount required by law, and obtained a certificate, and now claims that he is entitled to all the rights of a homestead claimant. It is further alleged by said plaintiff that when his proof was presented for the purpose of obtaining his final certificate the defendant contested his rights, and by perjury and fraud defeated him, and caused the secretary of the interior to declare plaintiff's entry void, and gave the certificate to the fraudulent entryman, the defendant. The plaintiff further alleged that he had done every act and performed every requirement of the law to entitle him to a patent to the land. He then prays for judgment that he has complied with the homestead laws, and is entitled to the land. To this complaint the defendant demurred, and the court sustained the demurrer. The land-office department having decided against the plaintiff, the defendant has settled upon the land as a homestead claimant, and holds a certificate as such. "That certificate gives the defendant no right to the land, and he must thereafter perform all the conditions of the homestead law before he will be entitled to a certificate upon which the patent can be issued." After declaring that he had as yet secured no right to the land, but the mere privilege or permission to enter upon it for the purpose of completing title by residing thereon five years, the court says: "What right or claim to said land or interest in it has he (defendant) that he could release to the plaintiff according to the prayer of the complaint? Has he the possession? So has the plaintiff. If he is an intruder or trespasser without legal right, (and he has no right if the plaintiff is entitled to the patent of the United States, as he claims,) then the plaintiff's remedy, if he has any, is in the proper possessory action at law. The defendant's right of entry upon the land is a legal right, if he has any. If he has none, then he has no right or title to release. If he has a right so to enter, then neither a court of equity nor law could extinguish it, or adjudge its release to another. But, if all the right the defendant claims is released to the plaintiff, it would not make his right or title any better. It is apparent that the remedy sought by this part of the prayer would be ineffectual, and of no benefit to the plaintiff. If the defendant should release to the plaintiff whatever right or claim he may have, it would not give the plaintiff any more right than he had before by reason of his settlement and cultivation of the land for the requisite time. The law does not provide for any action or adjudication upon such a preliminary entry. The land-officer decides nothing. The land may or may not be subject to entry. That is the risk of the applicant." On page 611 of the opinion it is said: "If the court in such a case should decide that the decision of the secretary was wrong, and based upon perjured testimony, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the final certificate and the patent for the land, and go further even, and reverse, set aside vacate, or annul his decision and judgment, how could it be enforced, and what would be its effect? Neither the United States nor the executive departments of the government are amenable to the state courts. The decision would still stand and be enforced, and a patent would not be issued to the plaintiff, and might be issued to the defendant upon his final proof. The judgment of the court in such a case could not operate upon or in any way affect the title of the land, for the title is still in the government, or upon the right to the title, which would be respected by the government and its departments." Then after holding that the courts may have jurisdiction to inquire into the homestead right of a homestead party to a patent, and may reverse the decision of the land department when procured by fraud and perjury, it says that jurisdiction can be effectually exercised only when the title is vested in the party amenable to the state court. "But in exercising such a jurisdiction the court will not disturb the adjudications of the land-officers in respect to such right, except in clear cases of fraud, mistake, perjury, or violation of law. This doctrine is well settled;" referring to Lamont v. Stimson, 3 Wis. 545; Bross v. Wiley, 6 Wis. 485; Lombard v. Cowham, 34 Wis. 486; Morton v. Green, 2 Neb. 441; Corbett v. Wood, 32 Minn. 509, 21 N. W. Rep. 734; Gaines v. Thompson, 7 Wall. 347; Secretary v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall. 298; Litchfield v. Register, etc., Id. 575; Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330; Marquez v. Friable, 101 U. S. 473; Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636; Steel v. Smelting, etc., Co., 106 U. S. 447, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Baldwin v. Stark, 107 U. S. 463, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 473; Smith v. Ewing, 23 Fed. Rep. 741; Casey v. Vassor, 4 McCrary, 127. Holding that the land department still have jurisdiction of this case, the judgment of the court below sustaining the demurrer was affirmed.

In Marquez v. Friable, which was a case taken up by appeal from California to the supreme court of the United States, plaintiff asked the reversal of the decision of the department of the interior against his claim as a pre-emptor to a certain quarter section of land upon the ground that his title was paramount to that of the defendant. Defendant demurred. Demurrer was sustained. The legal title was outstanding in the United States, and the matter was still in fieri, and under the control of the land-office; and the supreme court sustained the court below, saying: "We have repeatedly held that the courts will not interfere with the officers of the government in the discharge of their duties in the disposal of public lands, either by injunction or mandamus. Litchfield v. Register, etc., 9 Wall. 575; Secretary v. McGarrahan, Id. 298. And we think it would be quite as objectionable to let a state court, while such a question was under the consideration and within the control of the executive departments, take jurisdiction of the case by reason of their control of the parties concerned, and render a decree, in advance of the action of the government, which would render its patent a nullity when issued. Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330. We think the appropriate officers of the land department have been constituted a special tribunal to decide such questions, and their decisions are final to the same extent that those of other judicial or quasi-judicial tribunals are. Vance v. Burbank, 101 U. S. 514." Mr. Justice MILLER, in U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, which was a mandamus proceeding to compel the secretary of the interior to deliver a patent to the relator, held that, the patent having been issued and recorded, the act of delivery was merely ministerial, and directed the supreme court of the District of Columbia to grant the writ. But in the same decision the learned justice held that "congress has also enacted a system of laws by which rights to these lands may be acquired, and the title of the government conveyed to the citizen. This court has with a strong hand [the italics are ours] upheld the doctrine that so long as the legal title to these lands remained in the United States, and the proceedings for acquiring it were as yet in fieri, the court would not interfere to control the exercise of the power thus vested in that tribunal. To that doctrine we still adhere."

The question of jurisdiction is elaborately discussed, and numerous authorities cited, from which copious quotations are made in the case of Forbes v. Driscoll, 31 N. W. Rep. 633, by the supreme court of Dakota. That was an action to recover possession of 160 acres of land, described therein. Plaintiff alleges that he is now, and has been ever since the 20th day of May, 1879, entitled to the possession of the land described. He bases his title upon the declaratory statement of pre-emption filed in the United States land-office at Deadwood, Dak., and then avers that in January, 1880, while he was in the lawful, actual, peaceful, quiet, and exclusive possession of said premises, and entitled thereto, the defendant unlawfully entered into and upon the same, and ousted and ejected the plaintiff therefrom, and still wrongfully withholds from the plaintiff the possession of the premises, to his damage in the sum of $2,000. There was no objection, by demurrer or otherwise, to the complaint by the defendant; but he filed a general denial, and set up new matter as a defense. Defendant alleges all the facts which, under the law, entitle him to settle upon the land by pre-emption, and avers that he filed his declaratory statement, according to pre-emption laws of the United States, at the Deadwood land-office, and immediately thereafter established his residence thereon, and cultivated continuously the lands as a homestead, and pleads the pendency of a contest before the register and receiver at Deadwood between himself and plaintiff. Upon these issues the parties went to trial before a jury, and, without objection, plaintiff introduced testimony tending to prove the allegations in the pleadings, and the court gave and refused instructions, and the jury brought in a general verdict for the plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff was rendered thereon, and an appeal was prosecuted. The court then says: "This question is therefore now presented to this court: Can a court of law, while a contest is pending, or prior to the decision of the land department, hear and determine the contestant's right of pre-emption in determining his right to possession of public lands? Plaintiff relies for his right to recover upon section 650 of the Dakota Code of Civil Procedure, which provides as follows: 'Any person settled upon the public lands belonging to the United States, on which settlement is not expressly prohibited by congress or some department of the general government, may maintain action for injuries done the same, also an action to recover possession thereof, in the same manner as if he possessed a fee-simple title to said lands.'" The court says: "It was enacted, without doubt, to set at rest any question that might arise as to the right of the settler upon public lands to protect his improvements and possession against as mere intruder or trespasser;" referring to Atherton v. Fowler, 98 U. S. 519. "Does the policy of the pre-emption law authorize a stranger to thrust these men out of their houses, seize their improvements, and settle exactly where they settled, and by these acts acquire the initiatory right of pre-emption? The generosity by which congress gave the settler the right of pre-emption was not intended to give him the benefit of another man's labor, and authorize him to turn that man and his family out of their home. It did not propose to give its bounty to settlements obtained by violence at the expense of others. * * * It would have shocked the moral sense of the men who passed these laws, if they had supposed that they had extended an invitation to the pioneer population to acquire inchoate rights to the public lands by trespass, by violence, by robbery, by acts leading to homicides and other crimes of less moral turpitude." Further on the court says in the same case: "Undoubtedly there have been cases, and may be cases again, where two persons making settlement upon the same quarter section of land may present conflicting claims to the right of pre-emption of the whole quarter section, and neither of them be a trespasser upon the possession of the other, for the reason that the quarter section is open and uninclosed, and neither party interferes with the actual possession of the other. In such cases the settlement of the later of the two may be bona fide, for many reasons." In Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 287, the court, after approving the doctrine laid down in Atherton v. Fowler, says: "We also all agree that, if a peaceable entry had been made on the lands, which had not been inclosed or improved, a good right might have been secured." Judge TRIPP then says: "If, then, the settlement of the defendant, Driscoll, was upon unoccupied portions of the land in controversy, the plaintiff would not have the right, by virtue of his prior filing, to oust him from such possession. Nor would he have the right, as a prior pre-emptor, to oust this defendant from any portion of the land filed upon, except such as he, plaintiff, had actually settled upon and improved; and, as the evidence does not show the defendant, Driscoll, to have been in possession of any part of the premises which had been in the prior actual possession of the plaintiff, the verdict should have been set aside." Then, preliminary to a discussion of the jurisdiction, he says the plaintiff sought "to eject a junior pre-emptor from the entire claim because he (plaintiff) had a better right of pre-emption. Has a court of law any jurisdiction to determine such a right at all? And can it exercise such jurisdiction pending or prior to the determination of such question by the land department? The power to sell and dispose of public lands is essentially of an administrative or executive character. Congress, under its constitutional power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States, has placed this executive function in the hands of a special tribunal, subject to the supervision of one of the executive officers of the department." Mr. Justice MILLER in Johnson v. Towsley, supra, after laying down the general "doctrine" that when the law has confided to a special tribunal the authority to hear and determine certain matters arising in the course of its duties, the decision of that tribunal, within the scope of its authority, is conclusive upon all others, holds that the land department is clothed with a special jurisdiction in the disposition of the public lands of the United States, and declares that "this court has at all times been careful to guard itself against an invasion of the functions confided by law to the other departments of the general government; and in reference to the proceedings before the officers intrusted with the charge of selling the public lands has it frequently and firmly refused to interfere with them in the discharge of their duties, either by mandamus or injunction, so long as the title remained in the United States, and the matter was rightfully before its officers for decision. On the other hand, it has constantly asserted the right of the proper courts to inquire, after the title had passed from the government, and the question became one of private right, whether, according to the established rules of equity and the acts of congress concerning the public lands, the party holding that title should hold absolutely as his own, or as a trustee for another; and we are satisfied that the relations thus established between the courts and the land department are not only founded on a just view of the duties and powers of each, but are essential to the ends of justice, and to a sound administration of the law." In Shepley v. Cowan, FIELD, J., says: "The officers of the land department are specially designated by law to receive, consider, and pass upon proofs presented with respect to settlement upon the public lands, with a view to secure rights of pre-emption." In Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530, the court "limits the time when control over the land by the department ceases to the act of issuing the patent." In Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 503, re-examining the powers of the court to review the action of the land department, Judge FIELD adhered to and reaffirms the doctrine, and then remarks: "It would lead to endless litigation, and be fruitful of evil, if a supervisory power was vested in the courts over the action of the numerous officers of the land department on mere questions of fact presented for their determination. It is only when those officers have misconstrued the law applicable to the case as established before the department, and thus have denied the parties rights which, upon a correct construction, would have been conceded to them, or where misrepresentations or fraud have been practiced necessarily affecting their judgment, that the courts can in the proper proceeding interfere, and refuse to give effect to their action. On this subject we have repeatedly and with emphasis expressed our opinion, and the matter should be deemed settled;" referring to Johnson v. Towseley, Shepley v. Cowan, Moore v. Robbins, supra. And again, in Steel v. Smelting, etc., Co., he declares that the land "department, as we have repeatedly said, was established to supervise the various proceedings whereby a conveyance of title from the United States to portions of the public domain is obtained, and to see that the requirements of the different acts of congress are fully complied with. Necessarily, therefore, it must consider and pass upon the qualifications of the applicant, the acts he has performed to secure the title, the nature of the land, and whether it is of the class that is open to sale. Its judgment upon these matters is that of a special tribunal, and is unassailable, except by direct proceedings for its annulment or limitation. Such has been the uniform language of this court in repeated decisions." 106 U. S. 451, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392. Here is a strong array of federal decisions announcing the doctrine as to when the court will exercise jurisdiction over the decisions of the land department; the time when it will be and the time when it will not be exercised. The courts have uniformly held that they will not exercise such jurisdiction while the matter is still in fieri, and prior to the time when the United States has parted with the title. To declare the plaintiff out of court in this case is to give effect to the doctrine here laid down. A contrary view of the law would bring this court into constant collision with the land-offices in this territory. It would bring into our courts all the contested claims for title to public lands under the homestead law, and would have the effect to transfer all contests from the local land-offices to our courts, and would leave the register and receiver mere ministerial officers, with no more jurisdiction to try and determine a contest of adverse claimants than a mere clerk. We have no doubt that the manifest intent of the laws of the United States was to invest in the land department exclusive jurisdiction of all questions relating to the sale and disposition of the public lands, up to the time of the issuing of the patent. While we do not wish to be understood as saying that this court, in a proper case, might not, or would not, grant relief on the prayer of a bona fide homesteader against a mere intruder or trespasser, we are of the opinion that the court, under the pleadings in this case, has no jurisdiction to eject the defendants. The plaintiff's demurrer to the defendants' answers is therefore overruled. The judgment of the district court is affirmed. Judgment for defendants, with costs. The other judges concur.

WILLARD v. OSTRANDER.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

ACTION ON NOTE—BREACH OF WARRANTY—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action upon a promissory note, the defendant answered that the note sued upon had been given as part of the purchase price of a flock of sheep, and alleged an express warranty of soundness of the sheep included in the purchase, and set up a counter-claim for damages on account of a breach of the warranty, and upon the trial testified in his own behalf that the contract was verbal, but upon further examination it was disclosed that the defendant received a bill of sale from the agent of the plaintiff that did not contain an express warranty for the sheep sold, held, that the oral evidence given in relation to the terms of the contract should have been excluded; that the defendant should not have been permitted to show the representations and statements made previous to the execution of such bill of sale, the presumption of law being that the written instrument contained the whole contract, and should govern, unless fraud had been alleged and proved.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Trego county; S. J. Osborn, Judge.

J. Warner Mills, H. C. Dillon, Hollister & Hollister, and E. E. Chesney, for plaintiff in error. Hutchinson & Banks, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. This was an action upon a promissory note executed by John M. Ostrander on the 2d day of September, 1885, to Frank G. Willard, for the sum of $965 payable in 1 year and 11 months after date, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. The answer of Ostrander admitted the execution of the note, but alleged that it was given in part payment for a flock of sheep purchased of Willard; that Charles Weeks, the duly-authorized agent of Willard, sold and delivered to Ostrander 2,178 head of sheep, for $5,358, and warranted them to be sound, healthy, and free from all disease; that the entire purchase price for said sheep had been paid, except the note sued upon, and one other note for $965.11, $200 of which had been paid; that the two notes mentioned were secured by a chattel mortgage upon the sheep so sold, but not upon the wool. The answer further alleged that, at the time of the sale and delivery, the sheep were not in a healthy condition, and free from disease, but had a contagious disease known as "mange," "scab," or "itch," all of which was well known to the plaintiff; that, at the time of the purchase, Ostrander was the owner of a large herd of other valuable sheep, and that the sheep purchased of the plaintiff were bought for the purpose of increasing his herd, and to be kept with them on his sheep ranch in Trego county, all of which was made known to the plaintiff; that the defendant relied upon the representations and warranty of the plaintiff, took said sheep into his possession, and upon his ranch, and permitted them to mix indiscriminately with his other sheep, until he discovered their diseased condition; that the disease was communicated to the defendant's other sheep, by reason of which 300 sheep and lambs belonging to the defendant died, and that he was thereby damaged in the sum of $750; that the remainder of this flock, consisting of 1,673 sheep, were depreciated in value in the sum of 75 cents per head, aggregating $1,404.75; that he had been damaged by labor and expenses necessarily incurred in the care of the sheep, to arrest the spread and to cure the disease, for medicine and costs of dipping 2,700 sheep, $200, making a total loss and damage to the defendant in the sum of $2,354.75. The answer further alleged that the notes were the property of the plaintiff, and that they were fraudulent and void in law, and asked judgment that the plaintiff be ordered to bring each of the notes mentioned into court for cancellation; and also asked judgment for $424, the balance due him for his damages after the cancellation of said notes, with 7 per cent. interest; that, in case the plaintiff, from any cause, should fail to bring the notes into court for cancellation, then that he have judgment against the plaintiff for the sum of $2,354, his damages and costs, with interest on $1,930 from September 2, 1885. A general denial was filed to this answer. The action was tried on the 19th day of September, 1888, in the district court of Trego county. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, assessing his damages at $2,191.56.

It is claimed that the defendant's right of recovery, if any, was based exclusively upon a written bill of sale executed by Weeks, as agent for the plaintiff in error, and that the court erred in permitting oral evidence to be introduced in relation to the warranty. It seems from the evidence that negotiations had been pending for some time between Ostrander and Weeks, the agent of the plaintiff in error, for the purchase of the flock of sheep in question. The sale was consummated on the 2d day of September, 1885, and the notes and a chattel mortgage were executed, but the cash payment of $1,500 was not made until the 14th day of September, when the following bill of sale was executed and delivered to the defendant in error: "Know all men by these presents that, in consideration of the sum of five thousand three hundred and fifty-eight ($5,358.00) dollars, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I do grant, sell, transfer, and deliver unto John M. Ostrander, of Wa-Keeney, Kansas, him, and his heirs, executors, and administrators and assigns, the following goods and chattels, viz.: Eleven hundred (1,100) grade ewes, known as the 'Willard ewes'; said ewes are all over * * * to four years of age, except fifty, which may be over four years of age; also four hundred and thirty-three (433) lambs and six hundred and forty (640) wethers, from one to two years of age,—all of which are free from disease, and in a healthy condition, to the best of my knowledge and belief. To have and to hold, all and singular, the said goods and chattels forever. And the said grantor hereby covenants with the said grantee that he is the lawful agt. of the said goods and chattels; that they are free from all incumbrances; that he has good right to sell the same, as aforesaid; and that he will warrant and defend the same against the lawful claims and demands of all persons whomsoever. In witness whereof the said grantor has hereunto set his hand this 14th day of September, A. D. 1885. CHARLES WEEKS, Agt. Executed in the presence of JOHN H. MARCH." It was claimed by the defendant in error that after he had prepared this bill of sale, and delivered it to Weeks for execution, he inserted after the words, "healthy condition," "to the best of my knowledge and belief;" that, after obtaining the signature, Ostrander placed the paper in his pocket, and did not examine it until some weeks after, when he discovered some of the sheep were diseased. The court below permitted oral evidence to be introduced in relation to the purchase of the sheep, and, when it was disclosed that a bill of sale had been given, refused to exclude from the jury all evidence as to a parol contract. This is the controlling question in this case. A careful examination of the evidence in this case convinces us that this purchase was concluded and is evidenced by this bill of sale, and that all parol evidence should have been excluded when it was ascertained that the bill of sale had been executed. The pleadings were silent as to this instrument. There was no pretense that fraud had been practiced in its execution, but the claim is made by the defendant in error that this bill of sale is not the contract the parties entered into; that he did not accept it as such contract; that he affirms instead the contract set up in his answer; that, after Weeks had executed the bill of sale, he put it in his pocket, but did not accept it, because he found that the words, "to the best of my knowledge and belief," had been added to the instrument after it had been delivered to Weeks for his signature. It is not claimed that there was any change in the writing after Weeks had signed it. The paper remained in the possession of the defendant in error, or his attorneys, all the time until it was produced in court. We do not think he can now be heard to say that the bill of sale is not the contract of purchase. He held it for two years, admitted to several parties that he had a warranty, and never intimated to the plaintiff in error that there was anything wrong with the bill of sale, but refused to let him examine it. The action of the defendant in error showed that he accepted the bill of sale. It was clearly his duty to read it after its execution and delivery, and he cannot now say that it is not the contract of purchase. If a change had been made in the instrument without his knowledge, he should have repudiated the contract as soon as he discovered the change. He admitted that he looked at the contract a few weeks after it had been delivered to him, and found there had been an alteration, but he said nothing about it. He met the plaintiff in error frequently, and paid him different sums of money upon the said transaction, and yet made no objection to the bill of sale. In the case of Grace v. Adams, 100 Mass. 507, the supreme court of that state held that a party accepting a receipt was bound by its terms. The court, through COLT, J., said: "The receipt was delivered to the plaintiff as the contract of the defendants; it is in proper form; and the terms and conditions are expressed in the body of it in a way not calculated to escape attention. The acceptance of it by the plaintiff, at the time of the delivery of his package, without notice of his dissent from the terms, authorized the defendants to infer assent by the plaintiff. It was his only voucher and evidence against the defendants. It is not claimed that he did not know, when he took it, that it was a shipping contract or bill of lading. It was his duty to read it. The law presumes, in the absence of fraud or imposition, that he did read it, or was otherwise informed of its contents, and was willing to assent to its terms without reading it. Any other rule would fail to conform to the experience of all men. Written contracts are intended to preserve the exact terms of the obligations assumed, so that they may not be subject to the chances of a want of recollection or an intentional misstatement. The defendants have a right to this protection, and are not to be deprived of it by the willful or negligent omission of the plaintiff to read the paper." The same doctrine is stated in Bigelow, Fraud, 525: "No doubt it would be imprudent, in a sense, not to read or to require the reading of an instrument before signing or accepting it; indeed, the courts would turn a deaf ear to a man who sought to get rid of a contract solely on the ground that its terms were not what he supposed them to be." The same rule is laid down in Hawkins v. Hawkins, 50 Cal. 558; Bacon v. Markley, 46 Ind. 116; Taylor v. Fleckenstein, 30 Fed. Rep. 103; Hazard v. Griswold, 21 Fed. Rep. 178; Rice v. Manufacturing Co., 2 Cush. 87; and Jaeger v. Whitsett, 3 Colo. 105.

The validity of the bill of sale was not challenged by the pleading, and, the defendant below having accepted it, we think he cannot now be heard to say that it was not the contract. When it was disclosed that there was a bill of sale given at the final consummation of the purchase of this flock of sheep, it was clearly the duty of the court to have excluded all oral evidence in relation to the sale. The rule is stated by the supreme court of Mississippi: "When parties have deliberately put their engagements in writing, it is conclusively presumed that the whole contract, and the entire extent of their undertakings, were reduced to writing; and oral testimony of a previous, contemporaneous, or subsequent colloquium is rejected, as it would tend to substitute a new contract for the one really agreed on." Wren v. Hoffman, 41 Miss. 619, and authorities there cited; Kerr v. Kuykendall, 44 Miss.

146. This court has said, in one of the early cases, that where one of the main questions in dispute, the initial point in the case, is an alleged purchase, and it is disclosed that the alleged purchase was concluded in and is evidenced by a bill of sale, all parol testimony should be excluded until the writing is produced. The latter is the best evidence. Barnett v. Williams, 7 Kan. 341. In Dunn v. Hewitt, 2 Denio, 637, it was held that, where a bill of sale had been given for the purchase of personal property, a party making title by virtue of such purchase must produce the writing, and cannot prove the transfer by parol; and, where the existence of the bill of sale was first disclosed on cross-examination of a witness who had orally proved the transfer on his direct examination, the parol testimony should be stricken out. In Van Ostrand v. Reed, 1 Wend. 424, it was decided that a party, on the sale of an article, made representations amounting to a warranty, and the sale was consummated by a written transfer without a clause of warranty being inserted. The vendee, in an action of assumpsit, was not permitted to show the representations and assertions made previous to the execution of the instrument of transfer; the presumption of the law being that the writing contained the whole contract. The supreme court of Iowa has enunciated the same rule. All agreements and negotiations preliminary or contemporaneous to the written contract are merged therein, and the party signing a contract without having read it, or taken precautions to ascertain its contents, is bound thereby. Railway Co. v. Cox, 76 Iowa, 306, 41 N. W. Rep. 24; McCormack v. Molburg, 48 Iowa, 561; McKinney v. Herrick, 66 Iowa, 414, 23 N. W. Rep. 767. It is contended by the defendant in error that the warranty was given after the sale was consummated, and was therefore void. The evidence does not sustain this position. The cash payment of $1,500 was made the same day the bill of sale was executed, and the defendant below insisted that he should have a contract in writing. The view we take of the law applicable to this case necessitates a reversal, for the reasons stated upon the first assignment of error. It will not be necessary for us to consider the other numerous assigned errors, as they will not likely occur again, upon a second trial. It is recommended that the judgment of the district court be reversed, and a new trial be granted.

PER CURIAM It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

MEYER BROS. DRUG CO. v. BROWN et al.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

PROPERTY SUBJECT TO MECHANIC'S LIEN—PRIORITIES.

1. A person in possession of real estate under a verbal agreement to convey the fee-simple title to him is an owner thereof within the meaning of our statute relating to material-men's liens, and may subject his interest therein to such a lien.

2. Where a person in possession contracts for material for the erection of a building upon the premises, and a portion of the material has been furnished and the construction of the building begun, and afterwards, pursuant to said agreement, the full title is conveyed to him, held, that the lien for the material so contracted, if filed in time, is prior to mortgage liens obtained subsequent thereto.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Woodson county; L. STILLWELL, Judge.

W. H. Slavens, for plaintiff in error. M. C. Smith and J. B. Larimer, for defendants in error.

STRANG, C. This was an action to determine the priority of certain liens between the parties thereto. It was tried by the court June 12, 1888, on the following agreed statement of facts: "S. A. Brown & Co. entered into a contract with D. A. Wilson, defendant, in December, 1886, to furnish lumber and materials to erect a building on lots 1, 2, and 3, block 7, Yates' fourth addition to the city of Yates Center, Kan. At the date of said contract G. H. Phillips held the legal title to said lots, which were at that time unimproved, but there was an agreement between said Phillips and D. A. Wilson by which said Phillips was to convey said lots to D. A. Wilson. That on January 1, 1887, G. H. Phillips and wife conveyed said lots to said D. A. Wilson by warranty deed, and that on January 6, 1887, said D. A. Wilson and wife executed and delivered to Scott & Brier, defendants herein, a mortgage on said lots to secure the payment of $550, for the purpose of obtaining money to pay for the lumber and materials to erect a dwelling on said lots. S. A. Brown & Co. had, prior to January 1st, furnished a portion of said lumber and work and commenced on said house, and balance of said lumber was furnished at different times subsequent to January 1, 1887, and the house was completed some months afterwards; and that within four months after the completion of said building the mechanic's lien statement of S. A. Brown & Co. was properly filed in the district clerk's office. That to secure a part of the purchase money said D. A. Wilson and wife executed and delivered to said G. H. Phillips on January 6, 1887, a mortgage of $150, which was afterwards transferred to the Meyer Bros. Drug Company, one of the defendants. That said mortgage was made subsequent to said mortgage of said Scott & Brier. That said Phillips had knowledge that said mortgage of Scott & Brier was executed to obtain money for the erection of said building, and that said Phillips sold the lots with the understanding that a building was to be erected thereon. Some time in December, 1886, said Phillips by contract with Wilson agreed to sell to him the lots in question for $100, to be paid January 1, 1887, time on balance, but length of time not mentioned. Wilson commenced to build, but without any understanding with Phillips that any one should acquire any lien prior to his, (Phillips'.) When Phillips gave a deed it was with the understanding with Wilson that there should be no liens except Scott & Brier's mortgage ahead of his mortgage, which was for part purchase money, and Phillips never had any talk or understanding with Brown & Co. about the matter. That Brown & Co. had no knowledge of the talk between Phillips and Wilson in regard to liens or mortgages aforesaid." On said statement of facts the court found that S. A. Brown & Co. were entitled to a first lien upon the premises for the amount of their claim, $120.46; that Moses Clark, assignee of the defendants Scott & Brier, was entitled to a second lien on the premises for the amount of his claim, $648.25; and that the plaintiff in error, the Meyer Bros. Drug Company, assignee of G. H. Phillips, was entitled to a third lien upon the premises for $176. Meyer Bros. objected to the judgment of the court, and bring the case here for review, and say they should have been given a second lien upon the premises, it being conceded by the plaintiff in error that Scott & Brier should have the first lien thereon, and that the lien of S. A. Brown & Co. should have been postponed to both the lien of Scott & Brier and their own. The agreed statement of facts, which contains all the evidence in the case, shows that in December, 1886, G. H. Phillips was the owner of the lots described in the petition of the plaintiff below, and that some time during that month he verbally promised to sell the premises to D. A. Wilson for $250; $100 to be paid January 1, 1887, with time to Wilson on the balance. Wilson paid the $100 on the 1st of January, 1887, and Phillips and wife made to him a deed for the lots on that day. On the 6th day of the same month Wilson and wife executed to Scott & Brier a mortgage covering the premises for $550, to secure that amount of money borrowed of them by Wilson for the purpose of erecting a house on said lots. At the same time Wilson also executed to G. H. Phillips a mortgage for the balance of the purchase money for said lots. These mortgages were immediately placed on record. It was understood between Phillips, Wilson, and Scott & Brier, that Scott & Brier should have the first lien upon the premises, and Phillips should have the second lien thereon. The agreed statement also shows that in December, 1886, Wilson contracted with S. A. Brown & Co. to furnish him lumber and material to erect a house on said lots; that they furnished him some lumber on the 3d of December, 1886, and the balance from time to time subsequent thereto, until September 21, 1887, when the last material was furnished. The amount of lumber in value furnished December 3, 1886, was $122.12. January 31, 1887, there was paid on said contract for lumber $122.12. The next payment, $138.41, was made February 25, 1887, and the last one September 27, 1887. The agreed statement also shows that work was commenced on the building before the 1st of January, 1887.

The contention of the plaintiff in error is that Wilson had no title to the lots in December, when he contracted for the lumber with S. A. Brown & Co., and consequently no interest therein to which a lien for lumber and material sold before the 1st of January could attach; and, second, that, if Wilson had any interest in the lots to which a lien for the lumber furnished in December could attach, that lumber was fully paid for January 31, 1887, and any claim for compensation or a lien therefor was thus fully satisfied. And as to material furnished after January 6, 1887, any lien therefor must be subsequent to the lien of the plaintiff in error. We do not think either of the positions of the plaintiff in error are tenable. It is conceded that, at the time Wilson contracted with S. A. Brown & Co. for material, Phillips had by a verbal agreement promised to convey the lots to Wilson on the 1st of January, and that said agreement was executed at that time by Phillips deeding the lots to Wilson. The agreed statement shows that work was actually begun on the building in the month of December. It follows, then, that Wilson was in possession of the lots, and had commenced the erection of the building for the construction of which S. A. Brown & Co. had contracted to furnish material, before any mortgage was placed on record against the lots. It is true that the legal title to the lots was in Phillips when the contract for material was made between Wilson and Brown & Co., but as Phillips had agreed to convey the lots to Wilson, and gave Wilson possession of them for the purpose of erecting a building thereon, Wilson had sufficient title therein to enable him to contract for material for the construction of the building, and sufficient for a lien to attach thereto under the law of this state giving a material man a lien for materials furnished for the erection of buildings. When Phillips, in December, agreed to convey the lots to Wilson and gave him possession of them, Wilson got such an equity therein as made him an owner within the meaning of our statute relating to liens for material. Hence Brown & Co. had a right under the law to contract with him to furnish material for the construction of a building thereon, and also to secure a lien on the premises for the material so furnished, in preference to any subsequent lien obtained against the lots. Hathaway v. Davis, 32 Kan. 693, 5 Pac. Rep. 29; Phil. Mech. Liens, §§ 69, 139; Lumber Co. v. Oshorn, 40 Kan. 168, 19 Pac. Rep. 656; Huff v. Jolly, 41 Kan. 537, 21 Pac. Rep. 646; Lumber Co. v. Schweiter, (Kan.) 25 Pac. Rep. 592; Trust Co. v. Sutton, (Kan.) 26 Pac. Rep. 406.

As to the second point made by the plaintiff in error, while it is true that the lumber furnished by Brown & Co. December 3, 1886, was fully and exactly paid for by the payment made January 31, 1887, yet it does not necessarily follow that the lumber delivered subsequently was sold on a separate and distinct contract from the one made in December. The fact that lumber and materials amounting in value to $122.12 were sold and delivered in December, and no more lumber was delivered until February 25th, coupled with the fact that on the 31st of January, 1887, a payment was made for the exact value of the lumber first delivered, creates an inference perhaps, that there were two separate contracts for lumber, and that the lumber first purchased had been fully paid for by the payment of January 31, 1887; but this inference, and it is but a mere inference, arising from the exhibit attached to the petition, is overcome by the agreed statement of facts, which says: "S. A. Brown & Co. entered into a contract with D. A. Wilson, the defendant, in December, 1886, to furnish lumber and material to erect a building upon lots 1, 2, and 3," being the lots described in the petition of the plaintiff below. From this statement it appears that Brown & Co. in December contracted to furnish lumber and materials for the building, which means the whole building. This statement completely excludes the idea that there was one contract for part of the lumber in December, and another for the balance in February following. If the contract for lumber and materials to erect the building was made in December, there was no occasion for a new contract in February for lumber and materials for the same building. And besides, if there were two contracts for the lumber, the agreed statement should have shown that there were, instead of stating that a contract was made in December for the material for the building, which, as stated above, means the whole building. It is recommended that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

MAYOR, ETC., OF CITY OF GARDEN CITY v. HALL.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

MANDAMUS — MOTION TO QUASH — CANVASS OF VOTES.

Where an alternative writ of mandamus is granted to compel the officers of a city to canvass the votes cast at an election for a member of the school board held in an outlying territory of the city, and the alternative writ shows that illegal votes were cast at the election, but that it is impossible for the officers of the city to separate the legal votes from the illegal votes, or to tell for whom the legal votes were cast, such writ states no cause of action, and a motion to quash the writ should be sustained.

(Syllabus by Strang, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Finney county; A. J. ABBOTT, Judge.

A. G. C. Bierer, Geo. E. Morgan, and Milton Brown, for plaintiffs in error. Hopkins & Hoskinson, for defendant in error.

STRANG, C. This was a proceeding in mandamus to compel the plaintiffs in error to canvass the votes cast at an election held in the outlying territory attached to Garden City for school purposes on the 1st day of April, 1890, for the election of a member of the school board of said city. On the hearing of the application the defendants below demurred to the application, which demurrer was overruled. An answer was then filed, which was in turn demurred to by the plaintiff below. This demurrer was sustained, and thereupon the court allowed the writ ordering the defendants below to canvass the returns of said election, to declare the plaintiff below elected as a member of the school board of said city, and issue to him a certificate of election. To such action on the part of the court the defendants below objected, and bring the matter here for review. The court, in allowing the peremptory writ in this case, required the defendants below to not only canvass the returns of the election described in the petition as having been held, but required them to declare the plaintiff below elected as a member of the school board of said city, and also issue to him a certificate of his election. In this the court exceeded its authority. It had no power, in any event, to require the defendants below to declare that Hall had been elected a member of said school board. This action of the court, therefore, was erroneous. But should the defendants below, on the petition in this case, have been required to canvass the returns of said election at all? We think not. The law never, under any circumstances, requires the performance or attempted performance of an impossibility. Nor does it ever require a useless thing to be done. The petition in this case, with the exhibit attached thereto as a part of it, shows that, with but one officer to elect, 27 electors cast 44 votes. The petition thus shows that illegal votes were cast at that election. The petition does not show, nor attempt to show, how many of the votes cast were illegal, nor for whom such illegal votes were counted. Nor is it possible from the face of the returns, made a part of the petition, to ascertain for whom the illegal votes were cast and counted. It is easy to discern from the returns that at last 17 illegal votes were cast, and there may have been more than that number, because there was but one officer to be elected, and there were 44 votes polled with but 27 electors voting. The plaintiff below, in the body of his petition, assumes that there were 27 legal votes cast, and that he received 17 of them. This he attempts to establish by attaching to his petition the returns of the election board of said election. But the exhibit fails to support the allegation in the body of his petition, but, on the other hand, shows that it is impossible to ascertain from said exhibit the number of legal votes cast at said election, or for whom they were cast. The petition, as it stands, showing that it was impossible for the defendants below to separate the legal votes from the illegal votes cast at said election, or to tell therefrom for whom the legal votes were cast, it was impossible for them to canvass the votes of said election, and declare the result thereof. It follows, then, that the plaintiff below, by his petition, did not make a sufficient showing to entitle him to the writ allowed. We think the demurrer to said petition should, therefore, have been sustained. As to the answer, if the plaintiff below had otherwise been entitled to the writ, we think the third defense set up in the answer was a sufficient defense to any right the plaintiff below claimed in his petition as ground for the writ, and that the demurrer thereto should therefore have been overruled. For these reasons we recommend that the judgment of the district court be reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial.

STATE V. HESCHER.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE.

1. In prosecutions for selling intoxicating liquor in violation of the prohibitory law, when the information is not verified by the oath of the county attorney, and there is filed with it the testimony of a private person at an examination made by the county attorney, the defendant cannot be found guilty of any offense except one of which the person who was examined by the county attorney had notice or knowledge at the time of his examination.

2. At the trial of such a case, it is error for the trial court to refuse to instruct the jury, at the request of the defendant, "that no conviction can be had of any offense except such as the county attorney, or the party who made the statement that was filed with the information, knew of at the time; and if you believe, from all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case, that any offense relied upon for conviction by the prosecution was not known by the county attorney, or such person who made such statement, then you cannot convict of such offense," when it appears from the record that neither the information nor the statement filed with it charges any such offense.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from Wyandotte county; O. L. MILLER, Judge. W. E. Brown, for appellant. L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and Winfield Freeman, for the State.

SIMPSON, C. The appellant was convicted in the district court of Wyandotte county for a violation of the prohibitory liquor law on 4 counts, and sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and to be imprisoned in the county jail for 30 days on each of the 4 counts. He appeals to this court from the judgment of conviction, and complains that the information was not verified, and that two jurors were improperly placed in the box by the trial court. In view of other and more serious errors, we do not deem it necessary to discuss these questions.

He was convicted on the first count upon a sale to a party unknown, in the month of July, 1889. There was filed with the information the testimony of one witness named John M. O'Neil, and the information was not supported by any other testimony. On the examination of O'Neil by the county attorney, he was asked to "state the names and residences of all persons you have seen buy and pay him for intoxicating liquors since the 1st day of June, 1890." O'Neil answers this by giving the names of 20 persons. This conviction was based upon a sale to a party unknown. O'Neil enumerates all persons to whom he had knowledge of sales having been made. This conviction was based upon a sale made in 1889. The sales testified to by O'Neil were made since June 1, 1890. It is consequently shown that the prosecuting witness had no knowledge of the sale upon which conviction was had at the time the information was filed. These facts bring this particular sale within the cases of State v. Brooks, 33 Kan. 708, 7 Pac. Rep. 591; State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 265, 8 Pac. Rep. 420, and the subsequent cases. So as to the conviction upon the eleventh count, which was for a sale to one W. W. Berry, in August, 1890, he not being one of the persons enumerated in the testimony of O'Neill. State v. Whisner, 35 Kan. 271, 10 Pac. Rep. 852; State v. Lawson, (Kan.) 25 Pac. Rep. 864.

On the third and fourth counts the conviction was based upon a somewhat different state of facts. But the defendant asked the trial court to instruct the jury as follows: "The court further instructs the jury that no conviction can be had of any offense except such as the county attorney, or the party who made the statement that was filed in this action with the information, knew of at the time; and if you believe, from all the facts and circumstances surrounding this case, that any offense relied upon for conviction by the prosecutor was not known by the county attorney, or such person who made such statement, or that said county attorney, or such other person who made such statement, had some information in relation to it, then you cannot convict of such offense." This instruction, as asked for, had application to the facts as presented on the trial; it embodies the law as declared by this court; and it was material error to refuse to give it, without the substance of it was embraced in the general instructions given to the jury. Unfortunately, we have not been able to find the substance of this instruction, or the question presented by it, referred to in the instructions that went to the jury. We recommend that the judgment of conviction be reversed, and a new trial granted.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

STATE v. FALK.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS—PLEAS IN ABATEMENT—ELECTION OF COUNTS—INSTRUCTION—EVIDENCE.

1. Where the defendant filed a plea in abatement to an information wherein he was charged with violating the prohibitory law, upon the ground (1) that he was informed against as Rheinhardt Falk, when his true name was Rheinhardt Falk; (2) that the information was not founded upon any information or knowledge of the county attorney, when he verified the same; and there was a hearing upon the plea and the same was sustained as to certain counts and overruled as to others; and the defendant afterwards was arraigned and entered the plea of not guilty, and was tried upon the counts in the information to which the plea in abatement had been overruled, and found guilty,—held, that no error was committed.

2. When a plea in abatement has been sustained as to certain counts in an information, it is not proper for the state to ask a conviction upon any of such counts; and, when an election is made in writing, at the close of the evidence upon the part of the state, it cannot modify such election, after all the evidence is admitted.

3. Where the court has instructed the jury properly, but omits some matter which might, with propriety, have been given, no substantial error is committed, unless the court has been requested to instruct with reference to such matter. State v. Peterson, 38 Kan. 204, 16 Pac. Rep. 268, followed.

4. It is not error, in a criminal case, for the trial court to receive the evidence of a witness, notwithstanding the fact that he has violated an order of the court to remain outside of the courtroom while other witnesses are testifying. He may be punished for disobeying a rule of the court, but the state or the defendant should not be deprived of his evidence.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Wyandotte county; O. L. MILLER, Judge.

W. E. Brown, for appellant. L. B. Kellogg, Atty. Gen., and Winfield Freeman, for the State.

GREEN, C. The appellant was charged, in an information containing 60 counts, with violating the prohibitory law in Wyandotte county. A plea in abatement was filed and sustained, except as to the first 14 counts in the information. The defendant was afterwards arraigned, and entered the plea of not guilty, and was tried and convicted on 14 counts.

1. The appellant claims that the court erred in overruling in part his plea in abatement, and assigns as a reason that the information did not state his name correctly; that it purported to inform against Rheinhardt Falk while his name was Rheinhardt Falk. We fail to see wherein the defendant was prejudiced by the ruling of the court. After the plea in abatement had been heard, he was proceeded against by the name of Rheinhardt Falk, and by that name was tried and convicted, and no substantial error was committed. Other objections are urged against the information,—that it nowhere showed who had knowledge of any of the offenses charged; that it was not supported by the oath or affirmation of any one, and no statement of any witness was filed with the information. All of these objections were waived by the defendant in pleading not guilty. No motion was made to quash the warrant or information. State v. Allison, 44 Kan. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 964; State v. Ash, 44 Kan. 84, 24 Pac. Rep. 72; State v. Jessup, 42 Kan. 422, 22 Pac. Rep. 627. Besides, we cannot say, from the record before us, that the testimony of the witnesses was not filed. The recitals in the record would indicate that the evidence was filed with the information. The certificate of the clerk of the district court simply states that the record contains the evidence, proceedings, and verdict. We cannot say, from this certificate, that the record before us is complete.

2. It is next contended that the verdict of the jury should not be upheld, because the state elected to stand upon several of the counts of the information to which the plea in abatement had been sustained. It appears from the record that there were two elections,—the first, at the close of the evidence upon the part of the state, when the state asked for a conviction on the 6th, 7th, 12th, 13th, and 14th counts of the information, to which the plea in abatement had been overruled, and also 9 other counts in the information, to which the plea in abatement had been sustained. Elsewhere in the record it appears that the state elected to stand upon the first 14 counts of the information. This election seems to have been made after the state and defendant had introduced their evidence. We think the state is bound by the first election, and the verdict can only stand as to the 6th, 7th, 12th, 13th, and 14th counts, and as to all of the others it should be set aside.

3. Complaint is made that the instructions of the court are vague, indefinite, and that the court did not inform the jury what sales the state elected to ask a conviction upon. We think it would have been the better practice for the court to have stated to the jury each of the counts upon which the state relied for conviction in the instructions; but no request was made by the defendant for any such instructions. The rule is well established that where the court properly instructs the jury, but omits some instructions which might have been given, and no request was made for such instructions, no reversible error is committed. State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 96, 12 Pac. Rep. 408; State v. Peterson, 38 Kan. 204, 16 Pac. Rep. 263; State v. Estep, 44 Kan. —, 24 Pac. Rep. 986.

4. The last assignment which we shall notice is that the witnesses for the state were placed under the rule and admonished not to state what their evidence would be and to remain out of hearing of the witnesses on the stand, and that the rule was violated. The fact that a witness remained in court, in disobedience to an order to remain outside the court-room, is not a ground for rejecting his evidence. He may be punished for violating the order of the court. Davenport v. Ogg, 15 Kan. 364; 2 Phil. Ev. (5th Amer. Ed.) 744. It is recommended that the judgment of the trial court be modified by setting aside the verdict and judgment of conviction of guilty, except as to the 6th, 7th, 12th, 13th, and 14th counts in the information, and that the judgment be affirmed as to the counts named.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

SNIVELY v. HILL et al.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

TRIAL BEFORE JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—AGREEMENT TO ARBITRATE.

1. In an action before a justice of the peace that had been continued to a day certain by the agreement of both parties, an attorney for the defendant has no right to rely on a promise of the justice that the case should not be called for trial until the attorney had been notified.

2. An agreement to arbitrate all matters in dispute made by the parties to an action then pending before a justice of the peace, the record failing to show that such agreement was made in the presence of the justice, or that his attention had ever been called to the same, or that it was ever made the basis of a motion to dismiss or discontinue the suit, or that any arbitration had ever taken place, is not of itself sufficient to discontinue the suit.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Brown county; R. C. BASSETT, Judge.

W. D. Webb and F. W. Raymond, for plaintiff in error. Samuel F. Newlon and C. W. Johnson, for defendants in error.

SIMPSON, C. Action in the district court of Brown county by Snively against A. J. Hill, Fred F. Hill, and L. S. Herbert, justice of the peace, to restrain the collection of a judgment rendered by Herbert as a justice of the peace against Snively and in favor of Hill Bros. for $161.37 and costs of suit. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the petition of the plaintiff, and he brings the cause here for review, standing on the petition. The petition alleged the commencement of the action before the justice. On the return-day of the summons both parties appeared in person and by counsel, and the cause was continued by agreement until the 1st day of August, 1888, at 10 o'clock A. M. That on the same day it was agreed by the parties that the matters in dispute should be submitted to arbitration, and under said agreement Hill Bros. selected an arbitrator, and Snively chose one, and these two were to select a third, and the decision of two was to be binding upon the parties. That the arbitration was postponed at the request of one of the defendants in error, on account of sickness and death in his family. That a day or two before the 1st day of August, 1888, the attorney of the plaintiff in error went to the office of the justice of the peace, and was then informed by the said justice that he had made no entry on his docket of the adjournment of the trial from the return-day of the summons until the 1st day of August; and that it was then agreed by the justice and the said attorney that the case would not be called for trial without the said attorney was notified of the time. That the attorney then went away and awaited such notice, but that no notice was ever given to him. On the 1st day of August Hill Bros. appeared, and continued the case until the 16th day of August at 10 o'clock A. M. On the 16th the plaintiffs below appeared by counsel, and continued the case until August 31st, the defendant below not appearing. On the 31st the plaintiffs appeared, and continued the case until the 15th day of September at 10 o'clock A. M. On the 15th of September, the defendant not appearing, the plaintiffs below took judgment for $161.37 and costs. There were all the other necessary averments in the petition. The plaintiff in error bases his claim for reversal on these three propositions: First. The judgment was fraudulent because there was an agreement with the justice that Snively's attorney should be notified before the case was called for trial, and judgment was rendered weeks after, without the knowledge of the plaintiff in error or his attorney, or without giving the plaintiff in error his day in court, and by lulling him to repose. Second. That by the neglect of the justice to make the entry of the order of continuance on his docket he lost jurisdiction of the cause. Third. That the agreement to arbitrate was a discontinuance of the suit, and for the defendants in error to afterwards take judgment without notice was unfair, dishonorable, and fraudulent. The question for us is, does the petition state a good cause of action by its various recitations respecting these matters?

1. As to the first of these it is apparent both from the recitations of the petition and the entries on the justice's docket, a transcript of which is embodied in the petition, that the plaintiff in error was present on the return-day of the summons, when the case was continued by agreement; that it was set for trial on the 1st day of August; and that it was his bounden duty to be there in person or by attorney. The justice, in the absence of the parties who brought the action, had no legal right to assure the attorney of the plaintiff in error that the case should not be called for trial until the attorney was notified of the time. The time of trial had been fixed on the 1st day of August by agreement. The justice could not change it without a further agreement by the parties. The petition does not allege that either the plaintiff in error or his attorney was not present on the 1st day of August by reason of the pending proposition to arbitrate, but the claim is based exclusively upon the proposition that the justice had agreed with the attorney that the case should not be called for trial until the attorney was notified of the time, and the time had already been fixed by agreement of all parties. Again, it is said that the justice informed the attorney that he had made no entry of the continuance from the return-day of the summons to the 1st day of August; and yet they place in the petition an extract from the docket of the justice that recites "that now, on this 2d day of July, 1888, at 10 o'clock A. M., the plaintiffs appear in person and by attorney; defendant also appeared in person; and by agreement this case was continued till August 1st, 1888, at 10 o'clock A. M. of said day." With these two contradictory statements both contained in the petition,—one that no entry was made, the other showing by the docket itself on its face that it was made at the proper time,—we will not disturb the ruling of the district court on this question.

2. The second contention is that the justice lost jurisdiction of the case by reason of not having made the proper entries at the time the particular proceeding took place, but what we have already said with respect to the continuance from the return-day of the summons is a sufficient answer.

3. The third contention is that the agreement to arbitrate was a discontinuance of the suit. As it is not alleged that this agreement was made before the justice or in the justice's court, or that it was ever called to the attention of the justice, or that it was ever made the basis of a motion to dismiss the action or discontinue the suit, it is difficult to see how it could have had the effect claimed. Without adverting to other evident reasons, this contention is not sound.

4. The record shows affirmatively that from the return-day of the summons the plaintiff in error and his attorney paid no attention to the proceedings in this action. The parties who instituted it before the justice continued it three times in the absence of the plaintiff in error, and these continuances, made under such circumstances, are very strong protests against any inference of fraud or undue means. If there was an agreement to arbitrate such as could have been enforced, ordinary care in the management of a lawsuit would have prompted any reasonable man to have called the attention of the justice to it. We recommend an affirmance of the judgment.

JAY v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF EMPORIA.¹

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

BOARDS OF EDUCATION—RIGHT TO ELECT MEMBERS.

Outlying and adjacent territory attached to a city of the second class for school purposes is not entitled to elect members of the board of education of the city, to represent said territory, unless such territory contains a population equal to that of any one ward of the city, or its taxable property equals that of any one ward of the city.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Lyon county; C. B. GRAVES, Judge.

J. Harvey Frith and J. Jay Buck, for plaintiff in error. C. N. Sterry, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. W. S. Jay caused an alternative writ of mandamus to issue from the district court of Lyon county to the board of education of the city of Emporia, to show cause why he is not permitted to act and serve as a member of the board. He alleged that in 1874 territory lying outside of, but adjacent to, the limits of the city of Emporia was duly attached to said city for school purposes; that an election was duly ordered and held in 1874 for two members of said board, representing said territory; that from that time until May, 1890, said territory has been continuously represented on said board by members duly elected and qualified; that he was duly elected a member of said board in 1886, and acted as such during the succeeding two years; that he was duly re-elected in 1890, and qualified and acted as such until the 5th day of May, 1890, when a majority of said board excluded him from his seat; that no election for member of the board was ordered or held in the year 1890, and no successor elected, but that he holds over until a successor is elected and qualified. The board of education filed its answer to the alternative writ, admitting the election of members from the attached territory from 1874 until the last election of Jay; claimed that at an election held in 1889 one Caull claimed to be elected, but the board refused to canvass the vote and declare the result, and that no election has ever since been called by the board. The board admitted that, if said outlying territory is entitled to representation, and if the said Jay is entitled to hold his office for more than two years, and until his successor is elected and qualified, in such case he is a member of the board; but it alleged the fact to be that at no time before or since the 20th day of March, 1874, has the outlying territory mentioned and described in the alternative writ ever had a population equal to that of the smallest ward in the city of Emporia, and it never has had during that time an assessed valuation of property within its limits equal to that of the smallest and poorest ward in the city of Emporia, and that by reason of these facts said outlying territory is not now, and never has been, entitled to representation on said board of education. Jay filed a motion to quash the answer and return upon the ground that it contains no defense; and he further moved the court for a peremptory writ upon the pleadings. These motions were overruled by the trial court, and these rulings are assigned as errors here.

If the allegations in the return and answer, that the outlying territory never was entitled to representation for want of population and assessed valuation of property equal to the smallest and poorest ward in the city, stood alone, there could be no successful contention but that the return and answer stated a complete defense. The claim of counsel for plaintiff in error, however, is that by reason of the other recitations in the return and answer, showing acquiescence for 16 years,—a de facto representation all that time,—the board of education are estopped from now asserting that the outlying territory is not entitled to representation. It is also said on behalf of the plaintiff in error that the legality of his election cannot be determined by a mandamus proceeding. The authorities cited to sustain the de facto representation are all cases that go to the existence of a school-district or other public corporations. There is no question here as to the legality or existence, either legal or de facto, of the board of education of the city of Emporia. Jay's action is founded on the theory that the board of education of the city of Emporia is a legal body, and that he is a member of it. If he had been permitted to meet with the board, and participate in their proceedings, a question might have arisen as to whether he was acting as a de facto or de jure member of the board. A de facto officer is one who is surrounded with the insignia of office, and seems to act with authority. We find difficulty in making an application of the de facto principle to the details of this case. It will not do to say that the board of education of the city of Emporia, by calling elections in the outlying territory from 1874 to 1889, and by permitting persons to act as members from that territory during all that time, has created a de facto right of representation. A public or private corporation may have a de facto existence. We all know there are de facto officers. There may be a de facto court or office, the legality of which cannot be called in question except in a direct proceeding by the state, as when a court or office is established by a legislative act apparently valid, under which a court has gone into operation, or an office is filled and exercised. There may be de facto schools and school-masters, and even de facto school-houses. Kidder v. Chellis, 59 N. H. 473. A man may have a de facto wife,—being one whose marriage is voidable by decree. 4 Kent, Comm. 36. But this is about the limit of a principle that has grown out of an imperative public necessity. An office must be created by law; but an officer may be created by place, surroundings, appearances, and circumstances. But this one thing all lawyers agree about: that an office that does not have a de jure existence cannot have a de facto incumbent. If the outlying territory is not entitled to representation, if there was no such office as member of the board of education from the outlying territory, neither Jay's presence on the board, nor the length of time others had intruded on the board, or other acts of the board, could create an office not provided for by law. We are not considering Jay's action as a member of the board, or how his acts as such might affect third persons or the public. The inquiry he makes is as to whether he is entitled to a seat as a member of the board. To maintain this action he must show that the board of education, in its refusal to recognize him as a member, is violating some plain duty enjoined by law. His right depends upon the existence of certain statutory conditions, and these are that the outlying territory he claims to represent contains a population equal to that of any one ward in the city, or that its taxable property equaled that of any one ward in the city. The answer says neither of these conditions ever did exist, and there is nothing recited in the answer that mutilates or destroys the force and effect of the fact stated, either by acquiescence, estoppel, or the previous service of persons as members of the board from the outlying territory. While, as to such service, their acts might be held good, as those of de facto officers, yet they create no succession, or originate no right of representation, which by time and acquiescence can ripen into legal right; and to succeed he must show that he was legally elected. It is not necessary, we think, to consider any other question discussed by counsel, as our decision is based upon the fact that there was no such office as a member of the board of education of the city of Emporia from the outlying territory. This decision, being on demurrer to admitted facts, is final, unless the facts are not fairly stated in the answer. We recommend that the ruling of the district court of Lyon county adverse to the motion to quash the return be affirmed.

STATE v. GEER.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY — INFORMATION — EVIDENCE.

1. An information for subornation of perjury which fails to state that the false affidavit or testimony of the suborned witness was used, or procured to be used, in some cause, matter, or proceeding before some court, tribunal, or public body or officer, is fatally defective.

2. In subornation of perjury, the same rule as to the materiality of testimony prevails as in perjury.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Appeal from district court, Coffey county; CHARLES B. GRAVES, Judge.

S. M. Porter, for appellant. J. N. Ives, Atty. Gen., for the State.

GREEN, C. Appellant was prosecuted and convicted of the crime of subornation of perjury in the district court of Coffey county, and sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary for three years, and adjudged to pay the costs of the prosecution. He appeals from such sentence and judgment. The information charged substantially that Margaret F. Mickens unlawfully, feloniously, willfully, corruptly and falsely committed willful and corrupt perjury, by swearing and subscribing to a complaint before L. S. ROBINSON, a justice of the peace of Coffey county, in which she charged her father, John Mickens, with rape, incest, and bastardy, and that the defendant persuaded, incited, procured, and suborned her to make the false oath. The information did not charge that the complaint was to be used in any proceeding pending or about to be instituted in any court or tribunal, or that it was made to be used as a complaint for the arrest, apprehension, and examination of the person therein charged with crime, or that it was ever used or offered in any court or tribunal, or before any public body or officer. The information was challenged by a motion to quash before trial, and by a motion in arrest of judgment after a verdict of guilty.

Paragraph 2287, of the General Statutes of 1889, under which the information was filed in this cause, reads: "Every person who shall procure any other person, by any means whatsoever, to commit a willful or corrupt perjury, in any cause, matter, or proceeding in or concerning which such other person shall be legally sworn or affirmed, shall be adjudged guilty of subornation of perjury." We think the information is materially defective. It is necessary, in a prosecution for subornation of perjury, that all of the elements constituting the offense of perjury should be alleged and proved. It was nowhere alleged in this information that the false affidavit solicited and procured by the defendant was to be used as evidence in any cause, matter, or proceeding, or before any court, tribunal, or public body or officer, or that such evidence was even material. In prosecutions for subornation of perjury, the same rule as to the materiality of testimony prevails as in perjury. 2 Whart. Crim. Law, § 1830. This court has recently decided that to constitute perjury the false oath must be in some material matter, and that an information in a prosecution for perjury is insufficient where there is no allegation that the false testimony was given in any cause, matter, or proceeding before any court, tribunal, public body or officer. State v. Ayer, 40 Kan. 43, 19 Pac. Rep. 403; State v. Smith, 40 Kan. 631, 20 Pac. Rep. 529. See, also, State v. Simons, 30 Vt. 620; U. S. v. Wilcox, 4 Blatchf. 391. We think the motion to quash the information should have been sustained, for the reason that it failed to state a public offense. We recommend a reversal of the judgment.

FT. SCOTT, W. & W. R. CO. v. KARRACKER.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS OF JURY—FIRES SET BY LOCOMOTIVES—BURDEN OF PROOF—ATTORNEY'S FEE.

1. An inapplicable, and therefore improper, instruction to the jury will not require or authorize a reversal of the judgment of the trial court, where such instruction could not have prejudiced any of the substantial rights of the complaining party.

2. A jury will not be required to answer special questions submitted to them, where no evidence is introduced upon which answers could be given.

3. In an action against a railroad company for loss or damage suffered by the plaintiff by fire caused by the defendant in the operation of its railroad, proof that the fire was so caused is, under the provisions of chapter 155 of the Laws of 1885, prima facie evidence that it was so caused through the negligence of the railroad company; and it then devolves upon the railroad company to show, not only that its appliances to prevent the escape of fire were sufficient and in good order, and that its engineer was a competent and skillful engineer, but also that there was no mismanagement or negligence on the part of any of its servants or agents causing the fire.

4. In such a case, where the plaintiff desires, under said chapter 155, to recover a reasonable attorney's fee, it is necessary that he should demand the same in his petition, and then submit the question to the court or jury trying the case upon its merits.

Error from district court, Greenwood county; A. L. L. HAMILTON, Judge.

This was an action brought in the district court of Greenwood county by C. Karracker against the Ft. Scott, Wichita & Western Railroad Company, to recover damages for the destruction by fire of a certain amount of prairie hay, flax straw, fence wire, and fence posts belonging to the plaintiff, of the alleged value in the aggregate of $404. The fire was alleged to have been caused by the railroad company on November 15, 1887, by reason of its negligent operation of its railroad. The plaintiff prayed judgment for the aforesaid sum of $404, and for costs of suit. The defendant answered, setting forth—First, a general denial; second, that the plaintiff's damages were caused by his own carelessness and negligence, without any fault or negligence on the part of the railroad company. The plaintiff replied by filing a general denial. The case was tried by the court and a jury, and the jury rendered the following general verdict, and made the following special findings, to-wit: "Verdict. We, the jury in the above-entitled cause, do upon our oaths find for the plaintiff, and assess the amount of his recovery at $365.50. Special Findings. (1) How did the fire originate that caused the damage to plaintiff's property? Answer. Coals or sparks from defendant's engine. (2) If you answer that the fire was caused by defendant's engine or train, state, in answer to this question, whether it was caused by the negligent operation of said train or engine. A. Yes. (3) If you answer that last question in the affirmative, state fully in what the negligence consisted. A. We do not know. (4) Was the engine of defendant alleged to have set out the fire furnished with the best appliances to prevent the escape of fire? A. Yes. (5) Were the appliances to prevent the escape of fire from said engine in good order at the time of the fire? A. Yes. (6) If you answer the last question in the negative, state fully wherein said appliances were defective. A. ———. (7) Was the engineer in charge of the engine which it is claimed set out this fire a competent and skillful engineer? A. We don't know. (8) Was said engineer operating the engine at the time said fire was claimed to have been set out in a competent manner? A. No. (9) If not, state wherein he was careless, incompetent, or unskillful. A. We don't know. (10) Did the defendant allow dry grass, weeds, or other combustible material to accumulate on its right of way at the place where it is claimed the fire originated? A. Only a natural growth. (11) What effort did the defendant or its employees make to burn off its right of way at the place where the fire originated? A. An effort was made, but failed. (12) How far were plaintiff's stacks of hay and straw from defendant's railroad? A. A little over a mile. (13) Is it not true that dry grass intervened all the way from defendant's right of way to plaintiff's straw and hay? A. Yes, with the exception of a plowed strip fourteen feet wide and one-quarter of a mile long. (14) What, if anything, had plaintiff done to protect his hay and straw from fire? A. He plowed a strip on the south side of his land fourteen feet wide and one-quarter of a mile long. (15) How many good stacks of hay belonged to plaintiff were destroyed by fire? A. Four. (16) How many stacks of inferior hay belonging to plaintiff were destroyed by fire? A. Three. (17) What do you allow per ton for the good hay? A. $3.50 per ton. (18) What do you allow per ton for the inferior hay? A. $3.00 per ton. (19) How many tons of marketable hay were destroyed? A. 77 tons. (20) What do you allow for the flax straw that was destroyed? A. $35.00. (21) How much do you allow for the posts destroyed, and how much for the wire? A. $2.00 for the posts; $5.00 for the wire." This verdict and these findings were returned to the court on May 13, 1888. The defendant at the time moved the court to require the jury to answer the third, seventh, and ninth questions, and to more fully and definitely answer the tenth question, which motion was overruled. On May 19, 1888, the defendant moved for a judgment in its favor upon the special findings of the jury, notwithstanding the general verdict, which motion was overruled. On May 21, 1888, the defendant filed a motion for a new trial. Afterwards, and on June 2, 1888, the plaintiff applied to the court orally for a reasonable attorney's fee. The defendant objected, for the reason that no claim for an attorney's fee was set forth in the plaintiff's petition. It also claimed that it was not ready to try the new issue presented, and asked for further time to prepare for its defense; and also demanded a jury to try this new issue; but the court overruled all these objections, requests, and demands of the defendant, except that the court gave to it five minutes within which to prepare for its defense. The court then tried this new question, but the plaintiff only introduced evidence; and the court then found upon this new issue in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendant, and found that a reasonable attorney's fee was $50, and the defendant again moved for a new trial, including the matter of attorney's fees, and the court then overruled both motions for new trials, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendant, for $306.50 damages, and for the sum of $50 as attorney's fees, and for the costs of suit; and the defendant, as plaintiff in error, brings the case to this court for review.

J. H. Richards and C. E. Benton, for plaintiff in error. T. L. Davis, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J., (after stating the facts as above.) It is claimed that the court below erred in giving an instruction to the jury relating to the railroad company's permitting dry grass, weeds, and other combustible material to accumulate upon its right of way. This instruction was perhaps inapplicable under the facts of this case, and therefore improper, but we do not think it could have prejudiced any of the substantial rights of the defendant railroad company in any particular. The jury found with reference to this matter as follows: "(10) Did the defendant allow dry grass, weeds, or other combustible material to accumulate on its right of way at the place where it is claimed the fire originated? Answer. Only a natural growth. (11) What effort did the defendant or its employees make to burn off its right of way at the place where the fire originated? A. An effort was made, but failed." And with reference to negligence, the jury found as follows: "(1) How did the fire originate that caused the damage to plaintiff's property? Answer. Coals or sparks from defendant's engine. (2) If you answer that the fire was caused by defendant's engine or train, state, in answer to this question, whether it was caused by the negligent operation of said train or engine. A. Yes. (8) Was said engineer operating the engine, at the time said fire was claimed to have been set out, in a competent manner? A. No." Evidently the jury found against the defendant because of negligence in so operating its railroad as to permit fire to escape from its engine, and not negligence in permitting dry grass, weeds, or other combustible material to accumulate upon its right of way; and therefore the giving of the foregoing instruction will not require nor authorize a reversal of the judgment of the court below.

With reference to the failure of the court below to require the jury to answer the third, seventh, and ninth special questions submitted to them, and to answer the tenth more definitely, and the affirmative action on the part of the court in rendering judgment against the defendant notwithstanding the jury's answers to the fourth and fifth special questions submitted to them, together with the other findings, want of findings, the evidence and want of evidence, it will be perceived from what we shall hereafter say that, under the evidence and the law as it now exists, the jury could not have given answers to the foregoing questions any more favorable to the defendant than those they did give, and the court below could not have rendered any judgment with respect to damages different from the one which it did render. There was not a particle of evidence introduced on the trial tending to show how the fire escaped from the defendant's engine, or what the engineer was doing at the time when it escaped. But, taking the record as it is, did the court below err in any of the foregoing particulars? Upon the authority of the case of Railroad Co. v. Riggs, 81 Kan. 622, 8 Pac. Rep. 306, and the cases of Railway Co. v. Fray, 85 Kan. 700, 12 Pac. Rep. 93, and Insurance Co. v. Hathaway, 43 Kan. 399, 23 Pac. Rep. 428, the judgment of the court below would probably have to be reversed, unless the provisions of chapter 155 of the Laws of 1885, which took effect May 1, 1885, will authorize an affirmance. The first and second sections of said chapter read as follows: "Section 1. That in all actions against any railway company organized or doing business in this state, for damages by fire, caused by the operating of said railroad, it shall be only necessary for the plaintiff in said action to establish the fact that said fire complained of was caused by the operating of said railroad, and the amount of his damages, (which proof shall be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of said railroad:) provided, that in estimating the damages under this act the contributory negligence of the plaintiff shall be taken into consideration. Sec. 2. In all actions commenced under this act, if the plaintiff shall recover there shall be allowed him by the court a reasonable attorney's fee, which shall become a part of the judgment."

This statute, containing the above-quoted sections, has been held to be constitutional and valid by this court in the case of Railway Co. v. Merrill, 40 Kan. 404, 19 Pac. Rep. 793. Under this statute, when the plaintiff in a case like the present has shown that the fire which destroyed or injured his property was caused by the operation of the railroad, as the plaintiff sufficiently showed in the present case, he has then made out a prima facie case of negligence, as against the railroad company, and he may then recover, unless the railroad company shall show by sufficient evidence that no negligence on its part supervened to cause the fire. In other words, the railroad company must then show that the fire did not escape from its engine because of any imperfection in its appliances to prevent the escape of fire, nor from any mismanagement of the engine on the part of its servants or agents. In the present case it must be presumed, under the evidence and the findings of the jury, that all the appliances to prevent the escape of fire were sufficient and in good order. But the question is still left, was there any mismanagement on the part of the railroad company's agents or servants with respect to the engine which caused or permitted the fire to escape? Presumptively, under the statute and the facts proved by the plaintiff, there was such negligence, and the jury, in effect, found that there was such negligence; and, in order to rebut this presumption, the defendant introduced a witness by the name of E. Johnson, who testified that he was the engineer in charge of the engine supposed to have caused the fire; that he had been an engineer on that railroad for five years, and an engineer in all for six years, and that he had been a fireman prior to that time; and that the engine supposed to have caused the fire was at the time in good order, and that it had been repaired only two months prior to that time; and then the following questions were asked him and answered, to-wit: "Question. State if you know of its [the engine's] ever setting out any fire after it was repaired. Answer. I do not." * * * Q. You may state whether in running this train you were managing the train properly and carefully, as an engineer should. A. In the usual manner, as carefully as could be done." The defendant then introduced another witness by the name of J. B. Key, who testified that he was on the train that day as an extra fireman, with Mr. Jackson as engineer; that the appliances on that engine to prevent the escape of fire were the best; that he had had experience as a fireman with a great many different engines; and then the following questions were asked him, and answered, to-wit: "Question. I will ask you from your experience to state whether Mr. Jackson, the engineer in charge of this engine on the day named, is a careful and skillful engineer. Answer. Yes, sir; he is. Q. Do you know of this train setting out any fire after the time, as he spoke of, of being repaired? A. No, sir; I do not."

There was not a particle of evidence introduced tending to show how the fire escaped from the engine, or that any one knew how it escaped, or the precise time when it escaped. All this is left for inference from the facts proved and under the statute. The question now arises, does the foregoing testimony of E. Johnson and J. B. Key, along with the facts that were actually proved, so conclusively show that the fire that escaped from the engine and caused the injury to the plaintiff's property was not caused by the negligence or mismanagement of E. Johnson, or of Mr. Jackson, or whoever was the engineer, or by the negligence or mismanagement of any one else for whom the railroad company is responsible, that the verdict and judgment rendered in the court below must necessarily be set aside and reversed? It does not appear that either Johnson or Key knew anything concerning the fire that caused the injury to the plaintiff's property. They did not know how it escaped, or, indeed, that it escaped at all. And either Johnson or Key was not on the train from which the fire escaped, or else Key did not know Johnson's name, or had forgotten it; for in his testimony he spoke of his engineer's name as being Jackson. And Johnson could not well testify that he was managing the train or the engine "in the usual manner, as carefully as could be done," at the time when the fire escaped, for he did not know when the fire escaped. He did not attempt to state what he was doing when the fire escaped. Possibly he was doing something that caused it to escape. But what was the fireman doing at that time? There was no evidence that he was acting carefully. Possibly all the trouble was caused by his acts. And it devolved upon the railroad company to show that the fire did not escape through the negligence of any one of its agents or servants. This was not sufficiently shown in the present case, and therefore we cannot say that either the court below or the jury erred in holding the railroad company liable. We shall assume that all the appliances to prevent the escape of fire were in the present case perfect and in good order, and that the engineer in charge of the engine was a competent and skillful engineer, though this last matter was hardly proved; but that through the engineer's negligence, or the negligence of the fireman, the fire causing the injury was permitted to escape. There was nothing, however, in the case that tended to show just wherein the engineer or fireman was careless, unskillful, or negligent, or wherein consisted the negligence, and nothing to show what their acts were, or what they were doing when the fire escaped. While this want or absence of any such showing would have been against the plaintiff prior to the taking effect of chapter 155 of the Laws of 1885, yet after that time, and under the provisions of that chapter, and as the law now is, such want or absence of showing would be and is against the railroad company; and, as the railroad company did not sufficiently rebut the prima facie case of negligence made out against it by the evidence and under the statute, it must be held to be liable.

It is next claimed that the court below erred in rendering a judgment for an attorney's fee against the railroad company, and we are inclined to think that this claim is well founded. In the case of Railway Co. v. Merrill, 40 Kan. 404, 409, 19 Pac. Rep. 793, the following language is used: "The question, what was a reasonable attorney's fee? was properly submitted to the jury. It is true the statute provides that the court shall allow a reasonable attorney's fee, which shall become a part of the judgment. The word 'court,' however, was doubtless used by the legislature in the broader sense, as including both judge and jury or judge alone, according as the court may be constituted when the trial occurs. What is a reasonable attorney's fee is a question of fact, which should be submitted and determined the same as any other fact arising in the case." This indicates that the question of the allowance of a reasonable attorney's fee should be presented for hearing at the same time that the case is tried upon its merits, and to the same tribunal, and, if so, it would also seem that the demand for a reasonable attorney's fee should be set forth in some manner in the plaintiff's petition. The cases of Railway Co. v. Abney, 30 Kan. 41, 1 Pac. Rep. 385, and Railroad Co. v. Burge, 40 Kan. 736, 21 Pac. Rep. 589, show what would be sufficient allegations, statements, or demands in the petition of the plaintiff to authorize the recovery of an attorney's fee under the railroad stock-killing law of 1874. These cases apply with some force to the present case. In all cases where the plaintiff desires to recover an attorney's fee, we think a demand therefor should be made in his petition, and then the question of an allowance of an amount for such attorney's fee should be submitted at the same time that the case is submitted for trial upon its merits, and to the same trier or triers. The manner in which the plaintiff in this case presented his claim for an attorney's fee, and the manner in which his claim was heard and allowed, and the judgment therefor rendered have all been stated in the statement of facts preceding this opinion, and it is not necessary now to restate them. We think that error was committed in the allowance of the attorney's fee, and to the extent of this attorney's fee the judgment of the court below must be reversed. In all other respects the judgment will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

HAMILTON et al. v. MILLER.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES—CHattel MORTGAGES—SUFFICIENCY OF DESCRIPTION.

1. While a trial court should always be liberal in permitting a full and exhaustive cross-examination, yet it may nevertheless, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, impose reasonable limits.
2. Where a matter of evidence is brought out for the first time on the cross-examination of a witness, the other party may re-examine upon the same matter.
3. Other matters considered.
4. Immaterial errors must be disregarded.
5. Where L., claiming to be the owner of certain cattle, mortgages them to M., and afterwards, in an action in which M. is the plaintiff and L. and C. are defendants, C. claims to own the cattle, and to have owned them, as against L., at the time when they were mortgaged by L. to M., and L. admits the validity of the mortgage, it is immaterial as between M. and C. whether the mortgage contained a perfect description of the cattle or not.

Error from district court, Sumner county; J. T. HERRICK, Judge.

McDonald & Parker, for plaintiffs in error. George, King & Schwinn, for defendant in error.

VALENTINE, J. This was an action of replevin brought in the district court of Sumner county by George M. Miller, as cashier of the First National Bank of Wellington, against L. W. Hamilton, C. C. Hamilton, John H. Hamilton, and ——— Horsley, to recover certain neat cattle, of the alleged value, in the aggregate, of $9,450. The plaintiff claimed a special ownership therein, with the right to the immediate possession thereof, under a certain chattel mortgage executed by L. W. Hamilton, as the owner of the cattle, to Miller, as cashier, etc. The case was tried before the court and a jury, and the jury found generally in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, and also found that the value of the property in controversy was $4,305, and that the amount of the mortgage debt was $6,223.56; and the court rendered judgment accordingly in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants in the alternative for a return of the property or for the value thereof, to-wit, $4,305, together with interest and costs; and all the defendants except L. W. Hamilton bring the case to this court for review, making themselves the plaintiffs in error, and George M. Miller, cashier, the defendant in error. The only substantial question involved in this controversy is whether the aforesaid L. W. Hamilton was the owner of the cattle in controversy at the time of the execution of the aforesaid chattel mortgage, or whether the aforesaid C. C. Hamilton, his father, and John H. Hamilton, his brother, were at that time the owners thereof. Ample evidence was introduced on the trial to prove that L. W. Hamilton was the owner of the cattle, and that his father and brother were not the owners; and therefore that question must now be considered as at rest. But it is claimed by the plaintiffs in error that various errors occurred during the trial in the court below which will require a reversal of the judgment of that court. Whether this is correct or not we shall now proceed to consider.

The first and principal claim of error, as stated in the brief of counsel for the plaintiffs in error, is as follows: "The evidence showed that L. W. Hamilton did not claim any cattle except those he claimed to have bought from his father and their increase, and that there were about thirty or thirty-five head of cattle bought by John (J. H. Hamilton) in 1884 or 1885, and put in the herd. They were marked in the same way as the balance of the herd, and were never separated from it up to the time the suit was brought; yet when L. W. Hamilton was put on to prove his title to the cattle included in the mortgage, and their identity with the cattle he had bought from his father, the court refused to permit the defendants to show upon the cross-examination of said witness as to how many of those cattle were separated from the cattle taken in replevin, although the witness assisted in making the separation." Counsel for the defendant in error, who was plaintiff below, answer this as follows: "The court did not refuse to permit the defendants to show upon cross-examination of L. W. Hamilton how many of the said thirty or thirty-five head of cattle were separated from the cattle taken in replevin, as claimed in the brief of the plaintiffs in error, but, on the contrary, allowed very great latitude in the cross-examination of witness upon that question, and only refused to allow such examination continued after it had been thoroughly gone over by the witness on cross-examination." The question objected to and the objection and the ruling of the court thereon, as shown by the record, are as follows: "Question. How many of those cattle that John put in there did you pick out? (Counsel for plaintiff objects to this question, for the reason that it has been answered, and for the further reason that the witness shows that he cannot tell. The court sustains the objection.)" Up to this point the record contains about 70 pages in type-writing of cross-examination,—about five times as much as all the examination in chief,—"and the end is not yet." This matter had already been amply gone over on the cross-examination. And the record shows specifically, with respect to this matter, that the following among other questions had been propounded and answered, to-wit: "Question. How many did you pick out? Answer. I don't know; I didn't keep any memorandum. It seems to me, though, that it was some twenty, may be thirty; I don't recollect just how many." While a trial court should always be liberal in permitting a full and exhaustive cross-examination, yet it may nevertheless, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, impose reasonable limits. The next claim of error is that the court below permitted L. W. Hamilton on his redirect examination to testify as to threats made to him by a Mr. Horsley, who claimed to have purchased from the witness' father and brother a portion of the cattle. The question and answer objected to are as follows: "Q. What did he say about your getting out of the country? A. He said that I had better get out of the country." This had reference to matters testified to upon the cross-examination of this witness, and brought out originally and for the first time by the defendants below, a portion of which testimony brought out on cross-examination is as follows: "It was right at the time,—the morning after the cattle were attached. Mr. Horsley came up there and tried to bluff me, but I did not take a bluff very well. He told me that if I did not get out of the country that they would put me in the penitentiary." Certainly no error was committed by the trial court in permitting the plaintiff, after the foregoing testimony was given on the cross-examination, to ask and to have answered by the same witness the above question on the redirect examination. The next supposed error is that the court below permitted a witness to answer a question over an objection of the defendants that the question was "double" and "leading." No error was committed in this respect either in substance or in form. The next complaint is that the court below permitted the plaintiff to prove the signature of the wife of C. C. Hamilton; but in what respect this was prejudicial is not shown. There are many other supposed errors, but we do not think that it is necessary to mention all of them, nor to follow them in their order as presented by the plaintiffs in error. Of the remaining alleged errors the ninth is perhaps the most serious. The court permitted evidence of conversations had between the defendant L. W. Hamilton and others, not in the presence of any of the other defendants, tending to show that L. W. Hamilton was the owner of the cattle in controversy. The most of these conversations were had while L. W. Hamilton was in the actual custody of the property, and were therefore competent as evidence, not only as against him as a defendant, but also as against the other defendants. But some of them were possibly had at a time and place when and where L. W. Hamilton was not in the actual custody of the property. But in the light of the whole of the evidence,—over 750 pages of type-writing,—the error, if error, was wholly immaterial, and immaterial errors must be disregarded. In answer to the tenth supposed error we might say that there can be no question in this case with regard to any supposed imperfect description of the property in controversy as contained in the mortgage. L. W. Hamilton, the mortgagor, is not complaining of any imperfect description, and if the property really belonged to him, as he claims, then the other defendants can have no reason to complain. The other defendants can have no right to recover property which does not belong to them. But the description was sufficient. There was sufficient evidence introduced on the trial to authorize the giving of the instruction with regard to estoppel; but even if there was not, still no sufficient exception was taken to that or to any other instruction. Believing that substantial justice has been done in this case, and that no material error has been committed, the judgment of the court below will be affirmed. All the justices concurring.

WAFFER et al. v. HARVEY COUNTY BANK *et al.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — KNOWLEDGE OF GRANTEE—EVIDENCE.

1. An antecedent creditor, who knows that his debtor procured goods and merchandise by fraudulent means, cannot by a chattel mortgage secure a lien on such fraudulently procured goods, adverse to the innocent vendors of such goods.

2. An antecedent creditor, who knows that his debtor has procured goods and merchandise by fraudulent means, when the sale of such goods is partially induced by the representations of such antecedent creditor as to the credit of his debtor, cannot by a chattel mortgage secure a lien on such fraudulently procured goods, adverse to the innocent vendors of such goods.

3. The failure of a chattel mortgagee to have his mortgage recorded for 48 days, or to disclose its existence to other creditors, when the financial condition of the debtor is being discussed, and who promised the debtor that he would not disclose its existence to other creditors who were demanding payment or security for their claims, is strong evidence tending to show a fraudulent intent to hinder and delay creditors.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Harvey county; L. HOUK, Judge.

J. D. Snoddy and Green & Shaver, for plaintiffs in error. Bowman & Bucher, J. W. Ady, and Jetmore & Jetmore, for defendants in error.

SIMPSON, C. This is an action begun by the Harvey County Bank and R. M. Spivey as plaintiffs, against John F. Wafer, who was then sheriff of Harvey county. Wafer, as sheriff, had seized under various orders of attachment a stock of goods belonging to the attachment debtor, R. M. Hamill. The bank and Spivey claimed to have the right to the possession of the attached property by virtue of a chattel mortgage thereon executed by R. M. Hamill on the 20th day of March, 1884. The attaching creditors were made parties, and filed answers alleging that the chattel mortgage was fraudulent and void as against them. The case was tried to a jury at the March term, 1888, of the district court of Harvey county. The jury returned a verdict for the bank, and fixed the value of the goods at $21,896.17, and the value of the plaintiffs' right of possession at $12,695.08. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and a judgment rendered on the verdict. The material facts disclosed at the trial are these: For many years prior to the commencement of this action the firm of Hamill Bros. had been engaged in merchandising in the city of Newton, and were a firm of good credit, and of high repute. As a matter of fact, on or before the 20th day of March, 1884, the firm, and especially D. Hamill, the principal partner, was largely indebted, both as a member of the firm and individually. D. Hamill was the active and controlling member of the firm, and his brother, R. M. Hamill, appears up to a certain date to have been subordinate. There is evidence tending very strongly to show that in October, 1883, the firm was dissolved, a notice of dissolution was published, and in the next issue of the paper after the publication of the notice of dissolution the card of the business firm was changed from Hamill Bros. to D. Hamill. The terms of this dissolution were such that D. Hamill assumed all the debts and liabilities of the firm, and alone had the right to collect all the claims and outstanding accounts of the old firm. In January, 1884, a contract was entered into between D. Hamill and R. M. Hamill that reads as follows: "This agreement witnesseth that in consideration and as a full, final settlement of the respective rights, claims, accounts, and interests of D. Hamill and R. M. Hamill, recently partners as Hamill Bros., the said parties have agreed and do hereby agree upon the following: R. M. M. Hamill shall be solely liable for all goods purchased and put into the store situated upon the lot hereafter described from and after the first day of January, 1884, and said D. Hamill shall in no event be liable in any way for any portion of such goods, and has no interest therein except as herein specifically provided. Said R. M. Hamill may, for the purpose of establishing his own business interests, advertise said business as his own, and purchase and incorporate into said stock of goods such goods as he may desire, upon his own individual credit. Said R. M. Hamill shall contribute his own efforts towards the carrying on of said business in the same way and under the same conditions and restrictions that he has been since the first day of January, 1884. Until all the debts owing by the former firm of Hamill Brothers, as shown by the books of said firm, are fully paid, D. Hamill shall remain in charge of said business, as financial manager thereof, applying the net proceeds of all sales to the liquidation of said debts of Hamill Bros., until the same are fully paid. All goods in said store, whether they are goods formerly owned by Hamill Bros., or such as have since been or may in the future be put in said store by R. M. Hamill, shall be subject to sale in the ordinary course of business, and the net proceeds of such sale to be applied in liquidation of the debts of said firm, as above agreed upon. When all of said debts have been fully paid, as above indicated, then said R. M. Hamill shall be the absolute owner of all goods in the store, and said D. Hamill shall execute and deliver to him a bill of sale for all of his interest therein, and deliver to him the absolute and exclusive control of said business and all goods in said store. The store herein referred to is that kept in the building upon lot No. 8, in block No. 38, in the city of Newton, Harvey county, Kansas, and the said D. Hamill, being the owner of said lot and building, together with the fixtures and furniture in said store, agrees that when full control of said business is transferred to R. M. Hamill, as above contemplated, he will execute to said R. M. Hamill a lease of said store and fixtures and furniture used therein, at the rate of $50 per month, payable monthly in advance, from month to month, and said lease may be terminated by either party upon giving sixty days' notice to the other party. This lease shall include only the store-room, ware-room, and cellar now used in the business, and free ingress and egress to and from the same over said lot. D. HAMILL. R. M. HAMILL." At this time this contract was entered into the firm of Hamill Bros. were indebted to various creditors in the sum of $4,800, and they owed the Harvey County Bank a note of $5,000. R. M. Spivey was then, and for a long time before had been, the vice-president and active manager of the Harvey County Bank, and was in the full charge of its business. Some time after the contract of January, 1884, was made, R. M. Hamill went to Chicago to buy goods with which to replenish the stock. He carried with him a letter from Spivey, as follows: "Harvey County Bank, Successor to the Harvey County Savings Bank. C. B. Schmidt, President. R. M. Spivey, Vice-President. Julius Simon, Cashier. Newton, Kansas, Feb'y 28, 1884. To whom it may concern: The bearer, R. M. Hamill, succeeds the firm of Hamill Bros., merchants of long standing in this city. Mr. R. M. Hamill is not indebted to this or any other bank, and with his long experience and general acquaintance in this country, believe he will do a good business, and with continued prosperity no doubt he will make prompt payment for any goods he may purchase. Respectfully, R. M. SPIVEY, V. Pt." While R. M. Hamill was in Chicago, Spivey wrote the following letter to a wholesale firm there, from whom R. M. Hamill bought goods: "Harvey County Bank. C. B. Schmidt, President. R. M. Spivey, Vice-President. Julius Simon, Cashier. Newton, Kans., March 8, 1884. Kahn, Schoenbrun & Co., Chicago, Ill.—Gentlemen: I had a telegram from R. M. Hamill yesterday, stating that Harvey Co. Bank reports him as owing $8,000. The statement which we sent you regarding his financial standing was intended to be confidential, but it seems you have not made the information confidential, but informed him the contents. Under the circumstances, I do not care to confide in you further statements, but will add that Mr. R. M. Hamill does not owe this bank but $200, and does not owe any bank, which I wired you last night. Yours, R. M. SPIVEY." On the 1st day of March, 1884, D. Hamill wrote to Norton & Cahill, salesmen for two large wholesale houses, from whom R. M. Hamill bought goods, the following letter: "Monarch Mills. D. Hamill, Proprietor. Newton, Kans., March 1, 1884. Messrs. L. R. Norton & J. H. Cahill, Chicago, Ill.—Gentlemen: Robert M. has just handed me your letter to him of the 27th ult. So far as the report is concerned to which you refer, I wish to say that there is not a word of truth in it. As a matter of fact Robert does not owe a dollar. So far as my own liabilities are concerned, they are a matter of record, and concern none but me personally, and I am fully able to take care of them. Gentlemen, Robert could have bought his goods several times since arrangements were made with you, and was strongly urged to do so, but his preference has been to buy of you. I only ask that you sell him goods at the right kind of prices, so that he can meet competition. I wish also to say, gentlemen, that the First National Bank of this city and myself have been, and are now, on anything but friendly terms. This feeling was brought about from the fact that I did not patronize that bank, but did my business through the Harvey County Bank. The First National Bank has lost no opportunity to injure my business whenever they had the opportunity. So far I have been able to come out ahead in every encounter, and I think I can manage to take care of myself. I did not suppose that they would on that account endeavor to injure Robert's credit. Very respectfully, D. HAMILL." The Harvey County Bank loaned R. M. Hamill $200 with which to pay his expenses on the Chicago trip. He bought on this trip from Farwell & Co., Kahn, Schoenbrun & Co. and C. M. Henderson & Co. goods exceeding in value $18,000. He writes to the wholesale houses on the 17th day of March that the goods had all arrived safely at Newton. While at Chicago he made a sworn statement of his financial condition to J. V. Farwell & Co., that reads as follows:

"Chicago, Ill., March 4, 1884. I, R. M. Hamill, of Newton, county of —, state of Kansas, for the purpose of obtaining a credit with John V. Farwell & Co., of Chicago, Ill., for goods which — may now or hereafter purchase of them, do make the following statement and representations of — present true financial circumstances, wealth, and mercantile respectability, which said representations shall be the basis of — credit with John V. Farwell & Co., both for — present purchase, and for all purchases for and during the period of five years from this date, agreeing to immediately notify them of any material change in or of — business matters during the period above mentioned.

On the 18th day of February the Harvey County Bank, by Spivey, made a commercial report on R. M. Hamill to the reporting agency of Bond & Weigley, that was furnished by them to Kahn, Schoenbrun & Co. It is as follows:

"Name in full of each member: Rob't M. Hamill. Business: Dry goods, clothing, etc. Amount of capital in business, $15,000; amount borrowed capital, $8,000; value of real estate, $3,000; incumbrance, $1,700; value of personal property, $500. Prospect of success? Fair. Ever failed to ask extensions? None. Do you consider — good for — a credit of 1,000 dollars? Yes.

"Remarks: R. M. Hamill will in a month or so succeed to the business of Hamill Bros. If country continues prosperous, he will succeed.

"Yours, HARVEY CO. BANK."

On the 20th day of March, 1884, the following agreement was made in writing between R. M. Hamill, D. Hamill, and R. M. Spivey: "Newton, Kansas, March 20, 1884. In consideration of D. Hamill releasing and assigning to R. M. Hamill all of his right, title, and ownership in and to all of the goods (not including store furniture and fixtures) kept by Hamill Bros.

and D. Hamill in their store upon lot 8, block 38, Newton, Kansas, which he hereby does, we, the undersigned, R. M. Hamill and R. M. Spivey, agree and bind ourselves to pay and hold the said D. Hamill harmless of all the following debts now owing by the said Hamill Bros. to R. L. McDonald, $94.00; Jno. V. Farwell, $1,600.00; C. M. Henderson, $400.00; A. N. Shuster, $650.00; J. W. Bailey & Co., $200.00; Noyes, Norman & Co., $144.00; H. M. Price, $250.00; Tootle, Hosea & Co., $350.00; Reynolds Bros., $300.00; I. Well, four notes in bank; all debts of said firm to Harvey County Bank,—all of which debts we assume; and R. M. Hamill agrees to pay any other debts of said old firm, should any be found not included in this agreement. Should D. Hamill be compelled to pay any debts in violation of this agreement, we agree to repay him all costs and expenses he may be put to on account thereof. Made in duplicate. R. M. HAMILL. D. HAMILL. R. M. SPIVEY."

On the same day R. M. Hamill executed a note for $10,000 to the Harvey County Bank, and a chattel mortgage to secure the same. The consideration of the mortgage is alleged to be the note of D. Hamill to the bank for $5,000; the debts of the firm guaranteed by Spivey, $4,800; and the $200 borrowed by R. M. Hamill from the bank, with which to pay the expenses of his Chicago trip. This mortgage was kept in the vaults of the bank, and not recorded until the 3d day of May, 1884, and not until the Chicago creditors had appeared at Newton, and demanded security for the payment of their claims. These are some of the material facts as they appear in the record.

The jury returned answers to the following special interrogatories: "First. At the time John F. Wafer, as sheriff, took the stock of goods, how much was the Harvey County Bank entitled to hold the same as security for? Answer, $10,000. Second. What items of indebtedness made up the amount of the $10,000 note secured by chattel mortgage? State fully the amount of each. A. One note of $5,000; guaranteed claims to eastern creditors, $4,800; borrowed money, $200. Third. Was the stock of goods pledged to R. M. Spivey; and, if so, for what? State specifically amount of each item. A. Pledge void. Fourth. Were the goods pledged to R. M. Spivey, among other things, for future advances to be made to R. M. Hamill for the support of himself and his family? A. Pledge void. Fifth. Did R. M. Hamill obtain the goods from the attaching creditors by false and fraudulent means? A. Yes. Sixth. Did the Harvey County Bank, through its officers, know that R. M. Hamill had purchased the goods by false and fraudulent means at the time it took this $10,000 mortgage? A. No. Seventh. Did R. M. Spivey, by his letters of February 29, 1884, and March 8, 1884, and his telegram of March 3, 1884, tend to and partially induce the attaching creditors to give R. M. Hamill credit, and to sell him goods? A. Yes. Eighth. Did R. M. Spivey have knowledge, at the time he accepted the pledge, that R. M. Hamill had purchased the goods by false and fraudulent means? A. Pledge void; and if time above refers to the pledge of May 8, 1884, we say 'Yes.' Ninth. At the time R. M. Spivey wrote his letters of credit of February 29, 1884, and his letters and telegrams of March 8, 1884, did he not know that Hamill Bros. were largely indebted to Harvey County Bank and eastern creditors? A. Not as a legal firm, as the evidence proves that the firm was in reality dissolved October 3, 1883. Tenth. At the time David Hamill wrote his letter of credit for R. M. Hamill to Norton & Cahill, dated March 1, 1884, did he know that Hamill Brothers were indebted to the Harvey County Bank and eastern creditors? A. Not as a legal firm, as the evidence proves that the firm was really dissolved October 3, 1883. Eleventh. What persons composed the firm of Hamill Brothers during 1882, 1883, and 1884? A. D. Hamill, and R. M. Hamill composed the firm of Hamill Brothers in 1882, and until the 3d of October, 1883."

1. It has been said that "every case must create its own law;" but this is one in which the fraud alleged is not purely a question of law, nor yet exclusively a question of fact, but the two are so closely interwoven, and so intimately blended together, that they both concur to produce the belief that a part of the truth was suppressed, and cunning artifice resorted to, and that both actual and constructive fraud was committed in the attempt to hinder and delay honest creditors receiving their just dues. These two important facts are established by the evidence and found by the jury: First, that R. M. Hamill procured the goods covered by the chattel mortgage to the bank from the attaching creditors by fraudulent misrepresentations; second, that R. M. Spivey, by his letters and telegrams, partially induced the attaching creditors to give R. M. Hamill credit, and to sell him goods. There are some other important facts established by the evidence contained in this record. Spivey was the active and controlling officer of the Harvey County Bank, and he knew of the indebtedness of Hamill Bros. to the bank and to the other creditors. He had loaned R. M. Hamill the money to pay his expenses on the Chicago trip, and knew that Hamill went there to buy goods. A short time before this he had made a confidential report of the financial condition of R. M. Hamill to a mercantile agency in Chicago. He had every opportunity to know, and did know, the exact financial condition of Hamill Bros., of D. Hamill, and of R. M. Hamill. Again, as matters of law, the knowledge of Spivey as to the financial condition of the firm of Hamill Bros. and of the individual members of the firm was the knowledge of the bank, whose managing officer he was. He knew as a matter of law that D. Hamill had an agreement with R. M. Hamill that he was to pay the outstanding debts of the firm, or that the goods on hand were pledged to their payment, and that R. M. Hamill, as a member of the firm, was still liable for their payment, notwithstanding his agreement in January with D. Hamill; and by reason of his knowledge the bank knew this. He knew that the creditors of the firm had never accepted the individual assumption of the debt of Hamill Bros., and that at the time the credit was extended had not released R. M. Hamill, and the bank had not done so. In a word, both Spivey and the Harvey County Bank knew all about the financial condition of the firm of Hamill Bros., and of the individual members composing it, at the time R. M. Hamill went to Chicago, and procured these goods from the attaching creditors. All these things were apparent from this record. One of the questions arising on this state of facts is this: Can an antecedent creditor, who knows that his debtor has procured goods and merchandise by fraudulent means, take a chattel mortgage on goods thus procured, and acquire a lien adverse to the interest of the vendors? Another question is: Can an antecedent creditor of a debtor who procures goods fraudulently from wholesale merchants, who were partially induced to give such debtor credit on the strength of letters of the antecedent creditor, acquire by chattel mortgage a lien of the goods so procured, adverse to the interests of the wholesale merchants? Another question is: Can one who knows that goods and merchandise are procured by fraudulent means acquire any interest in or lien on such goods against the innocent vendors?

2. The legal principle applicable to the first fact is that, these goods having been obtained from the attaching creditors by fraudulent means by R. M. Hamill, he acquired no title or right of possession in them, and the attaching creditors would be justified in retaking the goods; or they could waive the tort, and bring an action to recover their value, or an action to recover damages for the deceit. Story, Sales, (4th Ed.) § 172a; Newm. Sales, § 360; note Lyons v. Briggs, 14 R. I. 222; Genesee Sav. Bank v. Michigan Barge Co., 52 Mich. 164, 438, 17 N. W. Rep. 790, and 18 N. W. Rep. 206; Cain v. Dickenson, 60 N. H. 371; Deckerhoff v. Brown, 21 Reporter, 583; Newell v. Randall, 32 Minn. 171, 19 N. W. Rep. 972; Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129. They elected in this case to waive the tort, and bring an action to recover the value of the goods. The law applicable to the second fact is that, where the fraud consists in inducing by false representation a sale of goods to an insolvent third person, from whom the misrepresenting party afterwards obtains them, the seller may bring suit for the price against the latter party as though he had bought the goods in his own name. Biddle v. Levy, 1 Starke, 20; Hill v. Perrott, 3 Taunt. 274; Phelan v. Crosby, 2 Gill, 462; Thomson v. Davenport, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 407; Meyer v. Amidon, 23 Hun, 553; 1 Benj. Sales, (4th Ed.) § 491; 2 Schouler, Pers. Prop. (2d Ed.) § 612. The particular act of Spivey that was evidently in the minds of the jury that produced the special finding was that his letter and telegram in which he asserted that R. M. Hamill did not owe the Harvey County Bank but $200, when in fact and in law he was indebted to the bank in a large sum, partially induced the sale of goods to Hamill by the Chicago merchants. This representation, known at the time it was made by Spivey to be untrue, is fraudulent. Chief Justice MARSHALL, in Russell v. Clark's Ex'rs, 7 Cranch, 69. "The ground of the action," said the court in Boyd's Ex'rs v. Browne, 6 Pa. St. 310, 316, "is the deceit practiced upon the injured party; and this may be either by the positive statement of a falsehood, or the suppression of material facts, which the inquiring party is entitled to know. The question always is, did the defendant knowingly falsify or willfully suppress the truth, with the view of giving the third party a credit to which he was not entitled? It is not necessary that there should be collusion between the party falsely recommending and him who is recommended, nor is it essential, in support of the action, that either of them intended to cheat and defraud the trusting party at the time. It is enough if such has been the effect of the falsehood relied on." In the case of Allen v. Addington, 7 Wend. 10, reviewed in the court of errors, 11 Wend. 376, the letter of the defendant was written to a third person, and never shown to the plaintiff, but the plaintiff gave credit in consequence of what the third person was induced by the letter to say. The design of the defendant was to have the goods sold to the party recommended, from which he, as a creditor, might satisfy his own debt; and the fraud was held to consist mainly in the suppression of the fact that he held judgments against the person recommended, which the latter was unable to satisfy. The court say it was a case of outrageous fraud and conspiracy. This is an exhaustive and elaborate case. In the case of Patten v. Gurney, 17 Mass. 182, the action was brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants for fraudulently affirming another to be trustworthy, in order that they might levy on the goods with which he was trusted, in satisfaction of debts owing by him to themselves. PARKER, C. J., says: "A false and fraudulent affirmation, relative to the credit and ability of a person to a merchant, who is thereby induced to trust such person with goods, is a sufficient ground for action, although there may have been no dishonest purpose of appropriating the goods to the use of the party making the recommendation, or in any way deriving a benefit from the fraud." See other cases cited in the American notes to the case of Pasley v. Freeman, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. (6th Ed.) 116.

3. Spivey knew that the goods had been procured from the wholesale merchants at Chicago by fraudulent representations. He knew that at the time R. M. Hamill went to Chicago to buy the goods Hamill had no money, because Spivey loaned him the money necessary to the expenses of the trip. He knew that under the agreement between R. M. and D. Hamill the stock on hand was pledged to the payment of the then outstanding indebtedness of the firm. He knew that the store-room and fixtures were the individual property of D. Hamill. He knew that the firm of Hamill Bros. was indebted to the Harvey County Bank in a sum in excess of $5,000.

He knew that since the agreement in January R. M. Hamill had contracted debts for which he alone was responsible under that agreement, and which the firm was responsible for, unless the merchants from whom the goods were bought had knowledge of that agreement. The knowledge of all these facts, many of them fastened by his own admissions upon the witness stand, leads to the inevitable conclusion that he must have known that the goods were obtained fraudulently, and that the fraud was aided and abetted by Spivey's suppression of all these facts. A failure to disclose a material fact is equivalent to active misrepresentation, for the withholding of that which is suppressed may make that which is stated absolutely false. Devoe v. Brandt, 53 N. Y. 462; Brown v. Montgomery, 20 N. Y. 287; Hanson v. Edgerly, 29 N. H. 343; Armstrong v. Huffstutler, 19 Ala. 51; Stephens v. Orman, 14 Fla. 21; Marsh v. Webber, 13 Minn. 109, (Gil. 99); Pease v. McClelland, 2 Bond, 42. The protection of a bona fide purchaser from a fraudulent vendee is almost universally recognized by the courts of this country, on the ground that the fraudulent purchaser has a voidable or defeasible title which, before its annulment by the vendor, the defrauding purchaser can transmit to a bona fide purchaser who is without knowledge or notice of the fraud, and because he has parted with value. One who buys with notice or knowledge of the fraud of his vendor in obtaining the property, is not a bona fide purchaser, and is liable, not only to lose the goods, but, if he sells, to pay their value. Stearns v. Gage, 79 N. Y. 102; Rateau v. Bernard, 3 Blatchf. 244. To constitute good faith there must be an absence not alone of participation in the fraud, or collusion with the vendee, but also of knowledge, or even notice, of the fraud, or of facts and circumstances calculated to put an ordinarily prudent business man on inquiry, so that he would ascertain the truth. Grant, Fraud. Vend. 563; Lynch v. Beecher, 38 Conn. 490; Allison v. Matthieu, 3 Johns. 235; Stearns v. Gage, 79 N. Y. 102; Dows v. Kidder, 84 N. Y. 121; Cochran v. Stewart, 21 Minn. 435. And it has been frequently held that the burden of proof to show good faith and purchase for value, as against the defrauded seller, is upon the party claiming to be a bona fide purchaser. Devoe v. Brandt, 53 N. Y. 462; McLeod v. Bank, 42 Miss. 99; Lynch v. Beecher, 38 Conn. 490; Schouler, Pers. Prop. (2d Ed.) § 609; Jones v. Franks, 33 Kan. 497, 6 Pac. Rep. 789; Wygall v. Bigelow, 42 Kan. 477, 22 Pac. Rep. 612. Fraudulent intent is shown by turning the property over to another creditor very soon after it has been received. 1 Benj. Sales, p. 577, § 656, note 18; Wiggin v. Day, 9 Gray, 97; Jordan v. Osgood, 109 Mass. 462; Parker v. Byrnes, 1 Low. 539; Davis v. McWhirter, 40 U. C. Q. B. 596; 2 Kent, Comm. 484. A sale is void where a creditor pays a debtor a surplus in purchasing his stock of goods with knowledge of fraud of vendor. Davis v. McCarthy, 40 Kan. 18, 19 Pac. Rep. 356. Where a merchant makes a sale to defraud his creditors the purchaser is only protected as to the extent of the payments made in good faith without notice. Bush v. Collins, 35 Kan. 535, 11 Pac. Rep. 425; Burke v. Johnson, 37 Kan. 587, 15 Pac. Rep. 204; Moxley v. Haskin, 39 Kan. 654, 18 Pac. Rep. 820; Green v. Green, 41 Kan. 474, 21 Pac. Rep. 586. The intent to defraud is shown by acts and declarations. If a party is guilty of an act which defrauds another, his declaration that his intentions were honest cannot be taken as sufficient to overthrow the act. Babcock v. Eckler, 24 N. Y. 623. Where the fraud as to the creditors is participated in by both parties thereto, a chattel mortgage is void in toto. Winstead v. Hulme, 32 Kan. 568, 4 Pac. Rep. 994; Wallach v. Wylie, 28 Kan. 138; Marbourg v. Manufacturing Co., 32 Kan. 636, 5 Pac. Rep. 181; Hughes v. Shull, 33 Kan. 127, 5 Pac. Rep. 414; Bush v. Bush, 33 Kan. 567, 6 Pac. Rep. 794; Miller v. Krueger, 36 Kan. 345, 13 Pac. Rep. 641.

4. The chattel mortgage executed by R. M. Hamill to the Harvey County Bank on the 20th day of March was not placed on record until the 3d day of May, and not then until after conversations had by an agent of the attaching creditors with both Hamill and Spivey, in which conversations the existence of the chattel mortgage was not disclosed by either of them, and this was done in pursuance of an agreement made between them, and this agreement was made at a time when an agent of the attaching creditors was there urging payment or security by R. M. Hamill. The fact that the chattel mortgage was not recorded until the 3d day of May, and that there was an agreement by Spivey and R. M. Hamill not to disclose its existence to other creditors, taken in connection with all the other facts and circumstances disclosed by this record, is to be regarded as tending very strongly to show the fraudulent intent of these parties. Bank v. Jaffray, 41 Kan. 691, 19 Pac. Rep. 626.

5. The court charged the jury in effect that the knowledge of Spivey was the knowledge of the bank, but the jury, in their sixth special finding, either did not understand or deliberately evaded such instruction. They find that the Harvey County Bank, through its officers, did not know that R. M. Hamill had purchased the goods by false and fraudulent means at the time it took this $10,000 mortgage. It was known to Spivey, and he was the active manager of the bank, and had been for some years prior to this time. If the jury meant that Spivey had no knowledge, there is not a particle of evidence to sustain this finding, as we view the facts. If they overlooked or gave no meaning to the words as used in the instructions of the trial judge, "if the bank, through its officers, knew," and supposed that the bank itself, as distinguished from its officers, did not know, then they misapplied the law. The other two findings, already largely discussed, are inconsistent with and antagonistic to the general verdict. In the fourth special finding the jury evaded an answer to a question of fact, and gave a legal conclusion. In the ninth and tenth special findings the evasion of the jury to a plain question of fact is self-evident. At the time the verdict was returned into court the plaintiffs in error demanded that the jury be required to answer interrogatories Nos. 4, 9, and 10 more fully and specifically, which demand was refused by the court, and the jury was discharged. We think this was error. We are satisfied that justice has not been done; that material error was committed in the trial; that strong evidences of fraud and fraudulent intent are abundant in the record; and hence recommend that the judgment be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

BABCOCK et al. v. FARMERS' & DROVERS' BANK.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

PLEADING—FAILURE TO REPLY—JUDGMENT.

Where a plaintiff declares upon a note which is set out in the petition, and the defendants answer that it was given for usurious interest, and was void for want of consideration, and no reply was filed by the plaintiff to the answer, and the court overruled the motion of the defendants to require the plaintiff to file a reply to such answer, and proceeded to trial over the objection of the defendants, and instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, held, that such verdict, and the judgment based thereon, are erroneous.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Kingman county; S. W. LESLIE, Judge.

L. M. Conkling & Son, for plaintiffs in error. Lydecker & Cooper, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. The Farmers' & Drovers' Bank sued the plaintiffs in error in the district court of Kingman county upon a promissory note for $1,776.50. S. G. Babcock answered, admitting the execution of the note, and set up the affirmative defense that the note was void for want of consideration; that he had at different times and in different sums borrowed money from the Farmers' & Drovers' Bank, and had agreed to pay usurious interest for the use of the money so borrowed; that the whole sum of such usurious interest agreed to be paid by him amounted to the sum stated in the note sued on, and that this note was executed for the usurious interest over and above the legal rate of interest on the various sums loaned to him. This answer was verified, and before the trial the district court made an order permitting the defendants below Alexander and Culver to adopt the pleading filed by Babcock as their answer. No reply was filed by the plaintiff below to this answer. The defendants asked for judgment upon the pleadings, which was overruled, and the court ordered the case to be tried without a reply to the answer, over the objection of the defendants. A jury was impaneled and sworn, and the plaintiff introduced its note in evidence, which was objected to. The defendants then offered in evidence the verified answer filed by Babcock, which was objected to, and the trial court sustained the objection. No other evidence was offered. The court instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount due on the note sued on. A verdict was returned for the sum of $1,952.37, and a judgment was rendered for that amount in favor of the plaintiff below. The plaintiffs in error bring the case to this court. It is first claimed that the answer of the defendants below contained such material allegations of new matter or affirmative defense as required a reply from the plaintiff to put the same in issue, and, having failed to reply, it admitted the same to be true, and that the defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings should have been sustained. The reply was not waived, and we think it was error for the trial court to proceed without requiring a reply to the new matter set up in the answer. Section 128 of the Civil Code provides that every material allegation of new matter in the answer, not controverted by the reply, shall, for the purposes of the action, be taken as true. The defense set up was that the entire consideration of the note was usurious, which, if true, was a complete defense to the note set out in the petition. We think a reply was necessary, and, none having been filed, we are of the opinion that the plaintiffs in error should have had judgment upon the pleadings. Scott v. Morning, 18 Kan. 489. It is unnecessary for us to notice the other errors. We recommend a reversal of the judgment, and that a new trial be granted.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—PREFERENCES.

Error from district court, Osage county; R. B. SPILLMAN, Judge.

Ellis Lewis and W. A. Madaris, for plaintiffs in error. L. T. Wilson, for defendant in error.

JOHNSTON, J. This was an action by Charles W. De Wolf & Son to recover from E. M. Armstrong the sum of $147.01. They obtained an order of attachment alleging that the defendant had sold, conveyed, and disposed of his property with the intent to cheat and defraud his creditors, and to hinder and delay them in the collection of their debts. After the order of attachment had been issued and served, the defendant filed an affidavit alleging that the grounds alleged for an attachment were untrue, and upon the proofs offered at the hearing of the motion the attachment was discharged. The case was submitted upon the same testimony as was Furniture Co. v. Armstrong, (Kan.) 26 Pac. Rep. 693. It appears that the debts which were paid and secured by the defendant were bona fide; and it is settled that a debtor in falling circumstances may in good faith prefer one creditor to another, and may transfer and mortgage his property to secure a bona fide debt, although such action may result in depriving other creditors of either satisfaction of or security for their claims. In the case cited the bona fides of the debt and the good faith of the preference has been found, and, following the decision in the cited case, there must be an order and judgment of affirmance in this. All the justices concurring.

ATTACHMENT OF PROPERTY OF THIRD PERSON—RELEASE.

2. Where land has been levied upon under an order of attachment against a defendant, and such defendant has no title, estate, or interest in the land attached, the district court may, upon the motion of the person owning the same, and sufficient facts to establish that fact, discharge the property from the attachment. *Long v. Error from district court, Harvey county; L. HOUK, Judge.

Clarence Spooner, for plaintiff in error. Bowman & Bucher, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. On January 19, 1886, John Funk and James F. Funk, at Raymore, Mo., executed and delivered their promissory note to Lucinda B. Dearborn for $5,500, payable four years after date, with 8 per cent. interest, payable semi-annually. On the 2d day of June, 1888, Lucinda B. Dearborn brought her action against James F. Funk in the district court of Harvey county, in this state, to recover the amount of the promissory note before the note became due. At the same time, upon her affidavit, she obtained an order of attachment from the district judge. The order of attachment was levied on June 5, 1888, upon section 31, township 22, range 3, in Harvey county. In May, 1887, James F. Funk was the owner of a certain quarter section of land in Cass county, Mo. On the 17th day of May, 1887, he exchanged with James M. Vaughan, the father of his wife, the Cass county land for the land attached. The conveyance for the land attached was executed and delivered to Mrs. Ina B. Funk, the wife of said James F. Funk. On November 15, 1887, Mr. and Mrs. Funk conveyed this land to James M. Vaughan in exchange for other property in Harvey county, in this state. After the land was attached, James M. Vaughan filed his motion to discharge the property from the attachment, upon the ground that James M. Funk had no title, estate, or interest therein, and that he (Vaughan) was the owner of the land, and had been such owner for a long time prior to the levy of the attachment. The motion to discharge the land from the attachment was sustained. The plaintiff excepted and brings the case here. It clearly appears from the evidence introduced upon the hearing of the motion to discharge the attached property that James F. Funk had no title, estate, or interest therein at the time of the levy. There is nothing in the evidence showing or tending to show any fraud in the conveyance from James M. Vaughan and wife to Mrs. Ina B. Funk on the 17th day of May, 1887, or in the conveyance from Mrs. Ina B. Funk and husband to James M. Vaughan, of the 15th of November, 1887. The deed to Mrs. Ina B. Funk on the 17th of May, 1887, was made to her instead of her husband, because her father donated to her a part of the land. At that time, and also at the date of the deed of the 15th of November, 1887, he had no knowledge or notice of any fraud or wrong intended by James F. Funk. The deed of the 15th of November, 1887, seems to have been made to Vaughan in good faith; and that deed, whatever may be said of the deed of the 17th day of May, 1887, deprived both James F. and Mrs. Ina B. Funk of all interest in the land attached. It was ruled in Long v. Murphy, 27 Kan. 375, that "when land has been levied upon under an order of attachment any person claiming to be the owner thereof and interested in discharging the property from the attachment may, although he is not a party to the original action, move the court to discharge the attachment as to the property so claimed by him." Of course if, as appeared upon the hearing of the motion, James F. Funk had no title, estate, or interest in the land attached, the land could not be subjected to his debts. Therefore Lucinda B. Dearborn has no grounds of complaint against the discharge of the attached property. The order and judgment of the district court, being sustained by oral evidence, must be upheld. Urquhart v. Smith, 5 Kan. 447; Wilson v. Lightbody, 29 Kan. 446. Judgment for an affirmance will be rendered. All the justices concurring.

EMINENT DOMAIN—COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE.

In an action to determine the value of certain town lots condemned for the right of way of a railroad, the opinions of witnesses, as to the value of the lots at the time they were condemned, will not be deemed conclusive, but the jury may consider such opinions in connection with all the other testimony in the case, and then, for itself, determine from all the testimony the value of such lots.

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Bourbon county; C. O. FRENCH, Judge.

Geo. R. Peck, A. A. Hurd, and Robt. Dunlap, for plaintiff in error. A. A. Harris and Henry E. Harris, for defendant in error.

GREEN, C. The plaintiff in error condemned three lots in block 8 of Carroll's plaza, in the city of Ft. Scott, in Bourbon county, for railroad purposes. AN the lots were appropriated, and the commissioners awarded as compensation for them $240. The defendant in error appealed from the award. The case was tried in the district court, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the owner of the lots for the sum of $881.93. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict. The plaintiff in error contends that the jury disregarded the evidence in arriving at their verdict, and that it is contrary to and unsupported by the evidence. Six witnesses testified for the plaintiff, upon the trial in the district court, that the lots were worth $1,500. Five witnesses, in behalf of the defendant below, fixed the value of the lots at from $240 to $375. There was no evidence from any witness fixing the value of the property at the amount returned by the jury. The defendant below requested the court to permit the jury to view the premises, but this request was denied. It is claimed that the verdict is neither in accord with the plaintiff's nor defendant's witnesses, and hence is unsupported by any evidence. It was the particular province of the jury to determine the value of the lots. Their value was purely a question of fact, to be determined from all of the evidence before them. They had the testimony of the witnesses, upon the part of the plaintiff and defendant, giving their opinions as to the value of these lots. There was evidence, too, of the location and condition of the lots, as well as the purposes for which they might be utilized. The testimony as to the value of the property condemned was opinion evidence. The witnesses gave their best judgment as to the value of the lots, and this evidence depended upon a knowledge of the value of real estate at the time the property was taken. Now, an opinion as to the value of a piece of property is not, strictly speaking, a fact, but is received in evidence upon the same principle as that on which the opinions of experts are admitted. In a well-considered case, decided by the supreme court of the United States, Mr. Justice FIELD observed: "The evidence of experts as to the value of professional services does not differ, in principle, from such evidence as to the value of labor in other departments of business, or as to the value of property. So far from laying aside their own general knowledge and ideas, the jury should have applied that knowledge and those ideas to the matters of fact in evidence in determining the weight to be given to the opinions expressed, and it was only in that way that they could arrive at a just conclusion. While they cannot act in any case upon particular facts material to its disposition resting in their private knowledge, but should be governed by the evidence adduced, they may, and to act intelligently they must, judge of the weight and force of that evidence by their own general knowledge of the subject of inquiry." Head v. Hargrave, 105 U. S. 45. The same court quotes approvingly the case of Anthony v. Stinson, 4 Kan. 211, where this court said that the jury were not to be instructed as to what part of the testimony before them should control their verdict; that, in order to control it, the testimony of experts should be of such a character as to outweigh, by its intrinsic force and probability, all conflicting testimony; and that they could not be required to accept, as a matter of law, the conclusions of the witnesses instead of their own. In a recent case this court has said that a court or jury trying the question of the value of legal services is not bound to accept as conclusive the opinions given by attorneys respecting the value of certain services; that such opinions are only to be considered in connection with other testimony in the case, in the light of which and of its own general knowledge the court or jury should, for itself, determine the value. Bentley v. Brown, 37 Kan. 14, 14 Pac. Rep. 485. In Patterson v. Boston, 20 Pick. 168, the question was as to the damages to be awarded to the plaintiff for his property taken to widen a street in Boston. The trial court instructed the jury that, in estimating the amount of the damages, if any of them knew, of his own knowledge, any material fact that bore upon the issue, he ought to disclose it, and be sworn, and communicate it to his fellows in open court, in the presence of the parties; but that, in making up their verdict, they might rightfully be influenced by their general knowledge on such subject, as well as by the testimony and opinions of witnesses. The case being taken to the supreme court of the state, it was held that the directions were not open to exception. Said Chief Justice Shaw, speaking for the court: "Juries would be very little fit for the high and responsible office to which they are called, especially to make an appraisal, if they might not avail themselves of those powers of their minds when they are most necessary to the performance of their duties." In Murdock v. Sumner, 22 Pick. 158, the same court, speaking through the same distinguished judge, said that "the jury very properly exercise their own judgment, and apply their own knowledge and experience, in regard to the general subject of inquiry." In that case a witness had testified as to the quality, condition, and cost of certain goods, and giving his opinion as to their worth; and the court said that "the jury were not bound by the opinion of the witness. They might have taken the facts testified by him as to the cost, quality, and condition of the goods, and come to a different opinion as to their value." Lawson, Exp. Ev. 68. The jury is to decide what weight, if any, shall be given to the opinions or evidence of an expert, or to the opinion of a non-professional witness. They are not bound by such evidence, and may exercise their own experience in deciding the question touching which the opinions were given. 7 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 516; Railroad Co. v. Thul, 32 Kan. 255, 4 Pac. Rep. 352; Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 496; Rose v. Spies, 44 Mo. 20. We recommend an affirmance of the judgment.

FORECLOSURE OF CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, in which many other lienholders are made parties and file answers in the nature of cross-petitions, and distinct issues are made between the plaintiffs and other mortgagees, and between other mortgagees as to the priority of the liens of their respective mortgages, it is error for the trial court to sustain a demurrer to the evidence of the plaintiffs, on behalf of certain mortgagees, and dismiss the action as to them, and deprive other parties from having issues between them and those who filed the demurrer heard and determined.

Culhoun & Garwood and D. H. Ettien, for plaintiffs in error. Morgan, Lawrance & Mason, for defendants in error.

SIMPSON, C. Ott & Tewksbury commenced this action against J. H. Allen, A. P. Allen, D. P. Doak, A. T. Irvin, the Kendall Exchange Bank, Kirtland & Flash, the Bank of Hartland, the Hamilton Land Company, G. W. Williams, W. C. Hasler, as assignee of G. W. Williams, Aaron S. Drake, R. B. Clark, M. F. Cooley, and James L. Lombard. Their petition alleged that on the 28th day of July, 1887, the Allens executed their note to them for $2,000, payable at the Central National Bank of Topeka on November 1, 1887. That on the 1st of August, 1887, the Allens executed four promissory notes to the Topeka Investment & Loan Company for the following sums: One for $148, one for $200, one for $220, and one for $240, payable at various times. That the payment of these notes were guarantied by the said Ott & Tewksbury, and that they were compelled to pay them when the same became due and payable. That to secure the payment of the first sum mentioned the Allens executed a chattel mortgage to Ott & Tewksbury on certain ranch cattle described therein. This chattel mortgage was filed for record in Hamilton county on the 30th day of July, 1887, at 9 o'clock A. M. It is alleged that the present county of Kearney was then a part of Hamilton county, and that the mortgaged property was situated in what is now Kearney county. It is alleged that the defendants herein named are claiming liens on the mortgaged property adverse to the claims of the plaintiffs Ott & Tewksbury, to the aggregate amount of $22,200, but that all of said liens are subsequent and inferior to that of Ott & Tewksbury. That the Allen brothers are insolvent, and are now non-residents of the state. They aver that the defendants Doak and Irvin pretend to hold mortgages on 380 head of cattle, 400 tons of hay, and a large amount of other property owned by the Allens, and were attempting to sell and dispose of said property at one-fourth of its actual value, and that a large amount of said property was embraced in their mortgage. They pray judgment against the Allens. Ask that their chattel mortgage be foreclosed; that they may be adjudged to have the first lien; that the defendants be required to plead and set forth their respective liens to or interest in said mortgaged property, and for other relief. The Hamilton Land Company filed its answer by way of cross-petition, claiming that John H. Allen executed his note to said company on the 1st day of November, 1886, for $7,482.63, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum; and that John H. Allen execute a chattel mortgage on 315 head of cattle to secure the same. Said chattel mortgage was filed for record in Hamilton county on the 6th day of January, A. D. 1887, at 6 o'clock P. M., and was renewed on the 12th day of November, 1887. And for a second cause of action the land company avers that on the 2d day of May, 1887, the Allens executed a note to James L. Lombard for $3,000, with interest at 10 per cent. That on the 15th day of April, 1888, this note was sold and transferred to the Hamilton Land Company. Same as to a note for $1,350. Same as to a note for $273.30. That all of said notes were secured by a chattel mortgage executed by the Allens on all this stock of cattle, estimated at 1,200 head, located on their ranch in Kearney county, Kan. That said chattel mortgage was filed for record on the 14th day of November, 1887, at 9 o'clock A. M., in Hamilton county. D. P. Doak filed his answer, averring that on the 2d day of September, 1887, the Allens executed and delivered to him a chattel mortgage on 6 head of work mules, 80 head of ranch cattle, branded "I. D.," 35 head of 3 and 4 year old steers, branded "H. L.," all being at the time on the Allen ranch, six miles from Kendall; that said chattel mortgage was filed for record in Hamilton county on the 8th day of May, 1888; that default was made on said chattel mortgage, and he took possession of the property therein described, and sold the same at public auction on the 20th day of April, 1888, and bought them in to satisfy his debt, and is now the sole owner of the same. A. T. Irvin files an answer, claiming that on the 7th day of February, 1887, the Allens executed and delivered to him a certain chattel mortgage, and that on the 14th day of April, 1887, the Allens executed and delivered to him a second chattel mortgage on certain property described in said mortgages. That the conditions of these mortgages were not complied with, and he took possession of the mortgaged property, and sold the same at public auction on the 20th day of April, 1888, to satisfy his debt. Doak and Irvin filed a joint answer to the cross-petition of the Hamilton Land Company, in which it is alleged that on the 24th day of December, 1887, the Allens executed and delivered to them two certain chattel mortgages upon property described therein; that said mortgages were recorded in Hamilton county on the 6th day of January, 1888; that the conditions of said mortgages were not complied with, and that they took possession of the mortgaged property and sold the same at public auction on the 20th day of April, 1888, to satisfy their debt. Some other of the defendants filed answers, and Ott & Tewksbury and the Hamilton Land Company filed replies to the answers of D.

P. Doak, A. T. Irvin, and Doak and Irvin. In this state of the pleadings this cause came on for trial in the district court of Kearney county at the October term, 1888. Ott & Tewksbury, to maintain the issues on their part, introduced S. S. Ott as a witness, who testified as to his partnership with Tewksbury, and as to the amount of the indebtedness of the Allens to his firm, how it accrued, and how it was secured. The note of the Allens to Ott & Tewksbury and the chattel mortgage securing it, were then read. Also the notes of the Allens to the Topeka Investment & Loan Company, and their assignment to Ott & Tewksbury, were read in evidence. Then J. C. Lester, the manager of the Hamilton Land Company, testified as to the indebtedness of the Allens to the company and to Lombard, that was transferred to the company. The chattel mortgage given by the Allens to Lombard was read in evidence. The chattel mortgage given by J. H. Allen to Lombard was read in evidence. A. E. Guy then testified that, as receiver in this case, he took possession of all of the property of the Allens that he could find in the county, but states two different dates at which this was done,—on the 20th day of April, and the 14th day of May, 1888. A part of the property he took possession of was found in the possession and under the control of D. P. Doak and A. T. Irvin, amounting to 235 head. Lester was again called to the witness stand, and identified certain cattle that he saw in Doak's possession at the Bear Creek ranch on the 18th day of April, 1888, as being covered by the mortgage to the Hamilton Land Company, and the mortgage to Ott & Tewksbury, but stated that there were other cattle held by other parties on the ranch. Ott & Tewksbury having rested, the defendants, Irvin and Doak, the Kendall Exchange Bank, and Thomas Doak, filed a demurrer to their evidence for the reason that it fails to show facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court sustained this demurrer, and entered the following judgment: "Wherefore it is by the court considered, ordered, and adjudged that the defendants, Thomas Doak, the Kendall Exchange Bank, D. P. Doak, and A. T. Irvin, be discharged without day, and that this cause be dismissed as to them, such dismissal being a final judgment in such cause, and the said defendants recover their costs, taxed at ——— dollars." The ruling of the trial court in sustaining this demurrer and dismissing D. P. Doak, A. T. Irvin, the Kendall Exchange Bank, and Thomas Doak are assigned here as errors. Ott & Tewksbury, the Hamilton Land Company, and M. F. Cooley are the parties complaining here. There is a strange admixture of interests represented by the plaintiffs in error, and in some respects the interests of the several plaintiffs in error are adverse to each other; but, as there has been no objection made in this court, we will not complain. The record gives no reason for the ruling of the trial court. There seems to be a belief on the part of the counsel for the defendants in error that the reason was that, there being no legal record of the various chattel mortgages, and no proof that Doak, Irvin, the Kendall Exchange Bank, or Thomas Doak had notice or knowledge of the other mortgages, and the evidence of the plaintiffs showing that before the time of the commencement of the action Doak and Irvin were in possession, the result legally followed that they must prevail. In other words, it is contended that in order to make a prima facie case for themselves, Ott & Tewksbury must show that their mortgage was recorded according to law. The due execution of all the notes and mortgages is admitted by the pleadings. The mortgage of Ott & Tewksbury was recorded in Hamilton county on the 30th of July, 1887. The Hamilton Land Company's mortgage was recorded in Hamilton county on the 6th day of January, 1887, and was renewed on the 12th day of November, 1887. The Lombard mortgage, transferred to the Hamilton Land Company, was recorded in Hamilton county on the 14th day of November, 1887, at 9 o'clock A. M. The mortgage of A. T. Irvin was recorded in Hamilton county on the 7th day of February, 1887, and renewed on the 4th day of January, 1888. The Doak and Irvin mortgages were filed for record in Hamilton county, January 6, 1888. The M. F. Cooley mortgage was recorded in Hamilton county on the 11th day of July, 1887, and renewed March 24, 1888. If the date of the record is to govern, the Hamilton Land Company's mortgage of January 6, 1887, is first, and Irvin is second, and Ott & Tewksbury third; all this upon the theory that there were proper renewals of the various chattel mortgages before the commencement of this action. If the recording of these various mortgages in Hamilton county were not in accordance with law, the party who first obtained possession of the mortgaged property without knowledge of the other incumbrances would probably have a great advantage. Kearney county was created by an act of the legislature that went into effect on the 23d day of March, 1887, a part of it being taken from Hamilton county, which was created by an act of the legislature years before, but Hamilton county was not organized until 1886. When Kearney county was organized the record does not disclose. Neither are we certain from the recitations of this record where all this chattel property was located at the time these mortgages were executed and recorded. Hence we are not in possession of all the facts necessary to pass intelligently upon these various questions. We do think that there were issues made by the pleadings as between the Hamilton Land Company and M. F. Cooley and these defendants, they had a right to have determined; that Ott & Tewksbury had the right to have all the liens on this property adjusted, and this could not be done without these defendants in error were still parties to the record. It would seem from a mere inspection of the record that these various chattel mortgages to the contending parties all covered, more or less, the same property, but the identification was not made clear by evidence on the trial, and yet there was some evidence of it. We are not called upon to make that identification by a comparison of the descriptions of the chattels from the face of the mortgages. For these and various other reasons we conclude that the ruling on the demurrer and the judgment of dismissal are erroneous, and that justice can better be subserved by a new trial, when all the facts on all sides can be presented by the parties to this action, and all their rights intelligently determined. We recommend a reversal of the judgment of the district court of Kearney county, and that a new trial be granted.

COLUMBIA LAND & CATTLE CO. v. DALY.

SAME v. MURKINS.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

REVERSAL ON APPEAL — AUTHORITY OF SPECIAL PARTNER.

1. Where the judgment rendered by a district court is not supported by the pleadings filed in the case, and is contrary to the statutes of the state, the judgment, upon proceedings in error, will be reversed, and no motion for a new trial or exception to the judgment is necessary to bring the case to the supreme court for review.

2. A special partner, under the provisions of paragraph 3992, Gen. St. 1889, has no authority to transact any business on account of the partnership, nor to make the partnership liable for his contracts as such special partner only.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Ellis county; S. J. OSBORN, Judge.

J. G. Waters, for plaintiff in error.
Reeder & Reeder, Robt. Dunlap, and Curtis & Safford, for defendants in error.

HORTON, C. J. The same questions are presented in both cases, and therefore we consider them together. The Columbia Land & Cattle Company is a corporation organized under the laws of Colorado. In the first case Thomas Daly brought his action against that corporation to recover the value of certain goods, wares, and merchandise alleged to have been purchased by D. B. Powers, as a "special partner" of the corporation, and also for the amount of certain sight drafts made by D. B. Powers upon H. S. Halley, the general manager of the corporation. The total amount of these claims is $529.70. In the second case Joseph Murkins brought his action against the corporation and D. B. Powers, the "special partner," to recover $224.50 for use of a pasture. The corporation in both cases filed verified answers containing general denials, and also denials that D. B. Powers was a "special partner" or any other partner of the corporation. There was no further appearance on the part of the corporation, and judgment was rendered against it for the several amounts claimed. The case is brought here by the corporation upon the ground that, under the pleadings, the plaintiffs below were not entitled to recover. Both of the petitions, as amended, allege that D. B. Powers is a "special partner" of the corporation, and as such partner made the corporation liable for the amount sued for. A pleading is always construed most strongly against the pleader, and the allegation in the amended petitions concerning D. B. Powers, as a "special partner," under the provisions of paragraph 3992, Gen. St. 1889, renders the petitions fatally defective: "A special partner may, from time to time, examine into the state and progress of the partnership concerns, and may advise as to their management; but he shall not transact any business on account of the partnership, nor be employed for that purpose as agent, attorney, or otherwise. If he shall interfere, contrary to these provisions, he shall be deemed a general partner." Gen. St. 1868, c. 74, § 16. The corporation could not be made liable upon the contract or purchase of D. B. Powers as a "special partner." He had no authority, under the allegations of the amended petitions and the statutes, to bind the corporation or partnership; therefore, upon the amended petitions, the plaintiffs below were not entitled to recover. Again, the amended petitions alleged a special partnership with Powers, under a written contract set up in the petitions. The answer alleged under oath that there was no partnership of any kind, and that the plaintiffs below well knew that there was none when they dealt with Powers, and that he was acting solely upon his own responsibility. There were no replies filed, and the corporation did not waive anything by appearing at the trial. In support of the judgments, it is said that no motion for a new trial was made, and no exceptions taken. Therefore it is contended that this court has no errors before it to review or reverse. This is not correct. Where a judgment is not supported by the pleadings, the error is manifest in the record, and can be reversed without any motion for a new trial, and without exceptions being taken to the erroneous judgment. It was said in Brown v. Tuppeny, 24 Kan. 29, that, "where the error of the court is apparent in the record, no exception is necessary to bring the case to the supreme court for review." See, also, Koehler v. Ball, 2 Kan. 160; Dexter v. Cochran, 17 Kan. 447. The judgments will be reversed, and the causes remanded. All the justices concurring.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

SALE OF BONDS FOR CITY—COMPENSATION—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE.

1. Where funds derived from the sale of bonds of a city of the third class are received either by the city treasurer or other person acting in behalf of the city, the entire amount, should, on demand, be paid into the city treasury. Such persons cannot fix their own compensation for services in respect to such funds, or withhold a part of the proceeds as compensation for their services; but any such claim must be presented to the city council in writing, and allowed in the manner prescribed by statute.

2. A demurrer to the evidence admits not only the truth of the facts directly proven by the plaintiff, but also all that may fairly be inferred from those facts; and in the present case the plaintiff's testimony is deemed sufficient to show a liability against the defendants, and to resist their demurrer.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from district court, Hamilton county; A. J. ABBOTT, Judge.

A. A. Howard and Geo. Getty, for plaintiff in error. S. M. Tucker, for defendants in error.

JOHNSTON, J. The city of Syracuse brought an action against W. F. Reed & Co. to recover $218.79. It was alleged that the defendants received from N. W. Harris & Co., of Chicago, $8,360, which was the proceeds of certain bonds of the city of Syracuse that had been sold in Chicago, and that the defendants had only paid over the sum of $8,141.02, and had refused to pay to the city the balance of the amount received, although payment thereof had been demanded. In the answer it was admitted that Syracuse was a city of the third class, and that the defendants were a copartnership; but the further allegations of the petition were denied. A jury was waived, and the cause was submitted to the court for trial. After testimony had been introduced by the city, the court sustained defendants' demurrer to the evidence, and gave judgment in their favor. The plaintiff complains of this ruling, and the question before us is whether the testimony offered, although it may be weak and inconclusive, tends to prove all material facts in issue. A demurrer to the evidence admits not only the truth of the facts directly proved by the plaintiff, but also all that may be fairly inferred from them; and unless the plaintiff has utterly failed to prove its case, or some material fact in issue in the case, the demurrer cannot be rightly sustained. Railroad Co. v. Foster, 39 Kan. 329, 18 Pac. Rep. 285, and cases cited. Governed by these rules, which are well settled, we think the demurrer in the present case should have been overruled. Looking at the testimony in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, it appears that W. F. Reed was city treasurer of Syracuse, and while he was the incumbent of that office the bonds mentioned were executed and placed in his custody as city treasurer. Guy & Son negotiated the sale of the bonds in Chicago, where they were forwarded by the city treasurer; but before the sale was effected Reed was superseded, and Frank Bentley was appointed as his successor. About a week after Reed surrendered the office to Bentley, the bonds were sold, and the proceeds placed in a Chicago bank to the credit of Reed, who had transmitted the bonds there. He paid Guy & Son a commission for the negotiation of the bonds, and for compensation, and to reimburse himself for the commission paid to Guy & Son, he retained 3 per cent. of the proceeds, paying the balance to the city treasurer. The amount so retained was $218.79, and this sum the city seeks to recover. While the salary or compensation of Reed as city treasurer is not shown, it does appear that his claim for salary or compensation was never acted upon nor allowed by the city council. The proceeds of the bonds belonged to the city, and neither Reed nor W. F. Reed & Co. were authorized to retain any part of the same. It appears that W. F. Reed & Co. are bankers, and it is stated that they received the money as bankers; but so far as the record shows neither Reed nor his firm were employed by the city to negotiate a sale of the bonds, or to employ others to make such sale. This work was done by Guy & Son, who claim that they represented the city in the transaction. When the funds derived from the sale of the bonds were received by the bank, W. F. Reed & Co. should have turned them over to the city, and presented any claim for commission or compensation to the city council to which they might be entitled. It may be that some portion of the salary of W. F. Reed remains unpaid, or it may be that some compensation is due to the firm for services in regard to the negotiation of the bonds or the receipt and payment of the proceeds of the sale after W. F. Reed ceased to be treasurer; but if Reed or his firm has any such claim against the city, it must be presented in writing, and allowed in the manner prescribed by the statute. Gen. St. 1889, pars. 967, 971. They cannot fix their own compensation, and appropriate the city funds in payment of the same, simply because funds of the city happen to be in their hands. If anything is due to them, it must be obtained in the manner pointed out by the statute. The fact that Reed had charged himself as treasurer upon the books of the city with the amount derived from the sale of the bonds will not affect his right to compensation, nor the correctness of the ruling of the court upon the demurrer. The claim for compensation must, in any event, be presented to the city council, and the mayor and council alone can appropriate the funds of the city to the payment of such a claim. Under the rule which governs us in considering a demurrer to the evidence, we think a prima facie showing of liability on the part of the defendants had been made, and that the demurrer to the evidence should have been overruled. The judgment of the district court will therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial. All the justices concurring.

FARMERS' STATE BANK OF SOLOMON CITY v. BLEVINS.

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 6, 1891.)

PLEDGE OF NOTE—RIGHTS OF PLEDGEE.

Where negotiable promissory notes, pledged to an innocent holder to secure a pre-existing debt due from the payee to the pledgee, are subject to equitable defenses as between the maker and payee, and are of a greater amount than the pre-existing debt, the recovery of the pledgee against the maker is limited to the amount of the pre-existing debt.

(Syllabus by Simpson, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Dickinson county; M. B. NICHOLSON, Judge.

Garver and Bond, for plaintiff in error. Stambaugh, Hurd & Dewey, for defendant in error.

SIMPSON, C. The Farmers' State Bank, as plaintiff in the court below, brought this action against defendant in error on three notes, made June 13, 1887, by defendant, to one J. H. Brady, and by Brady indorsed and transferred to plaintiff before maturity, as collateral security for certain indebtedness then owing from Brady to said bank. The notes sued on were for the aggregate sum of $5,000, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. from their date. No part of said notes had been paid. They secured a debt of $4,367.63. On the trial the defendant pleaded, and attempted to prove, a failure of consideration for said notes; but the court, having found that plaintiff was a bona fide holder for value before maturity, and without notice of any defenses thereto, refused to hear the evidence offered by defendant as to the claimed invalidity of said notes, and rendered judgment thereon in favor of plaintiff for $4,367.63, the amount of the indebtedness from Brady to plaintiff which said notes were security for. The plaintiff claimed judgment for the full amount of the collateral notes, which claim was denied by the court, and exceptions to the ruling taken by plaintiff. The only question for determination by this court is whether, in an action against the maker of notes which have been transferred before maturity to an innocent and bona fide holder as collateral security for an indebtedness existing between the payee of such notes and the indorsee, the endorsee and holder is entitled to recover against the maker the full amount of such collateral notes, where such amount exceeds the indebtedness which they were transferred to secure, without regard to any defenses that may exist between the original parties to such notes, or whether, in such case, the right of the plaintiff to recover is limited to the amount of the principal debt. The plaintiff in error in this case has no interest in the question, except as the decision of the court below might involve it in a controversy with Brady, should he call upon it to account for the difference between the amount of the collateral notes and the debt he was owing to the bank. No trial or determination was had as to the merits of the defense made against the notes, and it does not appear at this time whether, as between Brady and Blevins, the full amount thereof could be collected. It is said that Brady may demand of the bank to account to him for the full amount of these notes, and that it cannot defend against such claim by saying that the surplus over its debt was not collected because Blevins had a defense to them as against Brady. If the bank is limited in its right to recover to the amount of its claim against Brady, the right to the balance of the notes being undetermined, can Blevins be subjected to another action by Brady to recover such balance? Brady, or his assignee, must have his day in court before he can be deprived of any portion of these notes; but, if the bank can only recover to the extent of its interest, and Brady is given the right to sue for the balance of the notes, do we not subject Blevins to two actions for the same cause? On the other hand, it does not seem just that Blevins shall be deprived of his defenses, except to the extent of the actual interest of the bank, simply because the bank took the notes before maturity in good faith, and without notice of such defenses.

1. The question involved in this case is not presented in a fair attitude by the plaintiff in error. At the commencement of this action to recover on the notes as pledgee, the bank ought to have made Brady a party. He was the payee of the notes sued upon. He had transferred them by indorsement to the bank, who claims to be an innocent holder for value. Even after Blevins filed his answer setting up his various defenses as against Brady, and the knowledge of the bank of these equitable defenses, the bank, for protection against Brady, ought to have made Brady a party, as it now insists upon a recovery for the full amount of the notes; and yet it is shown that Brady's pre-existing indebtedness to the bank is less than the face of the notes and interest. As Brady was not a party then, and is not now, he will not be bound by the decision of this court on the question presented. As to the controversy between the bank and Blevins respecting the amount of the recovery, we think the ruling of the trial court was right. Where negotiable promissory notes, pledged as collateral security, are subject to equitable defenses, as between the maker and payee, and the collateral securities are of greater amount than the pre-existing debt of the payee to the pledgee, the recovery of the pledgee against the maker is limited to the amount of the pre-existing debt. This is the text of section 92, p. 123, Coleb. Coll. Sec., and it is supported by many cited cases, notably that of Bank v. Hemingray, 34 Ohio St. 381. It is said in that case: "If the pledgee sues the maker, the latter may attempt a complete defense, without, in case of failure, thereby incurring a liability to pay to the pledgee anything in addition to the amount of the debt secured by the notes." In this case we note the equitable defenses made by the pleadings. It is true that, under the rulings of the trial court, the defendant in error was not allowed to show them, but he should have been permitted to have done so for the purpose of limiting the recovery of the bank to the amount of the pre-existing indebtedness of Brady to the bank. 34 Ohio St. 381. The trial court finds that amount, however, and also finds that there is a controversy between Brady and Blevins respecting said notes, and we regard these findings as sufficient to make the rule above stated applicable to the facts presented in this record. This same rule applies in cases of fraud by the payee against the maker, or where there is a failure of consideration, or where the paper indicates the amount it can be pledged for, or where the paper is subject to equitable set-offs, or in cases of accommodation paper, or in cases of misappropriation between makers, payees, or indorsers, and possibly in other cases. The trial court finds that the bank is an innocent holder for value of the notes sued upon, and there is no doubt but that the bank taking these notes under these circumstances is protected against equities. 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 832, and the many authorities cited in the foot-note.

We apprehend that the degree of protection afforded the bank by reason of being a bona fide holder for value is measured by the extent of the pre-existing obligation. It is said in this same section: "When it appears that the bill or note was acquired by the holder as collateral security for a debt, he is entitled to recover upon it; but he is still limited to the amount of the debt, if there be a valid defense against his transferrer." This text is supported by the cases of Duncan v. Gilbert, 29 N. J. Law, 527; Fisher v. Fisher, 96 Mass. 303; Stoddard v. Kimball, 6 Cush. 469; Bank v. Chapin, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 40. We are not aware that this question has ever been passed upon by this court, but we think that the doctrine that the pledgee cannot recover more than the amount of the debt of the pledgor is in accord with natural justice, and, while we hesitate to state that as a rule, yet we do think that any other rule, or any exceptions to or limitation of this doctrine, ought not to be indulged in without great caution. It is true that cases can be found that hold that the pledgee can recover the full amount expressed by the face of the collateral paper, without reference to the amount of the debt secured thereby, where none of the limitations heretofore referred to exist; but, without a special examination of them, we expect that it will be found that in such cases the payee and indorser are parties as well as the holder and maker, or else that none of the questions that affect the bona fides of the pledgee, or the equities between maker and payee, were raised by the pleadings. Be that as it may, upon the question now before us, and under the circumstances surrounding it, we recommend that the judgment of the district court of Dickinson county be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. It is so ordered; all the justices concurring.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

(Syllabus by Green, C.)

Commissioners' decision. Error from district court, Shawnee county; JOHN GUTHRIE, Judge.

Stumbaugh, Arnold & Hilton, for plaintiffs in error. M. E. Mathews, for defendants in error.

GREEN, C. This action was brought by the plaintiffs in error to set aside a deed made by Beverly Anderson and wife for two lots on Clay street, in the city of Topeka, to their two sons, William Mack and Jones Anderson, on the 20th day of January, 1885. On the 29th day of December, 1884, the plaintiffs recovered a judgment against Beverly Anderson before a justice of the peace in Shawnee county, and caused an abstract of such judgment to be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court on the 30th day of July, 1886. An execution was issued thereon, which was returned, "No property found." The plaintiffs then commenced this suit, and a trial was had and special findings of fact returned by the jury, and judgment was rendered for the defendants, and the plaintiffs ask a review of the record by which such judgment was obtained. It seems from the evidence upon the trial that Beverly Anderson had agreed to give his two sons $150 if they would go ahead and do the best they could in working on the homestead farm owned by the father; that the sons, one of whom was 22 and the other 19, resided with their parents, except at such times as they worked out for themselves; that, instead of paying them the $150, the father deeded to them the two lots in question, and the jury found this consideration in support of the deed. Was this consideration sufficient to uphold the deed as to Jones Anderson? The evidence clearly established the fact of his minority when the promise was made by the father, and there was no evidence that he had reached his majority when the deed was executed. The jury found that when the deed was signed by Beverly Anderson and wife he was indebted to his two sons in the sum of $150. Now, this indebtedness, so far as it related to the minor son, was created by the promise of the father to pay the son for doing that which the law says it was his duty to do. The father had not relinquished the right he had to the son's services until he reached his majority. He was entitled to the very labor the son was to perform, without compensation; and it is difficult to see how any debt or obligation could be created which would support a consideration for the deed, so far as it related to this minor, as against existing and bona fide creditors of the father. The obligation rested upon the father to support the son who, in turn, owed the father his services until he became of age. The conveyance was voluntary so far as it related to the minor son, and was without consideration. A promise to do what one is already bound to do is not a consideration. 3 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 834, and authorities there cited. While a voluntary conveyance of land from a parent to his infant would be valid, where the claims of creditors do not intervene, but, if creditors are prejudiced by such conveyance, they would have an equitable right to set it aside, or to avoid it to the extent at least of the debts due them. Field, Infants, § 51; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 422; Bump, Fraud. Conv. 232; Swartz v. Hazlett, 8 Cal. 118. In the latter case, the court said: "Where a parent executes to his infant son a conveyance of property in consideration of services performed, it must be considered as a voluntary conveyance without legal consideration, as he is not legally bound to pay for his son's services. Such a deed is therefore void against the creditors of the parent if made when his remaining property is insufficient to pay his debts." We think there was no evidence to support a consideration in the deed for the lots in question from Beverly Anderson and wife to their minor son. We do not deem it necessary at this time to pass upon the sufficiency of the consideration of the conveyance as to William Mack Anderson. We recommend a reversal of the judgment, and that a new trial be granted.

MANDAMUS—PASSAGE OF ORDINANCE—CORRECTION OF MINUTES—LEVY OF TAX.

In an action of mandamus brought by a water-works company against a city of the second class and its officers and others to compel the levy and collection of a tax to pay rent for hydrants, contracted for by the city under an ordinance, it appears that the minutes for the passage of the ordinance, as entered upon the journal, do not show that the ordinance was regularly passed, but the evidence outside of the journal shows that the ordinance was in fact regularly passed and approved and attested and published, and it appears to be valid upon its face, and was accepted and acted upon as valid by all parties, and the city at two different times passed two other ordinances relating to the water-works, and purporting to be amendments to the aforesaid original ordinance, and under these ordinances the water-works were constructed to the satisfaction of the city, and the city afterwards accepted the hydrants and their use, and levied taxes for three years to pay for their use, and paid the rent therefor for 2½ years, and then refused to further levy taxes or to pay rent for the use of the hydrants, held, that a writ of mandamus may be allowed and issued requiring that the minutes of the passage of the said original ordinance shall be so corrected by an entry nunc pro tunc as to make them show that the ordinance was regularly passed, and that the mayor and council shall then levy taxes, and perform all the other duties which may be incumbent upon them under the provisions of the ordinance as a valid ordinance.

Application for mandamus.

John N. Ritter and Rossington, Smith & Dalls, for plaintiff in error. J. D. McCleverty, for defendants in error.

VALENTINE, J. This is an action of mandamus, brought originally in this court by the Columbus Water-Works Company against the city of Columbus and its officers and others, to compel the defendants to levy and collect certain taxes, especially a tax sufficient to raise the sum of $3,000, with which to pay for the use of 50 hydrants for the year 1891. The facts supposed to be involved in the decision of this controversy have been largely agreed upon by the parties, and evidence has also been introduced. It is admitted by the parties that from a time prior to March 23, 1887, up to the present time, the city of Columbus has been a city of the second class; and it is claimed by the plaintiff that on that day an ordinance was duly passed by the city council and approved by the mayor, and afterwards published, granting to R. A. Long and L. L. Doubleday, and their heirs and assigns, the exclusive right and privilege to construct a system of water-works in such city, and to maintain the same for a period of 99 years, and binding the city to pay for the use of at least 50 hydrants the sum of $60 a year for each hydrant for the period of 21 years; that the provisions of the ordinance were duly accepted by Long and Doubleday, and that afterwards they constructed the water-works in accordance with the terms and provisions of the ordinance, and that the water-works and hydrants were approved and accepted by the city. Afterwards, and on February 9, 1888, Long and Doubleday sold, assigned, and conveyed all their rights and interests in and to the water-works to the present plaintiff, the Columbus Water-Works Company. Afterwards the city levied taxes to pay for the rent of the hydrants for the years 1888, 1889, and 1890, and paid the rent for such hydrants up to the middle of the year 1890, the payments being made semi-annually, when the city refused to levy any further taxes, or to pay any further rent; and this action is brought principally to require the city to levy a tax for the payment of such rent for the year 1891.

The question as to whether an action of mandamus is the proper remedy or not is waived by the defendants, so far as to enable this court to determine the question whether the city is liable or not, under or in accordance with the terms and provisions of the aforesaid city ordinance. They claim that the ordinance is wholly void for the reasons hereafter stated. It is claimed on the part of the city that a city of the second class has no power, by ordinance or in any other manner, to enter into a contract such as was attempted to be made between the city of Columbus and Long and Doubleday in the present case; and this for the following reasons: First, It is claimed that the contract grants exclusive rights and privileges, and this for such a great length of time that they amount in effect to a perpetuity. Second, It is claimed that no such contract as was attempted to be made in the present case, nor any contract like it, can be made, except under or by virtue of a valid city ordinance, properly passed and published. Third, It is claimed that the ordinance under which the plaintiff claims in the present case is not a valid ordinance, for the reason that the records of the city do not show that, on the final passage of the ordinance, the yeas and nays were taken and entered upon the journal by the city clerk, but, on the contrary, show otherwise; and that in fact the yeas and nays were not taken, nor was there any vote taken, upon the final passage of the ordinance. Fourth, It is claimed that the journal of the city council's proceedings is the only evidence that can be considered in ascertaining the facts with regard to whether a city ordinance was passed or not, and the manner in which it was passed. Fifth, It is also claimed that nothing could afterwards be done by the city or Long and Doubleday, or between the parties, that would make the aforesaid ordinance valid, or that would make the contract entered into under it valid, or that would give to either any force or effect whatever. The plaintiff claims the reverse of all this. It claims that a valid contract such as was made in the present case between the city and Long and Doubleday, requiring, among other things, the city to pay rent for hydrants, could be made by the city, either by means of an ordinance or otherwise; that the ordinance in the present case was regularly passed, approved, and published; that the yeas and nays on its final passage were in fact taken; that this may be shown, and has been shown, by the evidence introduced in this case, and the facts agreed upon outside of the journal; that this evidence and the agreed facts do not contradict the journal, but simply supply an omission; but whether they do contradict the journal or not, or whether the original ordinance and the original contract were valid or not in their inception, is now immaterial, for the reason that the parties have since so acted as to ratify and confirm the contract, and make it valid and binding upon both parties.

The facts with respect to the passage of the original ordinance, which was numbered 70, and the facts claimed by the plaintiff to show a ratification and affirmation of the ordinance and of the contract made under it, and the facts claimed to create an estoppel against the city, are substantially as follows: On March 23, 1887, the council of the city of Columbus were regularly convened in special session, the mayor, E. A. Crewson, presiding. The aforesaid ordinance was presented to them for their consideration. It contained sixteen sections. Each of these sections was considered separately by the council, and a vote taken thereon by yeas and nays, and upon each section there were five yeas and one nay; Councilmen Lea, Malone, Morris, Spencer, and Bowles voting yea, and Councilman Vincent voting nay. It does not appear that there were any other councilmen of the city of Columbus at that time, and probably there were not. As to whether any vote was taken upon the final passage of the ordinance the journal shows as follows: "Section one was read. The mayor then submitted the question, 'Shall said section one of ordinance No. 70 be passed as read?' On call of roll the members voted as follows: Vincent, no; Lea, aye; Malone, aye; Morris, aye; Spencer, aye; Bowles, aye. There being a majority of the council-elect voting for the passage of said section, the same was declared duly passed and adopted. Each subsequent section of said ordinance from one to sixteen, inclusive, was read separately, and voted on separately by calling the yeas and nays, and each vote on each section separately resulted in five votes for the passage of each section of said ordinance; Morris, Malone, Spencer, Lea, and Bowles voting aye, and Vincent voting nay, upon each section. The mayor now declared that each section of said ordinance from one to sixteen, inclusive, had been separately passed by a majority of the council-elect. That therefore he declared said ordinance duly passed. That he thereupon approved and signed said ordinance. The same was duly attested by the city clerk, and the city clerk was ordered to have the same published as provided by law. On motion, the council now adjourned. "Affidavits of Councilmen Vincent and Malone, which affidavits were by consent introduced in evidence, show that no vote was had upon the final passage of the ordinance; while, on the contrary, the deposition of E. M. Tracewell, who was the city clerk and also the city attorney, and the affidavits of Councilmen Lea and Bowles, all of which were by consent introduced in evidence, show that a vote was had upon the final passage of the ordinance, that the yeas and nays were taken, and that Councilmen Lea, Malone, Morris, Spencer, and Bowles voted in favor of the ordinance, while Councilman Vincent voted against it. Also the ordinance appears to be valid upon its face. It was duly approved by the mayor, attested by the clerk, and published. Afterwards, and on April 8, 1887, the council were in regular adjourned session. Mayor Crewson and Councilmen Lea, Bowles, Malone, Spencer, Morris, and Vincent were present, and at such meeting the minutes show the written acceptance of Long and Doubleday "of ordinance Number 70, as passed by the council on the twenty-third day of March, 1887, granting to the said Long and Doubleday a franchise and contract for the erection of water-works in the said city," was presented to the council, and by order of the council was spread upon the record as a part of the minutes; and the acceptance itself shows that it was an acceptance of the provisions of "ordinance No. (70) seventy, passed by the mayor and councilmen of the city of Columbus, Kansas, at a special meeting called for the purpose, and held on the 23d day of March, 1887." Long and Doubleday then commenced openly and publicly to construct the water-works in accordance with the provisions of said ordinance No. 70, and continued to so construct them until they were finally completed, in December, 1887, without objection on the part of any one; and in constructing them they expended a great deal of money and labor. On May 25, 1887, after there had been a change with regard to the person occupying the mayor's office, and a partial change with regard to the members of the council, another ordinance numbered "71" was duly passed, purporting to amend sections 6 and 7 of the original ordinance No. 70, authorizing the use of a stand-pipe, etc., upon the passage of which ordinance all the members of the city council present, to-wit, Malone, Morris, Butler, Crisman, Wilson, and Bowles, voted for the amendatory ordinance. Councilmen Vincent and Best were absent. This ordinance was approved by the new mayor, R. N. Cheshire. On June 18, 1887, at a special meeting of the city council called by the mayor at the request of Councilmen Crisman, Vincent, and Bowles, at which meeting all the members of the council and the mayor were present, the hydrants provided for by the original ordinance No. 70 were located. At the regular meeting of the city council on October 3, 1887, Long and Doubleday were present, and asked for an extension of time for the completion of the water-works, and the city council then passed an ordinance, No. 75, purporting to amend section 16 of the original ordinance No. 70 so as to extend the time for the completion of the water-works to January 1, 1888; on the final passage of which ordinance No. 75, Councilmen Morris, Crisman, Wilson, Malone, Butler, and Bowles voted yea, and Councilman Vincent voted nay. This ordinance was approved by the mayor, Cheshire, and was duly published. At a special meeting called by the mayor upon the request of Councilmen Wilson, Butler, and Morris, and held on January 27, 1888, the following proceedings were had, as shown by the minutes, which read as follows: "Pursuant to the foregoing call the council met at 8 o'clock P. M., Mayor Cheshire presiding. On roll-call the following councilmen responded 'present': Morris, Crisman, Butler, Malone, and Bowles. The mayor then stated that all councilmen-elect had been personally notified of the call for this special meeting, and announced that the council would now proceed with business before them, there being a quorum present. Councilman Malone then requested a report from Councilman Crisman, as chief of the fire department, as to the efficiency of the water-works, and the test made of same. Councilman Crisman then stated in open council that in accordance with section 9 of ordinance 70, granting to R. A. Long and L. L. Doubleday a franchise to construct and operate water-works in the city of Columbus, Kansas, that a test of the water-works aforesaid having been made by the fire department, mayor, and council of said city on or about the 30th day of December, 1887, and a second test made January 6th, 1888, and that from such test said water-works fulfilled the requirements of said ordinance, he thereupon introduced the following resolution: 'Be it resolved by the mayor and council of the city of Columbus, now in council assembled, that the water-works constructed in the city of Columbus by Messrs. R. A. Long and L. L. Doubleday, under and by virtue of ordinance No. 70, entitled "An ordinance granting to R. A. Long and L. L. Doubleday, their heirs and assigns, the right to construct and operate water-works in the city of Columbus, Kansas; also contracting for the supply of water for extinguishing fires, and other purposes," and also under ordinance numbered 71 and 75, being amendments to said ordinance No. 70, be, and are hereby, approved and accepted, and that the rental of the fire hydrants of said water-works constructed as aforesaid shall commence on January 1st, 1888. J. A. CRISMAN, Chief of Columbus Fire Department.' By motion, Councilman Bowles moved that said resolution be adopted, and that it be voted upon by yeas and nays. The roll of councilmen then being called, the vote was as follows: Morris, aye; Crisman, aye; Butler, aye; Malone, aye; and Bowles, aye. The mayor then declared the resolution unanimously adopted. There being no further business, the council adjourned. R. M. CHESHIRE, Mayor. Attest: W. J. MOORE, City Clerk." Aferwards and for the years 1888, 1889, and 1890, taxes were levied by the city to pay for the use of the hydrants as provided for in the original ordinance No. 70, and the rent for such hydrants was in fact paid for the years 1888, 1889, and the first half of the year 1890. The plaintiff, the water-works company, and its predecessors, Long and Doubleday, complied with all the terms and provisions of all the ordinances and fulfilled their part of the contract in every respect, furnishing to the city the hydrants and the water contracted for; while the city, on its part, complied with all the terms and provisions of the ordinances, and fulfilled its part of the contract, by receiving the hydrants and the water, and levying taxes to pay for the same, and paying for the same up to July, 1890, when the city refused to levy any further taxes or to pay any further rent for the hydrants.

The only grounds upon which it is now claimed that ordinance No. 70 is not valid are that no vote was taken upon its final passage; that the yeas and nays upon its final passage were not taken; and that they were not entered upon the journal by the city clerk; and it is claimed that all these things must occur in order to render the ordinance valid. Section 9 of the second-class city act, so far as it is necessary to quote it, reads as follows: "Sec. 9. All ordinances of the city shall be read and considered by sections at a public meeting of the council, and the vote on their final passage shall be taken by yeas and nays, which shall be entered on the journal by the clerk, and no ordinance shall be valid unless a majority of all the members-elect vote in favor thereof. In our opinion the evidence satisfactorily shows that the ordinance was finally passed; that a vote was taken upon its final passage; that the vote was taken by yeas and nays; that Councilmen Morris, Malone, Spencer, Lea, and Bowles voted yea, and that Councilman Vincent voted nay; but that such vote was not entered upon the journal by the city clerk; and the clerk himself testifies with reference to how this failure happened. The clerk at the time was Edward M. Tracewell. He was also at the same time the city attorney, and he advised the council not to pass the ordinance. The meeting was held in the office of the mayor, while the journal was at his own office in another part of the city. Tracewell, at the time the ordinance was passed, had, as the city attorney, the statutes, prescribing how city ordinances should be passed, open before him, and he remembers, not only that a vote on the final passage of the ordinance was taken, and that it was taken by yeas and nays, but also that it was taken in exact accordance with the statutes as he then had them open before him. He took minutes of the meeting at the time on slips of paper, but afterwards, when he came to record the minutes, he thinks he must have lost the slip containing the final vote, and by that means failed to enter it upon the journal. His evidence is contained in a deposition, and counsel for the city appeared at the time the deposition was taken, and cross-examined him. Upon the entire evidence we think the ordinance was legally and properly passed; that the vote on its final passage was taken by yeas and nays, and was in all probability entered upon a slip of paper, but was not properly entered upon the journal; and this is the only irregularity. Will this irregularity render the ordinance invalid? It is not every irregularity that will invalidate an ordinance. Many irregularities may occur in bringing an ordinance into existence, or in recording or preserving the evidence of its existence, and the ordinance still be valid. City of Troy v. Railroad Co., 11 Kan. 519; City of Solomon v. Hughes, 24 Kan. 211. The ordinance in the present case was passed by the city council, approved by the mayor, and attested by the clerk, all on March 23, 1887, and it was duly published on April 8, 1887; and it appears to be valid upon its face. Whether at the time of its publication any of the minutes of the meeting of March 23, 1887, had been entered upon the journal, the evidence does not show. That some of such minutes had not been so entered, the evidence does, however, show. And will this failure, or any failure on the part of the clerk to properly enter the minutes upon the journal, render the ordinance invalid, or place it in abeyance until he does so enter the minutes upon the journal? Usually the failure of the clerk to make proper entries of the proceedings of the body or tribunal for which he acts as clerk will not invalidate such proceedings. Gillett v. Commissioners, 18 Kan. 410; Railroad Co. v. Tontz, 29 Kan. 460. Even a judgment may be valid and binding before any entry thereof is made, or notwithstanding an improper entry thereof. Upon this subject Mr. Black, in his work on Judgments, (volume 1, §§ 106, 110,) uses the following language: "The rendition of a judgment is the judicial act of the court in pronouncing the sentence of the law upon the facts in controversy as ascertained by the pleadings and the verdict. The entry of a judgment is a ministerial act, which consists in spreading upon the record a statement of the final conclusion reached by the court in the matter, thus furnishing external and incontestable evidence of the sentence given, and designed to stand as a perpetual memorial of its action. It is the former, therefore, that is the effective result of the litigation. In the nature of things, a judgment must be rendered before it can be entered. And not only that, but though the judgment be not entered at all, still it is none the less a judgment. The omission to enter it does not destroy it, nor does its vitality remain in abeyance until it is put upon the record. The entry may be supplied, perhaps after the lapse of years, by an order nunc pro tunc. But it must not be supposed that this proceeding is required to give existence and force, by retrospection, to that which before had none. As is said by the supreme court of California: 'The enforcement of a judgment does not depend upon its entry or docketing. These are merely ministerial acts, the first of which is required to be done for putting in motion the right of appeal from the judgment itself, or of limiting the time within which the right may be exercised, or in which the judgment may be enforced; and the other, for the purpose of creating a lien by the judgment upon the real property of the debtor. But neither is necessary for the issuance of an execution upon a judgment which has been duly rendered. Without docketing or entry, execution may be issued on the judgment, and land levied upon and sold, and the deed executed by the sheriff in fulfillment of the sale not only proves the sale, but also estops the defendant from controverting the title acquired by it.' And it follows, a fortiori, that if the entry, though attempted to be made in due form, does not correctly record the sentence of the court, or is defective or ambiguous or otherwise exceptionable, still this will not weaken the force of the judgment as a judgment." Section 108. "The object of this entry is to furnish an enduring memorial and incontestable evidence of the judgment, and to fix its date for purposes of appeal or creating a lien. But, as was stated in the beginning of this chapter, this proceeding is ministerial only, and is not essential to the validity of the judgment itself. It is none the less the judgment of the court because not entered by the clerk; and, except for certain special purposes, it does not remain inchoate or unfinished until so entered. Hence the neglect or failure of the clerk to make a proper entry of record of the judgment, or his defective or inaccurate entry of it, will not, as between the parties, operate to invalidate the judgment. 'The fact that the clerk did not perform his entire duty in making up the record cannot deprive parties of their rights.'" Section 110.

Suppose that in the present case, after the ordinance was passed, approved, published, and accepted, Long and Doubleday had immediately constructed the water-works at a cost of perhaps $75,000, and suppose that the minutes of the passage of the ordinance had not yet been entered by the clerk upon the journal, or had been entered inaccurately, would all that had been done be void, and would Long and Doubleday have no remedy? This certainly cannot be the law. Could the city clerk by his failure to perform his duty defeat the ordinance and everything done under it? Or could all the officers of the city combined, after the ordinance has been acted upon by others, destroy its effect, and repudiate all obligation under it on behalf of the city? For the purposes of this case, but without so deciding, we shall assume that an ordinance in the nature of a law regulating future conduct would be void unless the journal kept by the city clerk should show that the ordinance was regularly passed; but can it be possible than an ordinance in the nature of a contract between the city and an individual person should be void because of any failure on the part of the city clerk to enter upon the journal an accurate statement of the passage of the ordinance? Can contracts between cities and individual persons be destroyed, canceled, or annulled in that manner? Can a city, after inducing persons to expend time, labor, and money under an ordinance regularly passed, approved, attested, published, and accepted, then take advantage of any failures on the part of its own officers to perform their duties and repudiate its own obligations? It must be remembered that in this case the work of constructing the water-works went on at great cost, openly and publicly, from month to month, under the eyes of the officers of the city and its inhabitants, without objection, but really with encouragement, until they were finally completed; and can the contract now be repudiated by the city? We would think not, and, as we have all the interested parties before us,—the city in its corporate capacity, and nearly all its officers, its mayor, its councilmen, the city clerk, the city treasurer, and others,—we think we can make an order that will do full justice in the case. It is our opinion that a peremptory writ of mandamus should be allowed and issued in this case, requiring that the entry now on the city's journal concerning the passage of the ordinance No. 70 should be so corrected by an entry nunc pro tunc as to make it show that the ordinance was regularly passed as required by law, and in accordance with the findings and judgment of this court, and that the mayor and council shall levy the tax asked for in the alternative writ, and perform all other duties which may be incumbent upon them under the provisions of the ordinance as a valid ordinance. With reference to the ratification of irregular or void contracts, see the following authorities: Tube-Works Co. v. City of Chamberlain, 5 Dak. 54, 37 N. W. Rep. 761; Moore v. Mayor, 73 N. Y. 239; Peterson v. Mayor, 17 N. Y. 449; State Board v. Railway Co., 47 Ind. 407; Mills v. Gleason, 11 Wis. 470, Knapp v. Grant, 27 Wis. 147; Supervisors v. Schenck, 5 Wall. 772; Howe v. Keeler, 27 Conn. 538; Brown v. City of Atchison, 39 Kan. 37, 17 Pac. Rep. 465; Sullivan v. School-Dist., 39 Kan. 347, 18 Pac. Rep. 287; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. (4th Ed.) § 463; 15 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1102.

Some further questions have been presented to this court by the briefs and oral arguments of counsel, but we do not think that they require any further comment on our part. Whether a city can grant a special or exclusive privilege to any one, for either a long or a short period of time, we do not think it is necessary now to consider, for we do not think that any such question is fairly presented by the facts of the case. A city has the power to grant a privilege to a person or corporation to establish water-works in the city, and has the power to rent hydrants from such person or corporation, (Manley v. City of Atchison,¹ just decided;) but it is not necessary now to consider the question whether such privilege can be made special and exclusive or not, or whether it would be valid or not after the lapse of 5, 10, 15, or 20 years, or after a substantial change had taken place in the affairs of the city, or in its wants or needs or those of its inhabitants. ACTION ON FOREIGN JUDGMENT — LIMITATIONS — CLAIM AGAINST DECEDENT'S ESTATE.

1. Where an action is brought in this state upon a judgment of a court of record of a sister state, which is in full force in that state, the statute of limitations of this state, and not that of the sister state, will control.

2. The statute of limitations of this state is a statute of repose, and must be favorably considered. Taylor v. Miles, 5 Kan. 498; Sibert v. Wilder, 16 Kan. 176; Freeman v. Hill, (Kan.) 26 Pac. Rep. 870.

4. Under the provisions of the statutes of this state, a creditor of a decedent, having a claim which he wishes to establish against the estate, may, if the widow or next of kin refuse to take out letters of administration, obtain letters for himself or some other person, after 60 days from the death of decedent; and he cannot, without any good cause or reason therefor, defer making such application until the statute of limitations has run, and then claim that all of the time from the death of the debtor to the appointment of the administrator the statute of limitations is suspended on account of the non-appointment of such administrator. If a creditor would save his claim against the estate of a decedent from the bar of the statute, he must exercise reasonable diligence, if the widow or next of kin refuse to take out letters of administration, to obtain administration for himself or some other person.

Error from district court, Leavenworth county; ROBERT CHOZIER, Judge.

J. H. Gillpatrick and William Green, for plaintiff in error. William A. Porter, for defendant in error.

HORTON, C. J. On the 15th day of December, 1874, C. S. Charlott recovered a judgment against Joseph Pulitzer and Gen. James G. Blunt in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, in the state of Missouri, for $1,023.72. Gen. Blunt died on the 25th of July, 1881. On the 14th day of December, 1885, J. P. Bauserman was appointed administrator of his estate by the probate court of Leavenworth county. On the 14th day of December, 1888, C. S. Charlott brought his action in the district court of Leavenworth county against J. P. Bauserman, as administrator of the estate of Gen. Blunt, deceased, to recover a balance of $535 upon the Missouri judgment. The defendant pleaded the statute of limitations. Judgment was rendered in favor of Charlott for $535 and costs. The defendant below excepted, and brings the case here. It was admitted upon the trial that during all the time from December 15, 1874, and prior thereto, until the death of Gen. Blunt, on July 25, 1881, he had kept and maintained his home and usual place of residence in Leavenworth city, in this state; that during all said time this was continuously open and occupied by his family, consisting of his wife and children, where service of a summons could have been made upon him by leaving at his usual place of residence a copy thereof. It was also admitted upon the trial that Gen. Blunt was personally absent, or "out of the state," so much of the time from the 15th day of December, 1874, to the date of his death, on the 25th of July, 1881, that, if such personal absence from the state prevented the running of the statute of limitations, the judgment was not barred at his death. But it is further admitted that if the periods of time during which Gen. Blunt was personally present in Kansas from the 15th of December, 1874, to his death, on the 25th of July, 1881, were taken with and added to the time from July 25, 1881, to the appointment of Bauserman as the administrator of his estate, on the 14th of December, 1885, less the time allowed by the statute for the widow or next of kin to be granted administration, they aggregated more than five years. It is also admitted that, if the periods of time which Gen. Blunt was present in Kansas after the 15th day of December, 1874, to the 25th of July, 1881, (the date of his death,) were added to the time from his death to the commencement of this action, (the 14th day of December, 1888,) more than six years had elapsed. The administrator was appointed more than eleven years after the rendition of the Missouri judgment; more than four years after the death of Gen. Blunt; and this action in this state to recover upon that judgment was not commenced until three years after the appointment of the administrator. This action was therefore commenced fourteen years after the rendition of the judgment in Missouri, and more than seven years after the death of Gen. Blunt. We are asked, in a very able argument presented by the counsel representing the estate of Gen. Blunt, to re-examine and reconsider the prior decisions of this court, ruling that, if the debtor is out of the state for a temporary purpose, such temporary absence cannot be computed as any part of the period within which the action must be brought. Section 21, Civil Code. And we are further asked to re-examine and reconsider the prior decisions of this court, holding that the death of the debtor suspends the running of the statute, where the statute has commenced to run in the life-time of the debtor. For the purposes of this case, and the full protection of estates of decedents from all liability for stale or dishonest claims, which in the nature of things the heirs of a decedent could not as successfully defend against as if the intestates were living, it is not necessary at this time to reconsider any of the former decisions of this court, and therefore it is not necessary now for us to comment upon the prior decisions referred to. It is true that this court has said that the question of personal absence of the debtor from the state, and not the question of residence or non-residence, affects the running of the statute, under the provisions of section 21 of the Civil Code. Bonifant v. Doniphan, 3 Kan. 26; Lane v. Bank, 6 Kan. 74; Hoggett v. Emerson, 8 Kan. 262; Morrell v. Ingie, 23 Kan. 32; Conlon v. Lanphear, 37 Kan. 431, 15 Pac. Rep. 600; Railway Co. v. Cook, 43 Kan. 83, 22 Pac. Rep. 988.

It is also true that this court has said that the death of the debtor operates to suspend the statute. Toby v. Allen, 3 Kan. 399; Hanson v. Towle, 19 Kan. 273; Nelson v. Herkel, 30 Kan. 456, 2 Pac. Rep. 110; Mills v. Mills, 39 Kan. 455, 18 Pac. Rep. 521. But this court has never said, when the question was properly presented, that the creditor can indefinitely prolong the time of limitation by his own omission or refusal to act, or that the death of the debtor operates to suspend the statute of limitations indefinitely. Within the provisions of our Civil Code concerning limitations, an action can only be brought within this state upon a Missouri judgment within five years after its rendition, if during all that time the judgment debtor is personally present within the state. Civil Code, § 18, subds. 1, 6; Mawhinney v. Doane, 40 Kan. 676, 17 Pac. Rep. 44.

The precise question is, if, under the prior decisions of this court, the death of the debtor operates to suspend the statute of limitations, is the statute indefinitely suspended? Clearly, a creditor ought not to gain any advantage by his own laches or by his own delay. "When a party knows that he has a cause of action, it is his own fault if he does not avail himself of those means which the law provides for prosecuting his claim or instituting such proceedings as the law regards sufficient to preserve it." Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 325, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 530; Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 643. "In a case where some act is to be done, or condition precedent to be performed, by a party to entitle him to his right to sue, and no definite time is fixed at which the act is to be done or condition performed, he must exercise reasonable diligence to do the one or perform the other, or he will be barred by the statute of limitations; otherwise it would be in his power to defeat the law by his own negligence and wrong." Shelburn v. Robinson, 8 Ill. 597, 598. It is the contention of the counsel of the plaintiff below that the statute of limitations was suspended all the time Gen. Blunt was "out of the state," from the 15th of December, 1874, to his death, on the 25th of July, 1881, and also all the time from the 25th of July, 1881, to the 14th of December, 1885, when the administrator was appointed at the instance of the alleged creditors. This latter period of time was over four years. Under the provisions of paragraph 2796, Gen. St. 1889, (Gen. St. 1868, c. 37, § 12,) 30 days are given the widow or next of kin to take out letters of administration. If they do not do so, then, upon the application of any one interested, they may be cited by the probate court or the judge thereof for that purpose, and if they neglect, for 20 days after the service of the citation, to take administration, the court must commit it to one or more of the principal creditors, if any are competent or willing to undertake the trust. Therefore, if the plaintiff below had availed himself of those means which the law provides for prosecuting his claim, he could have taken action as soon as 50 days had elapsed after the death of his alleged debtor. If a creditor would save his debt from the statute bar, he should take out administration himself. Granger v. Granger, 6 Ohio, 35. The statute of limitations in this state is a statute of repose. It was enacted for the benefit of defendants, "to exempt them from being called to account in respect to transactions long gone by." Such statutes are favorably considered. Taylor v. Miles, 5 Kan. 498. In that case it was said: "When the statute has run its full time, the effect is to leave the parties in possession of just what they had before, nothing more and nothing less, and neither party has a right of action against the other. The injured party has lost his remedy." Sibert v. Wilder, 16 Kan. 176; Freeman v. Hill, 45 Kan. —, 25 Pac. Rep. 870. This statute ought to be liberally construed as to claims against the estates of decedents. The dead man cannot speak or answer, and the next of kin may have no knowledge respecting the claim which the creditor has not attempted to sufficiently enforce in the life of the decedent. It was decided in Railroad Co. v. Burlingame Tp., 36 Kan. 625, 14 Pac. Rep. 271, "that a person cannot prevent the operation of the statute of limitations by delay in taking action incumbent upon him." It was also said in that case that "to permit a long and indefinite postponement would tend to defeat the purpose of the statutes of limitations, which are statutes of repose, founded on sound policy, and which should be so construed as to advance the policy they were designed to promote." It is also said in Rork v. Commissioners, 45 Kan. —, 26 Pac. Rep. 393, that, "if the plaintiff could delay the presentation of his certificates to the board of county commissioners for five years, then he could delay for ten, fifteen, or any indefinite period of time. He should have presented his tax certificates to the board of county commissioners 'for refunding' (for the return of his taxes, interest, etc.) before the expiration of three years after their issue. This he failed to do, and he also failed to allege any reason or excuse for his delay."

Following these decisions, the claim of plaintiff below is both stale and barred by the statute. He has slept so long upon his rights, if he had any at the death of Gen. Blunt, that he cannot now recover. If in fact the plaintiff below was disabled for 50 days after the death of Gen. Blunt from instituting any proceedings or action to recover on his judgment of the 15th of December, 1874, the disability ended with the expiration of the 50 days. If he was denied the right to sue that period of time, he could have taken action as soon as that time expired, but he did not then act. He did not act within any reasonable time thereafter. He delayed more than four years after the death of Gen. Blunt before he had an administrator appointed, and then delayed three years after such appointment before commencing this action. The reasonable time within which a creditor, having a claim against a decedent, and wishing to establish the same against his estate, should make application for administration, would be, under the statute, 50 days after the decease of the intestate, or at least within a reasonable time after the expiration of 50 days.

But a creditor cannot, as in this case, postpone the appointment for months and years, and then recover upon his claim. If he can do so for several months or several years, he can do so for any indefinite length of time, and then resort to administration, and establish his claim. This is not in accord with the policy of the statutes nor with our prior decisions. We do not think it accords with right or justice in establishing claims against the estates of decedents. Upon the pleadings and the agreed facts, the judgment of the district court will be reversed, with direction to render judgment against plaintiff below, and in favor of the administrator of the estate of James G. Blunt, deceased. All the justices concurring.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 24, 1891.)

EJECTION OF PASSENGER — DAMAGES — RAILROAD COMPANIES — PRESUMPTION OF OWNERSHIP.

1. It is the duty of a passenger, if he has not the required ticket or token evidencing his right to travel on that train, to pay his fare or quietly leave the train when requested, and resort to his appropriate remedy for the damages he has sustained; and if he attempts to retain his seat without paying his fare, and is expelled by the conductor, using no more force than is necessary, he can recover no damages for the injury incurred by such expulsion.

2. When it is admitted that a railroad company is the owner of a railroad then being operated, a presumption arises that the same is operated by the company owning it, and the burden of proof is upon such company to show to the satisfaction of the jury that such is not the fact. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from circuit court, Wasco county; J. H. Bird, Judge.

W. W. Cotton and Snow & Gilbert, for appellant. A. S. Bennett, for respondent.

LORD, J. This is an action in tort to recover damages for the wrongful acts of the defendant's agents or servants in ejecting the plaintiff from one of its cars. There are mainly two questions presented by this record, but the controlling one arose substantially out of this state of facts: The plaintiff, who is a stock-dealer, had shipped stock from Grant's station to Portland, and had received from the railroad company a shipping contract which entitled him, upon the performance of certain conditions, to a passage from Grant's to Portland and return. Going to the office of the company earlier than its business hours, he was unable to get the ticket stamped, and otherwise perform its conditions so as to ride upon it, without taking a later train, so he went on the train then ready, and seated himself in the car. When the conductor came around for tickets, he presented to him his shipping contract, but it not being stamped, etc., as required, the conductor refused to receive it, and informed him that he must pay his fare, which the plaintiff did, giving the conductor a $20 gold piece, from which the amount of his fare from Portland to Grant's was to be taken. At this time, according to his testimony, he asked the conductor if he would be allowed to stop over at The Dalles, and go to Grant's on the next train, to which the conductor replied that he could do so, and that it would be all right. The conductor, not being able to make the necessary change for the fare, after an absence of about 20 minutes, during which time he was engaged in taking up tickets, etc., returned with the change and a drawback check, which he delivered to the plaintiff. Upon the back of the drawback check was a receipt for the fare, but the check itself had printed upon it in large and legible words, "Good for this day and train only." The plaintiff does not seem to have given any attention to the check, or what was written or printed upon it, but, acting upon the assurance of the conductor that he would be permitted to stop over at The Dalles, he did so, and, after remaining some hours, he took another train for the completion of his journey to Grant's. A short time after he entered upon this train, the conductor called upon him for his ticket, and he presented the drawback check and the receipt, which the conductor refused to accept, stating that it did not entitle him to ride upon that train, when he then explained to him the circumstances under which it was delivered to him by the other conductor, and claimed the right to continue his ride to Grant's station. The conductor told him that he was required by the rules and regulations of the company to collect fare, or a ticket entitling the passenger to ride, and that none of the papers which he had presented entitled him to ride on that train, and that, unless he paid his fare, his duty would require him to expel him from the cars. After waiting until the train had proceeded several miles and arrived at a station, the conductor informed him that, unless he paid his fare, he would be under the necessity of requiring him to leave the train. The plaintiff pointedly refused to leave or to pay his fare, when the conductor, finding he would do neither one nor the other, with the aid of the brakeman undertook to expel him from the car, which the plaintiff resisted with all his force, and manifested a disposition to fight, but when finally expelled from the train he tendered his fare, was received again on the train, and carried to his destination. His own evidence concedes that the duty of expelling was an unpleasant task to the conductor, and performed under the circumstances indicated. From this statement of the facts it is apparent that the plaintiff was without any proper evidence or token of his right to transportation on that train, other than his statements to the second conductor of the oral representations of the other conductor of such permission. Although a disputed fact at the trial, the conductor denying he ever made such representations or gave such permission, we shall assume its verity after verdict. Under such circumstances, was it the duty of the plaintiff, when notified by the conductor that he could not receive the drawback check, to pay his fare under protest, or leave the train without rendering it necessary for the conductor to resort to force to secure his removal. The drift of the defendant's contention is that it is a recognized right of every railroad company to make such reasonable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business as may be necessary, and that it is a reasonable exercise of this right to require that every passenger shall, when called upon by the conductor, present a ticket conforming to its reasonable rules and regulations, or, if he is unable so to do, that he shall pay his fare, but if he cannot produce the required ticket, and refuses to pay his fare, that he may be lawfully ejected from the train. In this view, as between the plaintiff and the conductor of the train from which he was expelled, unless he could produce the required ticket as evidence of his right to ride on that train, or in default thereof to pay his fare, the conductor would not be authorized to allow him to proceed to his destination on such train on his statement of the oral representations of the other conductor, inconsistent with the face of his ticket, and contrary to the rules and regulations of the company. To that conductor the ticket which the plaintiff produced was to be taken as conclusive evidence of his right to travel on that train, and, it failing, the conductor could not receive the statements of the plaintiff contradicting its plain terms, and allow him to retain his seat. Upon this assumption, when the plaintiff was unable to produce the required ticket evidencing his right to travel on that train, and refused to pay his fare or to leave the train when requested, stopped at a proper place, the conductor was authorized lawfully to expel him from the train, and the defendant is not responsible in damages for injuries incurred in resistance to such expulsion. Summed up, then, the considerations in support of the principle invoked are: That as between the conductor and passenger, the right of the latter to ride must be evidenced by some proper token or ticket; that neither the time nor the occasion is suitable for an investigation, whether of explanation, or representations of another conductor in conflict with the terms of the ticket, and contrary to the rules of the company; that it is better, under such circumstances, that the passenger comply if he is unable to produce the required ticket, and pay his fare, or leave the train quietly, and suffer the temporary inconvenience which results, than that the business of the road be interrupted to the annoyance of the traveling public; that such a course would avoid all liability to unseemly struggles, often occurring in the presence of women and children, and prevent breaches of the peace, and at the same time secure the passenger ample redress in the remedies which the law provides. The application of this principle includes a variety of cases, as where the passenger is unable to produce any token or ticket as evidence of his right to ride, or the ticket which he does produce is irregular or defective, due to the fault or negligence of the agents of the company.

In Frederick v. Railroad Co., 37 Mich. 342, the plaintiff held an insufficient ticket, caused by the fault of the company's agent in delivering to him a ticket to the wrong station. He asked and paid for a ticket to a given station, and received what he supposed was such ticket, but which on its face was only good to a point short of his destination. In passing upon this question the court observed: "How, then, is the conductor to ascertain the contract entered into between the passenger and the railroad company, where a ticket is purchased and presented to him? Practically there are but two ways,—one, the evidence offered him by the ticket; the other, the statements of the passenger contradicted by his ticket. Which should govern? In judicial investigations we appreciate the necessity of an obligation of some kind, and the benefit of a cross-examination. At common law, parties interested were not competent witnesses, and even under our statutes the witness is not permitted, in certain cases, to testify as to facts which, if true, were equally within the knowledge of the opposite party, and cannot be procured. Yet here would be an investigation as to the terms of the contract where no such safeguards could be thrown around it, and where the conductor, at his peril, would have to accept of the statement of the interested party. I doubt the practical workings of such a method, except for the purpose of encouraging and developing fraud and falsehood, and I doubt if any system could be devised that would so much tend to the disturbance and annoyance of the traveling public generally. As between conductor and passenger, and the right of the latter to travel, the ticket produced must be conclusive evidence, and he must produce it when called upon, as evidence of his right to the seat he claims. Where a passenger has purchased a ticket, and the conductor does not carry him according to its terms, or if the company, through the mistake of its agent, has given him a wrong ticket, so that he has been compelled to relinquish his seat, or pay his fare a second time in order to retain it, he would have a remedy against the company for a breach of the contract, but he would have to adopt a declaration differing essentially from the one resorted to in this case." In Townsend v. Railroad Co., 56 N. Y. 295, the court say: "The question in this case is whether a wrongful taking of a ticket of a passenger by the conductor of one train exonerates him from compliance with the regulations on another on which he wishes to proceed upon his journey. I am unable to see how the wrongful act of the previous conductor can at all justify the passenger in violating the lawful regulations upon another train. * * * The conductor of the train upon which he was was not bound to take his word that he had had a ticket showing his right to a passage to Rhinebeck, which had been taken up by the conductor on the other train. His statement to that effect was wholly immaterial, and it was the duty of the conductor to the company to enforce the regulation, as was repeatedly held by the trial judge by putting the plaintiff off in case he persistently refused to pay fare. The question is whether, under the facts found by the jury, his resistance in the performance of this duty was lawful on the part of the plaintiff. If so, the singular case is presented where the regulation of the company was lawful, where the conductor owed a duty to the company to execute it, and at the same time the plaintiff had a right to repel force by force, and to use all that was necessary to retain his seat in the car. Thus a desperate struggle might ensue, attended by very serious consequences, when both sides were entirely in the right, so far as either could ascertain. All this is claimed to result from the wrongful act of the conductor of another train in taking a ticket from the plaintiff, for which wrong the plaintiff had a perfect remedy without inviting the commission of an assault and battery by persisting in retaining a seat upon another train, in violation of the lawful regulations by which those in charge were bound to govern themselves." In Yorton v. Railroad Co., 54 Wis. 234, 11 N. W. Rep. 482, the plaintiff had purchased a ticket to the place of his destination, and asked the conductor for a stop-over ticket, and, through the fault or mistake of the conductor, he received a trip or train check instead of a stop-over ticket for which he asked, and which the conductor undertook to give him. The conductor of the second train refused to recognize it for fare, and demanded passage money or a ticket, which being refused, the plaintiff was ejected from the train. The court say: "Then the question arises, was the plaintiff entitled to ride on a subsequent train, not having the proper stop-over check, or was the second conductor justified, under the circumstances, in putting him off the train when he refused to pay his fare? * * * He was perfectly justified in ejecting plaintiff from his train when plaintiff had no proper voucher, produced no sufficient evidence of his right to ride thereon, and refused to pay fare, and he himself was ignorant of the transaction between plaintiff and Conductor Sherman, [the first conductor.] It seems to us there was no other course for him to pursue under the rules of the company, for he was certainly not bound to take the plaintiff's word that he had paid his fare, and that Sherman had made a mistake in not giving him a stop-over check. It is apparent that the right of plaintiff to ride on the train without a proper voucher, and the right of the second conductor to eject him for want of said voucher, were inconsistent rights. Each could not co-exist at the same time. Mistake or fault of the conductor in not giving him, on request, such a check, would not give him a lawful right to ride on the second train, though he might require damages against the company for the wrongful act of the first conductor." In Bradshaw v. Railway Co., 135 Mass. 407, the court say: "It is no hardship upon the passenger to put upon him the duty of seeing to it in the first instance that he receives and presents to the conductor a proper ticket or check, or, if he fails to do this, to leave him to his remedy against the company for a breach of its contract. Otherwise the conductor must investigate and determine the question as best he can while the car is on its passage. The circumstances would not be favorable for a correct decision in a doubtful case." See, also, Mosher v. Railroad Co., 23 Fed. Rep. 328; Hall v. Railroad Co., 15 Fed. Rep. 57; Petrie v. Railroad Co., 42 N. J. Law, 449; Railroad Co. v. Gunts, 38 Kan. 618, 17 Pac. Rep. 54; Railroad Co. v. Griffin, 68 Ill. 499; Shelton v. Railroad Co., 29 Ohio St. 214; Railroad Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea, 128; Railroad Co. v. Connell, 112 Ill. 295; Prince v. Railroad Co., 64 Tex. 146; Hufford v. Railroad Co., 53 Mich. 118, 18 N. W. Rep. 580; Downs v. Railroad Co., 36 Conn. 287; Jerome v. Smith, 48 Vt. 230.

On the other hand, the contention for the plaintiff is that when he paid his fare from Portland to Grant's, upon the representation and promise of the conductor that he could stop over at The Dalles and ride upon the next train, and the conductor delivered to him a drawback check with a receipt for the money indorsed on the back thereof, and that, in pursuance of such agreement and promise, he, having stopped over, and then gone upon the second train without notice of any contrary regulation until after he commenced his journey, was not compelled to pay fare or leave the train, but that he was lawfully there, and might stand upon his rights, and, if wrongfully ejected by the conductor, he could recover damages for any injuries which he suffered in consequence of such ejection. Upon the facts there is no doubt but that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the rules or regulations of the company, and, as the agreement for a ticket with the right to stop over was made before the ticket was delivered, the plaintiff cannot be deemed to have assented to any part of the contract expressed by the ticket different from that made with the conductor. As he wished to make his journey over the road on different trains to accommodate his business engagements, the conductor must be supposed to have known what the rules and regulations required in respect to the matter upon which he desired information. He was the person appointed by the company to impart the information asked, and to sell and deliver to him a ticket as evidence of his right to ride. This agent assures him that he can pay his fare to Grant's station, and that he can stop over at the place designated, and the plaintiff, relying upon his representations, pays his fare. His ticket is not delivered to him immediately for want of change, and not until some 20 minutes after his contract or understanding of permission to stop over was made, showing that he parted with his money in reliance upon the contract made or permission given, and not upon a ticket which he had not seen, expressing different terms, or terms inconsistent with his right to pursue his journey upon the next train. When the ticket was delivered to him, supposing that it is sufficient, or that the conductor whose duty it was to furnish it would deliver one conforming to their engagement, and relying upon his contract as made, he puts the ticket into his pocket without observing its terms, or that it expressly limits his right to ride on that day and train only, and stops over at The Dalles; and when he commences his journey on the next train, and his ticket is demanded of him, he is informed by the conductor that it is insufficient, when he explains to him the contract he made with the other conductor, and that he is on that train in pursuance of his assurances and contract, but the second conductor refuses to receive his explanations, and demands of him the payment of his fare, or the alternative of leaving the train, both of which he refuses to do, claiming that he is lawfully upon the train, and resisting with force his expulsion from it. Under such circumstances, the plaintiff contends that the contract established the relation of passenger and carrier, and, if the ticket furnished by its agent was insufficient to notify the second conductor of his right to travel on that train, that it was the negligence of the other conductor, and that he, being without fault, had a lawful right to travel on that train, and might resist his ejection, and, if ejected, he could recover damages for any injury which he suffered by reason of such ejection.

In support of this contention numerous authorities are cited, to which it is not possible to make full reference. Perhaps as strong a case as any is Head v. Railroad Co., 79 Ga. 358, 7 S. E. Rep. 217, which, like the case at bar, was an action in tort for the expulsion of the plaintiff from the cars of the defendant. By some negligence of the company's agent the plaintiff's ticket was not stamped or signed as required by the conditions of the ticket and the regulations of the company. He presented the ticket for his fare, but it was refused by the conductor, and for his expulsion the court held that he could recover "his proper damages of all sort," and among other things saying: "The company could no more be heard to say that an error was committed by its agent, resulting in a breach of duty on its part to the plaintiff, than it can be heard to say that an error was committed by its own action. * * * He [the plaintiff] had a right to assume that all these agents understood their duties and would perform them; and, if he performed his, he could stand upon his contract, and upon his relation as a passenger which the contract generated." In Railroad Co. v. Rice, 64 Md. 63, 21 Atl. Rep. 97, the plaintiff had gone upon one of the trains of the company with a proper ticket, and the conductor canceled it by mistake, but afterwards attempted to correct it, and assured the plaintiff that it would be all right, and that he could ride upon it on the next train in that condition. It was not properly corrected, and when the plaintiff went upon the returning train and presented the ticket the conductor refused to take it, and the plaintiff, refusing to pay his fare or leave the train, was expelled therefrom. The court says: "The return coupon was canceled through the mistake of the conductor. This error he attempted to correct, and informed plaintiff that it was all right. The latter had a right to rely on this assurance, and that the ticket for which he had paid his money entitled him to return to Wilmington. If the servants of the appellant, under such circumstances, laid their hands forcibly upon the plaintiff, and compelled him to leave the car, there was not merely a breach of contract on the part of the company, but an unlawful interference with the person of the plaintiff and an indignity to his feelings for which an action will lie, and for which he is entitled to be compensated in damages. Such is the well-settled law of this state and of this country. The mistake by which plaintiff's ticket was canceled was the mistake of the appellant's servants, and it must abide the consequences." In Hufford v. Railroad Co., 64 Mich. 631, 31 N. W. Rep. 544, the plaintiff purchased in good faith of the ticket agent a genuine ticket, issued by the company, which the agent had a right to sell, covering the distance between two stations, and was informed by the agent that it "was good, and entitled him to ride between said stations." The court say: "When the plaintiff told the conductor on the train that he had paid his fare, and stated the amount he paid to the agent who gave him the ticket he presented, and told him it was good, it was the duty of the conductor to accept the statement of the plaintiff until he found out that it was not true, no matter what the ticket contained in words, figures, or other marks." See, also, Railroad Co. v. McDonough, 53 Ind. 239; Burnham v. Railroad Co., 68 Me. 298; Hamilton v. Railroad Co., 53 N. Y. 25; Palmer v. Railroad Co., 3 S. C. 580; Railroad Co. v. Fix, 88 Ind. 381; English v. Canal Co., 66 N. Y. 454; Tarbell v. Railroad Co., 24 Hun, 52.

In the case at bar, the plaintiff never had any valid ticket or evidence of his right to ride or travel on the train from which he was expelled. His ticket was not even apparently valid on its face when offered, and is not within the principle or reason of some of the cases cited in support of his contention. That he had paid his fare to his destination, and that the conductor represented that he might stop over at The Dalles, may be admitted, but the ticket he received furnished no evidence of that permission, was inconsistent with it, and when offered it was after the right, according to its terms, had expired to travel upon it. It is not the case of a passenger with a valid ticket entitling him to a ride on the train from which he was ejected, or with such a ticket as he was required to have, and by some mistake or fault of the conductor wrongly canceled, as in Railroad Co. v. Rice, 64 Md. 63, 21 Atl. Rep. 97; or surrendered to the proper agent of the company on demand, and receiving back what the agent believed to be the proper evidence of a right to ride on it, and when presented to the other conductor refused, despite the explanations offered, as in Railroad Co. v. Fix, 88 Ind. 384; or as in Railroad Co. v. McDonough, 53 Ind. 239; or where the ticket appears upon its face to be good, although not a regular ticket, but which the ticket agent assures the passenger is sufficient, after his attention has been recalled to it, and is afterwards refused by the conductor on the train, as in Hufford v. Railroad Co., 53 Mich. 118, 18 N. W. Rep. 590, 64 Mich. 631, 31 N. W.

Rep. 544; or where the plaintiff has paid his fare, and the same conductor to whom he paid it asks for it again, and insists, unless it is paid, that he would put the plaintiff off, and the latter, refusing to pay, is forcibly ejected from the train, as in English v. Canal Co., 66 N. Y. 454; or where the plaintiff was not guilty of any negligence in accepting his ticket, but carefully examined it, saw everything there was on it, and received explanation of the meaning of the punched holes, and assurances that the ticket in the condition in which it was would be good for the trip, and the conductor refused to receive it, as in Murdock v. Railroad Co., 137 Mass. 298, and in some other cases cited which might be distinguished. It is true that the principle announced in some of the authorities cited is in conflict with the contention for the defendant, and, while I own some reluctance, it seems to me that the weight of authority and reason, as applicable to the facts as disclosed by this record, is that it is the duty of the passenger to pay his fare or quietly to leave the train when requested, if he has not the proper ticket, and resort to his appropriate remedy for the damages he has sustained; but that if he attempts to retain his seat without paying his fare, and is expelled by the conductor, he can recover no damages for the injuries incurred by the expulsion. This result will tend to avoid unseemly struggles occurring on railroad trains, usually filled with passengers, including women and children, and thereby prevent breaches of the peace, and at the same time will fully protect the passenger by making the company responsible for all damages resulting from any breach of its contract. It is not disputed that the business of ejecting the plaintiff was extremely disagreeable to the conductor, and that he made considerable effort to induce the plaintiff to pay his fare or peaceably to leave the train, but that the plaintiff not only insisted on being put off by force, but resisted with all the force he could command. It is hardly necessary to say that no reference is intended to apply to agents of the company who act wantonly or willfully or maliciously, or that a trespasser upon a train can be treated in a willful, wanton, or malicious manner.

2. The motion for nonsuit was based principally upon the idea that the evidence for the defendant was the only evidence in the case, and that this so conclusively showed that the defendant had leased its road and ceased to operate it at the time of the injury that the court erred in submitting the case to the jury. The stipulation and pleadings admit that the defendant was the owner of the road. When it is admitted that a railroad company is the owner of a railroad then being operated, a presumption arises that the same is operated by the company owning it, and the burden of proof is upon such company to show to the satisfaction of the jury that such is not the fact. Thus in Ferguson v. Railroad Co., 63 Wis. 145, 23 N. W. Rep. 123, the court say: "When a railroad company owns a railroad in operation, bearing the name of the company, the presumption is that such company operates it, and in order to relieve itself from liabilities for injuries to persons upon such road, caused by the negligence of the employees operating the same, the burden of proof is upon it to show that it does not operate the same." Now, is it disputed but that at common law the general rule was, where unimpeached witnesses testify distinctly and positively to a fact and are uncontradicted their testimony was to be credited, and to have the effect of overcoming a mere presumption? "But this rule," as RAPALLO, J., observed, "is subject to many qualifications." Elwood v. Telegraph Co., 45 N. Y. 553. Our Code provides that the jury "are not bound to find in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a less number, or against a presumption, or other evidence satisfying their minds." Hill's Code, § 845, subd. 2. This seems to indicate, as was contended, that where a presumption arises in any case the jury are not bound to believe the declarations of a witness, or a number of them, contradicting the presumption, but that the credibility of such witness or witnesses then becomes a question for them, and, if they are not satisfied of the truthfulness of the evidence of such witnesses, they are not bound to believe it, but may find in accordance with the presumption. The execution of the lease is admitted, but the transfer and possession under it are disputed, and the establishment of that fact is dependent upon the testimony of Mr. Cookingham, and certain telegrams and circulars offered through him for that purpose. The lease itself purports to have been executed in April, 1887, and before the statute for its authorization had gone into effect; but, waiving this, the truth of the transfer and possession, which ought to have been clear and decisive, was vague and unsatisfactory. From the nature of the circumstances, and as Mr. Cookingham stood related to them, it was not possible for him to testify positively or distinctly as to this transaction. Nor do the telegram and circular relied upon to establish the transfer and possession, aided by the testimony of Mr. Cookingham, render the proof in that regard much more definite and satisfactory. Owing to their vagueness as applied to the subject-matter in dispute, without his testimony they are of little value as evidence. Much that he testifies to is but hearsay, much mere conclusions, and as to what may be regarded as relevant, it was for the jury to pass upon the weight to be given to his statements in respect thereto, and his credibility. Taking, then, into consideration the presumption of operation of the road from its ownership, and in addition thereto that the stock construct upon which plaintiff shipped his cattle and rode to Portland was drawn in the name of the defendant company, and signed by the agent, as the agent of the defendant, for that company; that the lettering upon its cars and tickets, draw-back checks, and other writings, etc., were likewise in the name of the defendant company; together with the testimony of the plaintiff, keeping in mind that the jury are the judges of the credibility of the witnesses,—it would be difficult on this record to assign any just or legal reason to withdraw the case from the jury. Leaving out of view the question of credibility, before a withdrawal of a case from a jury can be justified, the facts of the case should not only be undisputed, but the conclusion to be drawn from them indisputable. But, whether the facts be disputed or undisputed, if different minds may honestly draw different conclusions from them the case should be properly left to the jury. Railroad Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99; Railroad Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657. Upon this point we think there was no error in refusing the motion for nonsuit. But in view of the considerations already expressed the judgment is reversed, and the plaintiff remitted to his remedy in accordance therewith.

BALDOCK v. ATWOOD et al.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 24, 1891.)

AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS — CONTRACTS — PERFORMANCE — STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

1. While the power to permit an amendment of the pleadings is vested in the court below it ought to be liberally exercised in furtherance of justice. The insertion of new additional allegations in support of the claim made by the plaintiff, when the subject-matter of the suit continues the same, is in the discretion of the trial court.

2. When B. paid to F. a valuable consideration for the right to dig a ditch across F.'s land so as to flow water into Baldock slough, and B. takes possession thereof and cuts the ditch, and causes the water to flow through the same for many years, the contract is executed, and a purchaser from F. takes with notice of B.'s interest, which is such that a court of equity will protect it.

3. When B. had the right to flow water into Baldock slough, and defendants, wishing to fill up a part of said slough, agreed with B. that if he would abandon said slough and the right to flow water therein the defendants would give him the right of way on a section line through their land, and the defendants then caused said line to be surveyed and the line of said ditch marked with stakes, and the plaintiff accepted said offer, and dug his ditch on the line marked by the defendants for that purpose, and abandoned the slough, which is filled up by the defendants, and the plaintiff continuously uses said new ditch for many years, the same amounts to an exchange of the plaintiff's rights to flow water through the slough for the right of way on the section line, and said contract, though existing in parol, being executed by both parties, is taken out of the operation of the statute of frauds.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from circuit court, Baker county; M. D. CLIFFORD, Judge.

The cause was finally tried upon the second amended complaint, which was filed by leave of the court after the evidence was all taken, apparently to conform the pleadings to the facts proved. Said amended complaint alleges "That at all times stated in complaint plaintiff was a citizen of the United States and over twenty-one years of age; that ever since 1864 plaintiff has been the owner of certain real estate in complaint described, and resided upon the same continually, and used the same for stock-raising and agriculture. That at the time of plaintiff's settlement, in 1864, said lands were unoccupied public lands of the United States. That at and ever since said time there flowed through the lands of the plaintiff a natural water-course, now known and called 'Baldock Slough,' which slough headed on a natural water-course in said county called 'Powder River,' at a point about four and one-half (4½) miles from said lands of the plaintiff, at or near the corporate limits of Baker City, and on lands now owned by the defendants, which lands are particularly described; and that the lands now owned by the defendants at the time of plaintiff's settlement were unoccupied public lands, and that said slough runs through the lands of the defendants. That plaintiff's lands are dry and arid in character, and that the use of water artificially caused to flow over the same is required and necessary to make said lands produce an agricultural crop. That in the year 1865 the plaintiff appropriated of the water of said Baldock slough, and used, in irrigating crops on his said lands by means of ditches from said slough, three hundred inches of water; and at all proper times and seasons thereafter, continuously in each year and up to the present time, the plaintiff has actually used three hundred inches of water for the purpose of irrigating said land, watering stock, and for domestic uses, and that he has remained in the uninterrupted and peaceable use of the same up to the time of committing of the acts of the defendants hereinafter set forth. That plaintiff's use and enjoyment of said water continued for twenty years next preceding the commencement of this suit. That in furtherance of said appropriation of said water, and to obtain a larger supply thereof, plaintiff gave notice in writing by filing the same in the office of the county clerk of said Baker county, which notice is set out in hæc verba in the amended complaint, and claims three thousand (3,000) inches instead of three hundred (300.) That when said notice was filed the lands now owned by defendants were owned by one C. B. Fisher. That in 1869 the channel of said slough where it heads on Powder river became so obstructed from the effect of dams in the river, and the acts of Chinese gardeners being on defendants' land above described, that the natural capacity thereof was lessened, and the amount of water thereof appropriated and used by the plaintiff was prevented from flowing therein; and that for the purpose of allowing said water so appropriated by the plaintiff to flow down said slough to his lands the plaintiff, by and with the consent of said C. B. Fisher, constructed a dam in the bed of said Powder river at a point near the original town-site of Baker City, and on the lands of said C. B. Fisher, from said dam cut and dug a ditch to said Baldock slough; and that by means of said ditch and dam, and the water flowing through and flowing naturally in said slough, the said three hundred inches of water appropriated by said plaintiff did flow down and through said slough to the lands of the plaintiff, and were then used by him for agricultural and domestic purposes. That said appropriation by plaintiff of three hundred inches of water, and the increase thereof made at the time of filing and recording said notice, were each and all made and done prior to any other appropriation of the water of Powder river or Baldock slough by any other person. That plaintiff is the owner of said three thousand inches of water so diverted and appropriated, and entitled to have said water flow down said slough to and upon plaintiff's lands, and to use the same thereon for irrigation, watering stock, and for domestic purposes. That said dam and ditch were owned and used by the plaintiff, peaceably, uninterruptedly, without hindrance from Fisher, and continuously from the year 1870 to the year 1881, for the purpose of conducting the water so appropriated and belonging to the plaintiff from said Powder river to Baldock slough. That in the year 1881 the defendants herein, being the grantees of said C. B. Fisher, and the owners of the land whereon said ditch and dam were situated, so changed the channels of said Powder river and obstructed said ditch and slough that neither said ditch nor slough would carry the waters so appropriated by the plaintiff, nor any amount of water whatsoever, from said Powder river. That plaintiff, by and with the consent of the defendants, and at their suggestion and request, and in consideration of their reclaiming a large portion of their said lands for streets, agricultural and building purposes, then occupied and covered by said Baldock slough and ditch, changed the location of his said ditch, and the point of diversion of his water from Powder river, by placing a dam in the bed of said river at a point about three hundred feet above the dam last mentioned, and by cutting a ditch along the south line of defendant's said lands connecting said river and Baldock slough; and defendants did thereupon fill up and reclaim the lands formerly covered by said ditch and slough channel upon their said lands. That since about the year 1881, at a point near where said three hundred inches of water are diverted from Powder river into said Baldock slough, the defendants have interfered with and interrupted the flow of said water in said ditch of the plaintiff, and diverted the same from flowing into said ditch and slough, and did attempt thereby wrongfully, unlawfully, and inequitably to appropriate said waters flowing in said ditch and slough to their own use and benefit, and have repeatedly, since said time, prevented him from using and enjoying his said water and water-right, to his damage in the sum of two thousand dollars. That on the 17th day of November, 1885, defendants again wrongfully entered upon said ditches and water-right of the plaintiff, and interfered with the waters of plaintiff flowing in said ditch and slough, and with a large force of employees, and with picks and shovels, began to divert said waters from said ditch and slough, and began to construct in said ditch and slough a dam of a permanent character, with the intent thereby, and by means of said dam, to prevent any of the waters so appropriated by the plaintiff from flowing in and down said ditch or slough to his said lands, and wholly and forever deprive the plaintiff of the use of the same. That defendants threaten to continue the construction of said dam in said ditch of the plaintiff, and to entirely close up the same, and to wholly and forever prevent said water, or any part thereof, from flowing through said ditch or dam, and defendants will, unless restrained, erect in said ditch at said point a permanent dam, and by said means divert all of said water from plaintiff's said lands that ought of right to flow through the same, all of which acts of the defendants are wrongful and will cause the plaintiff irreparable damage. That plaintiff's lands are of the value of three thousand dollars per annum for agricultural, stock and fruit-growing purposes, and said value is solely dependent on the use of said three thousand inches of water, and that without the use of said water said lands would be rendered entirely valueless, and plaintiff has no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law. That plaintiff has sustained other damages by the said wrongful acts of defendants in the sum of one thousand dollars, and that they are wholly insolvent. That defendants, after an ineffectual motion to strike out this complaint, answered the same, denying most of the material allegations, and thus allege that at the time of the alleged location of the water-rights by the plaintiff one C. B. Fisher owned the land where said alleged water-right was located, and had on the 13th day of September, 1886, located a water-right on Powder river for irrigating his said land. That said Fisher consented that plaintiff might have the use of a portion of his said land to cut a ditch and run water from said Powder river through the lands of said Fisher in irrigating his said land, and that said permission or license was not in writing, and was without consideration. That afterwards the defendants and their grantors succeeded to all the rights of said Fisher to said land and water-rights, and in the dam used for the same, by good and sufficient deeds. That at the time of the purchase of said lands and water-rights the defendants knew nothing of the license to the plaintiff by said Fisher. That afterwards, in the year 1881, the plaintiff expressly recognized the rights of the defendants in said land, and agreed that the terms by which the plaintiff should use the lands of the defendants to conduct water to such slough should be reduced to writing, and signed by the parties, but plaintiff refused to sign said agreement when so made. That defendants have never agreed or consented that plaintiff should use their land for the purpose demanded by plaintiff, except as the same might not interfere with defendants' rights in the premises. That defendants have been and are now willing that plaintiff have a ditch on their land to convey water to said slough as a favor, so long as the same does not interfere with the defendants' proper and reasonable use of their water-right, and all defendants' acts in relation to the use of said water have been reasonable and proper, and in such manner as to accommodate the plaintiff as much as possible. That the ditch used by the plaintiff is now so constructed as to entirely deprive the defendants of the use of their said water-right. That on or about July, 1881, defendants notified the plaintiff not to use the ditch cut by him on defendants' land, and not to interfere with any property of defendants, and that plaintiff's use of said land under said Fisher was a mere license, and that the same was thereby revoked, and long prior to any of the acts complained of by the plaintiff." The reply denied the new matter in the answer, and then, as a further defense thereto, alleges that plaintiff paid Fisher a valuable consideration for the right to erect said dam on his land, and to cut and maintain said ditch; and by way of charging the defendants with notice the reply further alleges that said ditch, and the water flowing therein, were in plaintiff's possession and use at the time of the defendants' purchase, and were visible objects, and also that plaintiff paid Fisher a valuable consideration for the right to use his land for such purpose. The court rendered a decree in favor of the plaintiff in accordance with his claim upon the trial, from which the defendants have appealed.

T. C. Hyde and Glenn O. Holman, for appellants. A. J. Lawrence, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The first question made by the appellant is the action of the court below in allowing the plaintiff to file the second amended complaint. It is contended that it is such a departure from the cause of suit set up in the original and first amended complaint that it is in no sense an amendment, but an original complaint, setting up an entirely new and distinct cause of suit. It is true it contains a number of allegations not found in either the original complaint or the first amended complaint, but this of itself is not sufficient to deprive the plaintiff of the right to amend upon leave of the court. The amendment does not change the controversy. The suit still is in relation to the water alleged to have been appropriated by the plaintiff, and his right to have it flow to and upon his land. This is the real gist of the suit. Any amendments of the pleadings which would further support this right might be permitted by the court in furtherance of justice; so, also, any amendment of the answer which tended to defeat the cause of suit set up by the plaintiff might be allowed the defendant on the like terms. The power of amendment under the Code ought to be liberally exercised in furtherance of justice. While the parties are in court they ought to be permitted to shape their pleadings in such a form as they may be advised so as to present the real questions at issue, that the same may be determined with as little delay and expense as possible. Nothing is ever gained by turning a party out of court, or compelling him to take a nonsuit, on account of some defect in his pleading, not discovered, perhaps, until during the progress of the case, when an amendment could supply the defect, and the action or suit be brought to an early determination. The defendants did not request to take any additional evidence after the amendment, and it is not claimed that they were in any way prejudiced on the merits by allowing it. We therefore think the court below properly allowed the amendment. Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 Mich. 91, 28 N. W. Rep. 843; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 716; Rogers v. Hodgson, (Kan.) 28 Pac. Rep. 732; Railroad Co. v. Small, Id. 695.

2. It appears from the pleadings and evidence that the plaintiff, as early as 1862, appropriated and commenced to use the water from Baldock slough for irrigating his land, and for domestic and stock purposes. This slough at that time was connected with Powder river, and from one-third to one-half of the water of said river flowed into it, although called a "slough," it was to all intents and purposes a natural water-course. Some time thereafter the channel of Powder river changed, either from natural or artificial causes, so that the head of the slough ceased to connect with said stream. Baldock then put a dam in said river, and cut a ditch again connecting the river and slough. This ditch was cut through lands in the possession of one C. B. Fisher and owned by him, or else the legal title was in the state. However that may be, Fisher subsequently succeeded to the state's title, and the defendants have acquired whatever interest Fisher had in the premises. The evidence tends to prove that Baldock paid Fisher a valuable consideration for the right to cut said ditch, one or two witnesses testified expressly to the fact, though the circumstances and the price paid do not appear with as much distinctness as they ought. Baldock slough was a crooked, sluggish stream, and in some of its windings a lot of Chinese gardeners established themselves and engaged in gardening. For the purpose of raising the water high enough so as to use it on their gardens, they threw willow brush and other debris into the stream, which obstructed the flow of the water, and interfered with the plaintiff's supply. The evidence further tends to prove that the defendants were desirous of filling up said slough, and causing a ditch to be dug on the section line between sections 16 and 21, and for that purpose employed C. M. Foster, a surveyor, to ascertain the exact location of said line, and to mark the place where said ditch was to be dug, by the setting of stakes. Soon after the stakes were set, Baldock with his men entered upon said premises with the consent of the defendants, as clearly appears by a preponderance of the evidence, and cut a ditch on the line marked out and designated by the defendants for that purpose. This new channel was cut about the year 1880, and was thereafter continuously used by the plaintiff as the means of his water supply for his farm. It followed the section line through the defendants' premises to where it connected with Baldock slough, through which the water was conveyed to the lower part of Baldock slough, and from there to plaintiff's farm.

three miles or more from the head of the ditch. The concise detail of all the facts would be too voluminous for this opinion. It suffices to say we think the evidence tends very strongly to prove that the plaintiff acquired the right of Fisher, for a valuable consideration paid, to cut through his land so as to continue his supply of water, if, indeed, he had not already acquired the right by prescription. Whether he had such right, it is perhaps unnecessary for us to decide at this time. Several reasons would incline us to hold that the change of the channel of Powder river, under the circumstances detailed in the evidence, did not deprive the plaintiff of the right to have the accustomed amount of water flow from the river into the slough, but, if it did, the plaintiff acquired the right of Fisher by contract and payment of a valuable consideration therefor. This, followed by the digging of the ditch, and the work and labor connected therewith, and the continuous possession thereof for a length of time sufficient to bar an entry, would give perfect legal title; but, if any circumstances were lacking to make the legal title perfect by adverse possession, the facts create a right so strong that no court of equity could fail to recognize and protect the interest thus acquired. When the defendants acquired Fisher's land they took it with notice of the fact that Baldock's ditch was there and used by him to convey water into Baldock slough. They therefore took it with notice of Baldock's rights, and subject to his interest, whatever it might be. This statement of the case is conclusive against the defendants' contention, but, if it were necessary to look further, the defense must fail for another reason. When the change was made and the present ditch cut on the line, and that part of Baldock slough abandoned by the plaintiff, it was at the special request of the defendants, and for their interest and advantage. They wished to fill up that part of Baldock slough so as to make that part of their land available as an addition to Baker City. They employed the surveyor to survey and mark the line where the new ditch was to be cut, and under their direction the stakes were set on the exact line where the ditch now is. They were bound to know from the facts and circumstances in evidence that this ditch was for the permanent use of the water, and not a mere temporary arrangement, revocable at their pleasure. In legal effect the plaintiff exchanged his right to use the slough and the part of the ditch at its head for the right of way where the ditch now is. The defendants accepted the slough, and filled it, and received whatever advantage would accrue to their land by platting that part of it, so that a street now passes over what was once a part of Baldock slough. The plaintiff also took possession of the new line agreed upon for his ditch, and has used it ever since. The plaintiff thus acquired the right of way where his ditch now is, for a valuable consideration received by the defendants, and he cannot be disturbed in the possession and use of the same, and by the transaction the defendants extinguished the plaintiff's right in that part of the slough. The defendants contend that the contract with Fisher, as well as with the defendants, was within the statute of frauds, and therefore the plaintiff acquired no rights that can be recognized, because the alleged contract was not in writing. It may be conceded that each of such transactions was within the statute of frauds, and void for that reason, if nothing else had been done; but they were followed by performance on both sides, and were thus taken out of the operation of the statute, according to well-settled equitable principles, and to allow the statute to be invoked, under the circumstances, would be to allow the grossest kind of a fraud to be consummated under the protection of the statute. The principle upon which the court below proceeded is affirmed, and a decree will be entered here in accordance with this opinion.

MANDAMUS—TO COUNTY COURT—CLERK—LIQUOR LICENSE—REFUSAL TO ISSUE—PAYMENT OF TAX—BOND—APPROVAL.

1. In an application for an alternative writ of mandamus to the county court for refusing to grant a liquor license, it is improper to make the county clerk a party, unless it be made to appear that he has refused to perform some act which the law specially enjoins upon him by virtue of his office. Until such refusal he is not in default.

2. The writ of mandamus should contain every material fact alleged in the petition upon which the plaintiff relies, making or creating the duty upon the defendant to act, or do the particular thing which the plaintiff demands.

3. A party wishing to apply for a license to sell intoxicating liquors in quantities less than one gallon must pay into the county treasury the amount of the tax before the license can issue, and, if the county court refuse the license, the party cannot sue the county to recover back the sum paid. Trainor v. County of Multnomah, 2 Or. 214, followed.

4. A party applying for a license to sell intoxicating liquors in quantities less than one gallon, having complied with all the prerequisites of the statute, is entitled to the license, and, if the same be refused, has his remedy by a resort to the revisory court.

5. When a bond in legal form and proper conditions is presented to the county court, with the requisite number of sureties, who severally justify in the proper form and amount, it is the duty of such court to approve the bond. In such case they have some discretion, and no more than other persons called on to approve bonds. They have no right to disregard the affidavits without legal proof, and they have no right to reject the sureties without at once giving the reason, and a speedy opportunity to meet the facts or to supply other sureties.

6. It is a general principle of statutory construction that when the word "may" is used in conferring power upon an officer, court, or tribunal, and the public or a third person has an interest in the exercise of the power, then the exercise of the power becomes imperative. Kohn v. Hinshaw, 17 Or. 308, 20 Pac. Rep. 639, and Smith v. King, 14 Or. 10, 12 Pac. Rep. 8, approved and followed.

7. If the county court improperly refuse to grant a liquor license to a person who complies with the prerequisites of the statute on that subject, mandamus will lie to compel such license to issue. The writ of review provided by section 588, Hill's Code, is not an adequate remedy in such case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from: circuit court, Sherman county; R. P. BOISE, Judge.

This is an application for a writ of mandamus to the county court of Sherman county, requiring said court to grant the plaintiff a license to sell spirituous liquors in quantities less than one gallon in Grant's precinct, in said county. The facts alleged in the petition for the writ bring the plaintiff within the law authorizing a license for such purpose. It appears from the record before us that the county court of said county, notwithstanding such compliance, refused the license. It is true, the record of the county court recites that the bond tendered was insufficient; but no specific objection was made to it, either as to form or substance. The other facts necessary to a proper understanding of the case will be noted in the opinion.

J. L. Story and C. H. Carey, for appellant. Huntington & Wilson, for respondents.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The first question which requires our attention is the proper construction of the statute in relation to the granting of license to sell spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors in this state in less quantities than one gallon. The statute in force when the application for license was made by the plaintiff was the act of February 18, 1889. It is entitled "An act to regulate the sale of spirituous, malt, and vinous liquors, and to prevent the sale thereof without first having obtained a license therefor, and to repeal all laws and parts of laws in conflict therewith." The first section provides that no person shall be permitted to sell spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors in this state in less quantities than one gallon without having first obtained a license from the county court of the proper county for that purpose. The second provides that every person obtaining a license to sell spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors shall pay into the treasury of the county granting such license the sum of $400 per annum, and in the same proportion for a less period; or $200 per annum, and in the same proportion for a less period, to sell malt liquors only. Section 3, among other things, provides that every person applying for such license, before securing the same, shall execute to such county a bond in the penal sum of $1,000, with two or more sufficient sureties, to be approved by such court, with certain specified conditions; and it is further provided that, in case of the violation of the foregoing conditions by any person giving such bond, he shall be liable to pay a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200 for such violation, and the bond so given as aforesaid by such person shall also be liable to be prosecuted as therein after prescribed. Section 4 provides that any person wishing to sell spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors, before obtaining a license as hereinafter provided, shall, at his own trouble and expense, obtain the signatures of an actual majority of the whole number of legal voters in the precinct in which he wishes to carry on said business to a petition to said county court praying that said license be granted; and no applicant shall be deemed to have a majority of the legal voters of such precinct whose petition does not contain the names of a number of legal voters of such precinct equal to a majority of all the votes cast in such precinct at the last preceding general election, and greater than the whole number of names of legal voters of such precinct which may be signed to any remonstrance against the granting of such license. Section 5 provides that when the signatures of an actual majority of the whole number of legal votes have been obtained, to be determined as provided in the preceding section, the applicant shall at his own expense cause the said petition to be published in such county for four consecutive weeks in any daily or weekly newspaper published in such county, together with notice of the day on which he will apply to the county court for such license, and, if no paper be published in the county, the petition and notice shall be plainly written and posted in three of the most public places of such precinct, and proof of such posting shall be made by the affidavit of one of the petitioners and two resident householders of the precinct. Section 6 provides that on the applicant producing to the county court the receipt of the county treasurer for the payment of the sum hereinbefore prescribed, and proof of compliance of all the preceding provisions of this act, the county court may give him a license of the character and for the term his receipt may call for. Sess. Acts 1889, p. 9. These are the material provisions of the statute in relation to obtaining a license to sell intoxicating liquors.

The petition and the exhibits attached to it, and accompanying the same, showed that the petitioner had complied with every provision of the statute, except that on the day which his notice specified he would present his petition to the county court, and at the time the same was presented, he offered a bond which was made payable to the county court, and not to the county, as the law required. Upon the plaintiff's application, the further hearing of said petition was continued until the next succeeding day, at which time the petitioner presented a bond which obviated the irregularity in the first, and, after hearing the application, the same was refused, and the following entry made by the county court: "Now, on this day came on to be heard the petition of M. McKenzie and others in the above matter, continued from October 8th; and it appearing that the bond of Neil McLeod, with August Buchler and C. M. Fouts as sureties, which was on file with the clerk of this court, and which was taken from the files on October 8th by J. L. Story, counsel for the petitioner, in the presence of this court, at his own request, and with the promise to return the same to this court in good order, was on this day returned to this court; and the said bond showed that it had been altered or tampered with while removed from the file in this particular, to-wit: A scroll has been drawn around the word 'Seal' opposite the signature of C. M. Fonta; no scroll appearing there when the said paper was taken from the file. Now, therefore, the court condemns the act of said J. L. Story in altering, or allowing the same to be altered, the papers of this court while in his possession. And it further appearing that a new bond is this day filed by the said Neil McLeod, with M. McKenzie, George Gray, and Walter M. Fraune as sureties, and the same is not approved; and it further appearing that the applicant has failed to comply with all the provisions of the statute in such matters made and provided, and that no sufficient bond as required by law has been executed to this court; and it further appearing to this court that said petition and application should not be granted: It is therefore considered, ordered, and adjudged that said petition and application be, and the same is hereby, disallowed and refused." Upon the refusal by said court to grant the license as prayed for, the plaintiff applied for an alternative writ of mandamus to the county court, by which they were required to grant the license, or show cause for its refusal. This writ was directed to the defendants, composing the county court of said county, and to the clerk as well. The reason for sending the writ to the clerk does not appear to us, because it does not seem that he refused to perform any duty which the law specially enjoined. If he should refuse to issue the license after the same is authorized by the court, then, no doubt, compliance with such order might be compelled by means of this writ; but until such refusal or failure it is not perceived that he is in default. As to the county clerk, therefore, no sufficient cause is shown for the issuance of the writ to him. The writ itself does not set out the facts out of which it is claimed by the plaintiff the duty arises to issue the license. The defendants demurred to the writ for that reason, but, the demurrer having been overruled, they filed their answer.

Hill's Code (section 598) provides: "On the return-day of the alternative writ, or such further day as the court or judge thereof may allow, the defendant on whom the writ shall have been served may show cause by demurrer or answer to the writ in the same manner as a complaint in an action." There can be no question as to the proper practice in such case. The writ itself ought to contain every material fact alleged in the petition upon which the plaintiff relies, making it the duty of the defendant to act, or do the particular thing which the plaintiff demands. Mos. Mand. p. 206, and Hill's Code, § 598, supra, requires in effect the same thing. But the defendants refusing to stand on their demurrer, and having answered over, the case was argued in the court below, as well as in this court, upon the theory that the petition and exhibits might be looked into for the purpose of finally determining the rights of the parties to this proceeding. It is true, respondent's counsel made the point upon the argument here that the writ itself ought to contain all the requisite facts upon which the plaintiff relies; and in that we think he is correct. But the case was argued by both sides on the further assumption that the petition and exhibit might be looked into, and we have concluded that after answering over, and proceeding to a trial on the merits, and treating the petition and exhibits as being before the court, it is best to look into the entire record that was before the court below, and endeavor to ascertain what duty the law devolved upon the defendants under the facts disclosed by the record. These defendants answered the writ and showed cause as follows: "Come now the defendants, O. M. Scott, John A. Moore, and Robert J. Ginn, above named, and returning the writ heretofore served in the above-entitled case upon them, and show why they have not issued the license to Neil McLeod mentioned in said writ, as follows: First. That the receipt produced to the county court of Sherman county at the time said Neil McLeod presented a petition for the liquor license referred to in the writ aforesaid from the treasurer of said Sherman county does not name a definite period for which a license should issue, and does not name any person to whom a license should issue, and does not set forth for what purpose the money named therein was paid to the county treasurer. Second. That said Neil McLeod never executed to said Sherman county a bond in the penal sum of $1,000.00, with two or more sufficient sureties, as by law required; and that said O. M. Scott, county judge, and said John A. Moore and Robert J. Ginn, county commissioners, sitting as the county court in and for said county, never approved any bond presented or filed by said Neil McLeod, but found and adjudged that the so-called bond filed by him on October 8, 1890, was not properly executed, was insufficient in substance and form, and that it was not executed by two or more sufficient sureties; and further found and adjudged that the bond presented by Neil McLeod on the 9th day of October, 1890, was not executed by two or more sufficient sureties, but found that the sureties were insufficient, and therefore refused to approve such bond. Third. That at the time of the presentation to such county court of the petition praying that such license be issued for the sale of liquors in Grant precinct, Sherman county, Or., no evidence was presented or offered tending to show, and it was not proved or shown, that said petition was signed by an actual majority of the whole number, or any, of the legal voters in said precinct, nor tending to show that said petition was signed by a number of legal voters of such precinct equal to a majority of all the votes cast in said precinct at the last preceding election, nor that said petition was signed by any legal voters, nor that the names appearing upon said petition were the names of legal voters of said precinct, nor that the names appearing upon said petition were placed there by such persons. Fourth. That at the time of the presentation of said petition said Neil McLeod failed to produce to said county court any proof of compliance with all the provisions of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the act of the legislative assembly of the state of Oregon entitled 'An act to regulate the sale of spirituous, malt, and vinous liquors, and to prevent the sale thereof without first having obtained a license therefor, and to repeal all laws and parts of laws in conflict therewith,' filed in the office of the secretary of state February, 1889. All of which more fully appears by the records and files of said court in said matter, which are hereby referred to and made a part of this return. Fifth. That at the time said county court refused to grant said petition, and to issue said liquor license, it found and determined that said petitioner had failed to comply with all the provisions of said law; and that it was for the best interests of said Sherman county that said petition should not be granted or said license issued; and that in the exercise of a wise and sound discretion, under the laws of this state, it could grant or refuse, in the exercise of such discretion, such petition."

It will be observed that this answer does not controvert a single fact upon which the writ issued. It refers to the proceedings had in the county court, and which are appended to the return. A reference to those papers shows that the first bond tendered was informal, because made payable to the county court, instead of Sherman county; but the bond tendered on the 9th of October, 1890, to which day the proceeding had been adjourned, is in proper form, conditioned according to law, and is for the sum of $1,000, and is signed by three sureties. To this bond is also attached the affidavits of the sureties to the effect that each is a resident and householder within the state of Oregon, worth the sum of $1,000 over and above all just debts and liabilities, and exclusive of property exempt from execution. Upon the argument, counsel failed to point out any defect in this bond, only that it was filed on the 9th day of October, to which day the hearing had been adjourned. The treasurer's receipt, which is also attached, is as follows: "Wasco, Oregon, October 6th, 1890. Received from Neil McLeod two hundred & no 100 dollars for liquor license to sell in Grant precinct, Sherman county, Oregon. $200.00. LEVY ARMSWORTHY, County Treasurer, Sherman Co., Or." Many objections are taken to this receipt by the return, but they are of a nature that do not require special notice. They are so utterly frivolous that a discussion of them would seem wholly out of place. All of the other objections suggested by the return seem equally unfounded, when examined in the light of the record attached to the return. The practical question, therefore, is whether or not, conceding the plaintiff has fully complied with all the requirements of law in relation to the granting of license to sell intoxicating liquors, the county court may capriciously, or at its mere will and pleasure, or because in the opinion of that court the policy of the law is wrong, refuse to execute it, by granting a license when its terms have been complied with. But before proceeding to consider that question it may be proper to remark that the legislature evidently had two main objects in view in the enactment of this law. The first was to place such restraint about the seller of intoxicating liquors as would tend to compel a compliance with certain restrictive requirements, the effect of which would be to mitigate some of the evils resulting from the traffic, and for this purpose a bond with certain stringent provisions was required. In the second place, a tax was levied upon the business to be paid into the county treasury by the seller, over and above the general tax on his property, for reasons founded in public policy, and in the past experience of the state on that subject. In addition to this, the tax must be paid into the county treasury before the license can issue; and, if the county court refuse to issue the same, the party cannot recover back the money paid. Trainor v. County of Multnomah, 2 Or. 214. Hill's Code, § 593, defines when and to whom the writ of mandamus may issue, as follows: "It may be issued to any inferior court, corporation, board, officer, or person, to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. But though the writ may require such court, corporation, board, officer, or person to exercise its or his judgment, or proceed to the discharge of any of his or its functions, it shall not control judicial discretion. The writ shall not be issued in any case where there is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law."

Having said this much by way of preliminary statement, we proceed to consider the real question at issue: Did the plaintiff, by a compliance with the law, acquire a right to have a license issue which the court was not at liberty to refuse? This identical question was raised in this court for the first and only time, so far as we have been able to discover, in Trainor v. County of Multnomah, supra, and seems to have been answered in the affirmative. That was an action to recover back money paid over to the county treasurer for license to sell spirituous liquors, which license was refused by the county court. In disposing of that question, this court said: "Having complied with all these requirements, the applicant is entitled to a license, and, if the same be refused, has his remedy by a resort in a proper manner to the appellate or revisory court." And the court continued: "The payment of the amount required by statute is a condition precedent to his applying for a license, and is not a deposit in the hands of the county treasurer, which can be withdrawn at the pleasure of the applicant, but goes at once into the county treasury, and becomes at once a part of the general county funds, and cannot be distinguished from the other funds of the county, and can never become the foundation for an action for money had and received, either against the county or its treasurer." If this last extract states the law correctly, and the respondents' contention were sustained, an application for a license would become a very hazardous proceeding. The plaintiff could not be heard in court until he paid over his money to the treasurer; though, as he had complied with all the law on the subject, the court might, without any reason therefor appearing upon the record, refuse to grant a license, which action of the court is final, because discretionary, and the money paid could not be recovered back, because its payment was a condition precedent to his being heard, and the same had been covered into the treasury. A position which leads necessarily to such consequences ought to be sustained by very conclusive authorities before we are asked to give it our sanction. But the decided weight of authority seems to be the other way. Potter v. Village of Homer, 59 Mich. 8, 26 N. W. Rep. 208, which was a proceeding to compel by mandamus the town council to approve a liquor dealer's bond, is identical in principle with this case. In that case the court said: "The statute itself has fixed the conditions, and nothing is left to the council except to pass upon the sufficiency of the sureties. But this is only so far within their discretion that they may inquire, where there is substantial reason to do so, beyond the mere general averments of the affidavits of justification. In this they have some discretion, and no more than is possessed by other persons called on to approve sureties. They have no right to disregard the affidavits without legal proof, and they have no right to reject sureties without at once giving the reason, and giving a speedy opportunity to meet the facts or supply others." Amperse v. City of Kalamazoo, 59 Mich. 78, 26 N. W. Rep. 222, involves the same question, and was decided the same way. In that case the court said: "The duty of this board, under the statutes, is a simple one. They are concerned, under the law, solely with these questions: Is the bond proper in form, and the penalty therein named sufficient? Are the bondsmen residents of the municipality, and financially responsible for their undertaking? If they are not satisfied as to any of these matters, it is their duty to reject the bond, and to acquaint the petitioner with the grounds upon which they reject it, so the bond may be remedied, if possible. If these questions are found in the affirmative, it is the duty of the board to approve it. They have no power to arbitrarily reject a bond without having any valid reason, or without assigning any good reason therefor. And we think the reason for rejecting the bond should appear of record." State v. County Court, 41 Mo. 221, is another case when a county court capriciously refused to approve a bond without giving any reason for their action; and the court said: "In approving of the sheriff's bond as collector of the state and county revenue, the justices of the county court act in a ministerial, and not in a judicial, capacity. Their discretion is confined to an examination of the sufficiency of the securities offered, and that must be a sound legal discretion, and not capricious, arbitrary, or oppressive." And Ex parte Candee, 48 Ala. 386, is to the same effect. In re Prospect Brewing Co., (Pa.) 17 Atl. Rep. 1090, is another case when an evasive return was made to an alternative writ of mandamus issued in a liquor license case, and the writ was made peremptory. And in 11 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 662, 663, the principle is stated that, when a discretion is vested in a designated body or person to grant license to sell intoxicating liquors, such person or body cannot be controlled in the honest exercise of such discretion; but if such authorities, in the arbitrary exercise of their discretion, refuse, without sufficient reason, to issue a license to a suitable person, they will be compelled by mandamus to issue the license.

But it was argued on behalf of the respondents that in section 6 of the act of 1889, supra, the word "may" was used instead of the word "shall," which was contained in the former statute, and that by this change of terms the legislature intended to and did vest in the several county courts of the state a discretion to issue a license to sell spirituous liquors according to their own sense of propriety. There is much force in this argument, but we do not think it is decisive. The law still provides for the payment of the money before a license can issue, which is not recoverable back if the same be refused, as we have seen. In addition to this, the petitioner must incur a considerable expense in securing the majority of all the legal voters of the precinct, and in the publication of his petition and notice as prescribed by the act. These requirements of the statute are of substance, and evince an intention on the part of the legislature that upon compliance with the terms of the act a license would issue. Is the change in the phraseology above noticed sufficient of itself to overthrow the plain intent deducible from the other portions of the act? We think not. Besides this, it was held by this court in Kohn v. Hinshaw, 17 Or. 308, 20 Pac. Rep. 629, that it is a general principle of statutory construction that when the word "may" is used in conferring power upon any officer, court, or tribunal, and the public or a third person has an interest in the exercise of the power, then the exercise of the power becomes imperative; and Endl. Interp. St. § 310; Sedg. St. & Const. Law, 377; Potter, Dwar. St. p. 220, note 27,—are referred to as authority. Smith v. King, 14 Or. 10, 12 Pac. Rep. 8, is to the same effect, and the undoubted weight of authority is the same way. People v. Commissioners, 6 Lawy. Rep. Ann. 161, and note, 22 N. E. Rep. 596. In the light of these authorities, the defendant's contention on this point cannot be sustained.

But it was contended by respondents that mandamus could not issue to control judicial discretion. This is true, not only as a general principle of law, but by the letter of the statute; but we have shown that the county court, in the sense contended for upon the argument, was not vested with any such discretion. The length of this opinion precludes a full examination of the cases to distinguish when mandamus is, and when it is not, the proper remedy in case of a refusal of license; but in the view we have taken of the statute in this state we hold it to be a proper remedy here. And this construction is sustained by these authorities, in addition to those already referred to: Bean v. County Court, 33 Mo. App. 635; Seymour v. Ely, 37 Conn. 103; State v. Ruark, 34 Mo. App. 325; McLaughlin v. Commissioners, 7 S. C. 375; People v. Jeffers, 4 Thomp. & C. 398; Brown v. Atkin, 1 Utah, 277; Goss v. Common Council, 44 Mich. 319, 6 N. W. Rep. 684; State v. Judge, 35 La. Ann. 248; State v. Adams, 12 Mo. App. 436; Braconier v. Packard, 136 Mass. 50; State v. Judge, 36 La. Ann. 578; Pettigrew v. Washington County, 43 Ark. 33; People v. Osborn, 38 Mich. 313. These cases do not all relate to the granting of liquor license, but they illustrate the various applications of the principle under consideration. It was suggested upon the argument by respondents' counsel that the writ of review provided by section 583, Hill's Code, furnished an adequate remedy to the plaintiff in this case, and for that mandamus would not lie. But the remedy provided by that section is wholly inadequate to meet all contingencies that might arise in the course of such litigation. Suppose the right claimed or denied depended upon the existence of certain facts which could only be ascertained or known by the introduction of evidence, the writ of review would not be an appropriate proceeding in which to try the question of fact. Let it be supposed that the county should enter in the journal that they refused the license for the reason the petitioner did not have a majority of the voters of the precinct, or that his sureties were wholly insolvent, and that the license was refused for one or both of these reasons. Would it be contended that this question could be re-examined on writ of review? Other objections might be suggested just as insuperable, but these will suffice. Respondents' counsel also argued that the treasurer's receipt was insufficient, but we do not think any particular formality is required in such case. The amount of money paid into the treasury will determine the time for which the license may properly issue. That is expressly regulated by the statute. We have examined this case in all of its legal aspects, and though reluctant to interfere with the county court, which no doubt acted and was governed solely by a sense of public duty, still we have reached the conclusion that it disregarded the rights which the statute secured to the petitioner. We have no discretion, therefore, but to reverse the judgment of the circuit court, and to remand the cause to that court, with directions to award a peremptory writ of mandamus to the defendants to issue a license to the petitioner, to take effect and be in force from and after its issuance.

STATE V. KINGSLEY.

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 15, 1891.)
INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION — CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—APPEALABLE ORDER.

1. Article 5, Organic Act Mont., provided that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury." Const. Mont. art. 3, § 8, provides that "all criminal actions in the district court * * * shall be prosecuted by information after examination and commitment." Held, that one charged with grand larceny, committed before the state constitution took effect, could not be convicted under an information.

2. Comp. St. Mont. div. 3, § 394, provides that "an appeal to the supreme court may be taken by the defendant, as a matter of right, from any judgment against him, and, upon appeal, any decision of the court or intermediate order made in the progress of the case may be reviewed." Held, an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment is appealable.

Appeal from district court, Deer Lodge county; D. M. DUFFEE, Judge.

Edward Scharukow, for appellant.
Henri J. Haskell, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BLAKE, C. J. The appellant was convicted of the crime of grand larceny in March, 1891, and judgment was entered upon the verdict. The information was filed March 23, 1891, by the county attorney of the county of Deer Lodge, and alleged that the offense was committed September 20, 1889. A plea of not guilty was entered, and it is conceded that the verdict was supported by the evidence. The appellant moved to arrest the judgment upon the following grounds: That the county attorney had no authority to file the information; that the court had no jurisdiction to try the alleged offense by information; that there was no authority for the proceeding by information; and that the information did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The motion was overruled, and the appeal has been taken from the action of the court below and the judgment.

A motion in arrest of judgment in a criminal action "may be granted by the court for either of the following causes: First, that the grand jury who found the indictment had no legal authority to inquire into the offense charged, by reason of it not being within the jurisdiction of the court; second, that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense." Comp. St. div. 3, § 357. The act "relating to informations in criminal cases," approved March 2, 1891, provides that all laws which are applicable to prosecutions upon indictments, and "to motions, demurrers, amendments, pleadings, trials, penalties, and punishments, the passing or the execution of any sentence, appeals, and to all other proceedings in cases of indictment, whether in the court of original or appellate jurisdiction, shall, in the same manner, and to the same extent and effect, as near as may be, apply to prosecutions by information, and to all proceedings therein, the same as if prosecuted by indictment." Section 4. The criminal practice act contains this section: "A defendant who has failed to demur to an indictment for any of the defects appearing upon its face shall be deemed to have waived the same, except the defects that the court has no jurisdiction over the same, or that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute an offense. These he may take advantage of on the trial, or on motion to arrest judgment." Section 217. It is further provided: "An appeal to the supreme court may be taken by the defendant, as a matter of right, from any judgment against him, and, upon appeal, any decision of the court or intermediate order made in the progress of the case may be reviewed." Section 394. The contention on behalf of the state is that the order of the court in denying the motion in arrest of the judgment is not appealable, and this position is fortified by the following authorities: People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157; People v. Majors, 65 Cal. 100, 3 Pac. Rep. 401; People v. Henry, 77 Cal. 445, 19 Pac. Rep. 830; People v. Cline, 83 Cal. 374, 23 Pac. Rep. 391. There is a material distinction respecting this matter between the statutes of this state and those of California, which destroys the weight of these cases. In Territory v. Duncan, 5 Mont. 478, 6 Pac. Rep. 353, Chief Justice WADE, in the opinion, said: "There was a motion in arrest of judgment, * * * which was overruled, and judgment entered upon the verdict, from which the defendant appeals to this court. This appeal properly brings the indictment here for review. The indictment must at all times support the judgment, and the question whether it does or not may be raised in this court for the first time." This is a sound interpretation of the statutes supra, and the decision of the court upon the motion is properly before us.

Was the prosecution of the appellant by information in accordance with the law? The offense of which he has been convicted was committed during the existence of the territory of Montana. This political organization was created by an act of congress, approved May 26, 1864, and continued until November 8, 1889, when the government of the state was established. The sixth section of its organic act provided "that the legislative power of the territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation, consistent with the constitution of the United States and provisions of this act." The fifth article of the amendments to that constitution declares that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury." Subject to this limitation the legislative assembly possessed and exercised the power to define offenses against persons and property, and regulate the trial of the parties who might be accused of unlawful conduct; but any statute which required prosecutions for a capital or infamous crime to be made by informations instead of indictments would have been without validity. If, therefore, the appellant had been arrested at the time of the commission of this offense, he could have been held to answer only "on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury." This was then "the supreme law of the land." How was this right of the appellant affected by the government of the state of Montana? The following provisions of the constitution should be weighed: "All criminal actions in the district court * * * shall be prosecuted by information, after examination and commitment by a magistrate, or after leave granted by the court, or shall be prosecuted by indictment without such examination or commitment, or without such leave of the court." Article 3, § 8. "No ex post facto law * * * shall be passed by the legislative assembly." Article 3, § 11. "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." Article 3, § 27. "The style of all process shall be, 'The State of Montana' and all prosecutions shall be conducted in the name and by the authority of the same." Article 8, § 27. "All laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the territory of Montana, and in force at the time the state shall be admitted into the Union, and not inconsistent with this constitution or the constitution or laws of the United States of America, shall be and remain in full force as the laws of the state until altered or repealed, or until they expire by their own limitation." Article 20, Schedule, § 1. "No crime or criminal offense committed against the laws of the territory of Montana shall abate, or be in any wise affected, by reason of the change from a territorial to a state form of government; but the same shall be deemed and taken to be an offense against the laws of the state, and the appropriate courts of the state shall have jurisdiction over and to hear and determine the same." Article 20, § 3. "Parties who, at the time of the admission of the state into the Union, may be confined under lawful commitments, or otherwise lawfully held for alleged violations of any of the criminal laws of the territory of Montana, shall continue to be so confined or held until discharged therefrom by the proper courts of the state." Article 20, § 8. "All writs, processes, prosecutions, actions, causes of actions, defenses, claims, and rights of individuals, associations, and bodies corporate, existing at the time the state shall be admitted into the Union, shall continue and be respectively executed, proceeded with, determined, enforced, and protected under the laws of the state." Article 20, § 9.

The constitution of the United States and the territory of Montana guaranteed by appropriate legislation the right of the appellant to be prosecuted for the offense charged against him through the intervention of a grand jury. The state, in pursuance of the power which has been conferred by constitution, has authorized by the act supra the proceeding by information in a case of this degree. The effect of similar statutes was determined by the supreme court of California in People v. Campbell, 59 Cal. 243. It appeared that Campbell committed the crime of manslaughter in August, 1879, when the constitution declared that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime * * * unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury." The new constitution, which was in force January 1, 1880, provided for the prosecution of offenses by information, and the legislature passed, April 9, 1880, an act to carry the same into effect. Chief Justice MORRISON, in the opinion, said:

"The claim on behalf of the defendant is that neither the constitution nor the act of the legislature is applicable to the present case, because, as has already been remarked, the homicide was committed in the year 1879." The conclusion of the court is stated in the following sentences: "On principle and authority, we think there can be no objection to the new remedy prescribed by the constitution and the act of the legislature. It was as competent to introduce the prosecution by information, and to make the same application to past offenses, as it was to establish a new forum in which prosecutions for past offenses should take place. * * * We are therefore of opinion that the case is one in which an information was a proper mode of prosecution." Three justices, MYRICK, ROSS, and McKEE, concurred, and three justices, SHARPSTEIN, McKINSTRY, and THORNTON, dissented. This is the leading case upon the important question to be decided in this appeal, and the reasons must be critically compared and analyzed. The main proposition of the majority of the court is that prosecutions by indictment or information relate wholly to the mode of procedure, which is a creature of the legislative will. We will repeat some of the citations: Chief Justice PARKER, in Springfield v. Commissioners, 6 Pick. 508, said: "But there is no such thing as a vested right to a particular remedy. The legislature may always alter the form of administering right and justice, and may transfer jurisdiction from one tribunal to another." Mr. Bishop, in his work on Statutory Crimes, says: "There is no vested right in any particular remedy." 2d Ed. § 178. The court in People v. Mortimer, 46 Cal. 118, said: "But laws changing the mere forms of procedure in a criminal action are not within this category;" and it was held that a statute which modified the rule, and prescribed the order in which counsel for the state should address the jury, was applicable to offenses which were perpetrated before the Penal Code took effect. The following language of Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations is also relied on in People v. Campbell, supra: "But, so far as mere modes of procedure are concerned, a party has no more right, in a criminal action, to insist that his case shall be disposed of under the law in force when the act to be investigated is charged to have taken place. Remedies must always be under the control of the legislature, and it would create endless confusion in legal proceedings if every case was to be conducted only in accordance with the rules of practice, and heard only by the courts, in existence when its facts arose. The legislature may abolish courts and create new ones, and it may prescribe altogether different modes of procedure, in its discretion, though it cannot lawfully, we think, in so doing, dispense with any of those substantial protections with which the existing law surrounds the person accused of crime. Statutes giving the government additional challenges, and others which authorized the amendment of indictments, have been sustained and applied to past transactions, as doubtless would be any similar statute calculated merely to improve the remedy, and its operation working no injustice to the defendant, and depriving him of no substantial right." 5th Ed. p. 329, and notes. None of the precedents which support the text of this learned author is on all fours with the case at bar, and we do not question them, or the doctrine which is applied to the facts in People v. Mortimer, supra. But the minority of the court in People v. Campbell, supra, maintain, in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice SHARPSTEIN, that the provisions of the old constitution respecting the presentment or indictment of a grand jury "was one of the substantial protections with which that instrument surrounded persons accused of crime;" and that "a presentment or indictment of a grand jury was not a mere mode of procedure which the legislature might in its discretion dispense with or change." No cases are cited to uphold these views. It should be observed that after the publication of the report of the case of People v. Campbell, supra, the supreme court of the United States investigated kindred subjects, and we enjoy the great benefits of its profound and exhaustive discussions in Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202; Hurtado v. People, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 292; In re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384; and Cook v. U. S., 138 U. S. 157, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 268.

The investigation by a grand jury of a capital or infamous crime of which a party may be accused has been regarded for centuries as a bulwark of personal liberty. It has been treated in many volumes as a vital substance, and the history of the foregoing amendment to the federal constitution deserves thoughtful consideration. Judge STORY, in his work on the Constitution, says: "But, although this provision of a trial by jury in criminal cases is thus constitutionally preserved to all citizens, the jealousies and alarms of the opponents of the constitution were not quieted. They insisted that a bill of rights was indispensable upon other subjects, and that upon this further auxiliary rights ought to have been secured. These objections found their way into the state conventions, and were urged with great zeal against the constitution. They did not, however, prevent the adoption of that instrument; but they produced such a strong effect upon the public mind that congress, immediately after their first meeting, proposed certain amendments, embracing all the suggestions which appeared of most force; and the amendments were ratified by the several states, and are now become a part of the constitution." Section 1782. The eminent author reviews the duties of this body, and concludes: "From this summary statement it is obvious that the grand jury perform most important public functions, and are a great security to the citizens against vindictive prosecutions, either by the government or by political partisans, or by private enemies." Section 1785. Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, says: "The right of personal security is guarded by provisions which have been transcribed into the constitutions in this country from Magna Charta, and other fundamental acts of the British parliament, and it is enforced by additional and more precise injunctions." Volume 2, (12th Ed.) p. 12. This amendment to the constitution is then mentioned. Chief Justice SHAW, in Com. v. Holley, 3 Gray, 459, said: "The object of the declaration of rights was to secure substantial privileges and benefits to parties criminally charged, not to require particular forms, except where they are necessary to the purposes of justice and fair dealing towards persons accused, so as to insure a full and fair trial. * * * The great principle asserted by the declaration of rights is that no man shall be put to answer a criminal charge until the criminating evidence has been laid before a grand jury, and they have found probable cause, at least, to believe the facts true on which the criminality depends." These assertions concerning the ancient institution of the grand jury, which can be reiterated, shows that this has always been one of the grand rights of freemen. The formalities which are its incidents can be amended, but the fundamental privilege which has been declared and protected by the articles of the constitution cannot be disregarded. In State v. Ah Jim, 9 Mont. 167, 23 Pac. Rep. 76, this court held that a party could be prosecuted by indictment which had been found by a grand jury of seven persons, although the alleged offense was committed within the territory of Montana when the statute fixed a higher number, and that the substantial rights of the accused were not thereby impaired, and that this ruling, in its consequences, was not ex post facto. The majority of the court in People v. Campbell, supra, have in our judgment misapplied the authorities on which they relied, and arrived at an erroneous decision in holding the matter one of mere procedure. The prosecution of the appellant by an information gives to the act, supra, of the state a retrospective operation. The supreme court of Washington in McCarty v. State, (Wash.) 25 Pac. Rep. 299, decided under the same conditions in accordance with our deductions, but, upon a petition for a rehearing, the following opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice DUNBAR: "The petition for rehearing in this case is not allowed; but the court desires to say that in view of the public importance of some of the questions raised, and in view of the fact that the case was submitted without oral argument on the part of the state, in cases hereafter it will not be bound by the opinion rendered in this case on the constitutional questions involved." We confess that the reasons given in the opinion for its action are peculiar and unsatisfactory, but the case cannot be cited as an authority. It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the judgment be reversed, and that the cause be remanded, with directions to grant the motion in arrest of the judgment.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—PLEADING AND PROOF—VARIANCE.

Where the petition in forcible entry and detainer asks the recovery of possession of a whole quarter section, and the proof shows plaintiff to be in possession of a very small part of it, the variance is immaterial.

Error to district court, Logan county.
H. S. Cunningham, for plaintiff in error.
Williamson & Seeley, for defendant in error.

CLARK, J. This action was brought in the county court of Logan county by Maggie Seeley to recover from the defendant the possession of the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 28, in township 15 N., of range 3 W., in said county. On the trial in the county court it appeared that the plaintiff had a certificate of entry of said land; that the plaintiff had served upon the defendant notice to quit said land; that the plaintiff had erected on the south-west corner of said land a house 10x12 feet, and that she had erected a barbed-wire fence on the north, east, and west lines of said land; that subsequently defendant broke down said fence, and entered upon said land and built a house, and fenced 35 or 40 acres of said land, and cut hay on the other portions, and has occupied the same ever since. On motion of the defendant, the action was dismissed by the county court at the costs of the plaintiff, because of a variance between the evidence and the petition in this, that the plaintiff occupies a part of said 160 acres, (10x12 feet in the extreme south-west corner;) to which judgment the plaintiff excepted. On petition in error in the district court, the judge of the first district reversed the judgment of the county court, and ordered the said cause to be retained for trial, to which the defendant excepted. The case now comes to this court on petition in error.

In this court it is argued that the district court could not reverse the judgment because the bill of exceptions from the county court contains the following statement, to-wit: "The land described in the notice and petition was the south-east quarter of section 28, Tp. 15 north, of range 3 west, and the evidence showed that the plaintiff held a certificate of entry issued by the United States land-office at Guthrie under date of June 7, 1889, and in August, 1889, erected a house on the south-west corner 10x12 feet in size, and that she had erected a barbed-wire fence on the north, east, and west lines of said quarter, and the defendant, on or about October 6, 1889, took down the wire by pulling out the staples, and entered upon said land, built himself a house, fenced in 35 or 40 acres of said quarter, cut hay on other portions, and has occupied the same ever since. The motion of the defendant was sustained upon the ground that the evidence showed that the plaintiff occupied the said 10x12 feet of said quarter in the extreme south-west corner, and the case was dismissed, and judgment rendered against the plaintiff for costs; to the sustaining of which motion and dismissal of said action and rendition of said judgment the plaintiff at the time excepted." After judgment reversing the judgment of the county court, the defendant, John Q. Adamson, moved the court to grant a new trial, and dismiss the action, which motion was overruled. John Q. Adamson thereupon brought this case to this court, and alleged the following errors: First, in finding that the notice aforesaid was sufficient; second, in finding that there was no variance between the proof and the notice; third, and generally because the court had not before it the testimony on which the county court acted. In the court below no objections were made to the sufficiency of the bill of exceptions. The insufficiency of the description of the land in the notice and in the complaint were relied upon; it being conceded in the argument that the plaintiff, Maggie Seeley, was in possession only of a tract 10x12 feet square in one corner of the 160-acre tract, the defendant in the occupancy of the remainder, and these facts appear from the bill of exceptions. It is not necessary that testimony should always be set out in the language of the witness. From the bill of exceptions the facts appear, and no amount of verbiage or quotations could make them more definite. The real question is, was that such a variance as to make the proceedings void? In Dimmett v. Appleton, 20 Neb. 208, 29 N. W. Rep. 474, Dimmett was notified to quit certain lots and to surrender the possession thereof within three days. It was objected to because it did not particularly describe the premises, the possession of which was sought to be recovered. The testimony showed the property, the possession of which was sought to be recovered, was an hotel, "consisting of the upper stories of the buildings on said lots, and the stairway and back-yards appertaining thereto, wells, cisterns, etc., being all of the buildings and premises except one (1) store on the ground floor occupied by tenants of Appleton." The notice did not describe particularly the premises sought to be recovered, but the whole premises. The court held that while accuracy in the description of the property in the notice is required, yet, as in all cases of the kind requiring notice, what is required is substantial and not technical accuracy. The law will not regard mistakes which do not mislead the party notified. Mr. Adamson could not be misled by the description in this case. Had he surrendered the possession of what he held, then Maggie Seeley would have had all that the notice called for. In the case of Dimmett v. Appleton the tenants of Appleton had possession of about a quarter of the premises, whereas in this case Maggie Seeley had possession of less than 1-58000 part. The law does not take notice of such small matters. The judgment of the district court is affirmed, with costs.

that 15 days shall be allowed for the examination of title, and, if defective, 30 days shall be allowed to perfect the same, he cannot sue to rescind, and recover the amount deposited, upon the ground of failure of title, before the expiration of the 30 days.

2. Where a deposit is made in part payment of real estate, under a contract for a deed, the vendee cannot recover the amount so deposited if he fails to tender the full amount of the contract price, and demand a deed as therein provided.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. E. F. Preston, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This action is brought to recover $800 as a deposit and part payment of O. L. block 986 in the city and county of San Francisco, under a contract in writing, set forth in the complaint, as follows: "I. Strassburger and Co., Real-Estate Agents, 326½ Montgomery St., Safe-Deposit Building, San Francisco, August 22, 1887. Received of S. W. Dennis eight hundred dollars as a deposit and in part payment of the following property, being situate in the city and county of San Francisco and state of California, and more particularly described as follows, to-wit, O. L. block 986, sold to him this day for the sum of eight thousand dollars, U. S. gold coin, fifteen days allowed for examination of title and completion of purchase, i. e., seventy-two hundred dollars is to be paid upon the tender of a good and sufficient deed conveying the title; if title is defective, thirty days are allowed to perfect the same; and if, after the expiration of said term, unless extended by mutual consent, the title shall not have been perfect, the deposit is to be returned on demand. If the sale is not consummated according to the foregoing conditions, the deposit is to be forfeited, and become the property of the undersigned. Time is the essence of this contract. [Signed] I. STRASSBURGER." The complaint further alleges that the title was defective; that no deed was tendered within 30 days after the making of the agreement, or at any time, and the time was not extended by mutual consent; that plaintiff has done and performed all the conditions and terms of the contract on his part to be done and performed, and that defendant has refused to return to plaintiff said deposit of $800, although demanded so to do, upon September 22, 1887. Defendant by his answer admits the making of the contract; denies that the title is defective; admits that he never tendered a deed, and that the time was not extended by mutual consent; denies that plaintiff has done and performed all the conditions and terms of the contract set forth in the said complaint on his part to be done and performed; admits that he refused to deliver the amount paid to plaintiff upon demand. At the trial plaintiff introduced evidence showing the pendency of two certain suits in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, one in ejectment and the other in partition, and which litigation included, among other land, the land described in the complaint.

It was further testified that these suits included within their claims the larger portion of the city of San Francisco, and that the witness had no knowledge as to the merits of the litigation. Defendant gave to plaintiff's attorney an abstract of title to the property September 3d, and, shortly after, said attorney rejected the title; and upon September 22d a demand was made for a return of the money, plaintiff at that time notifying defendant that he was not satisfied with the title. Plaintiff rested his case, whereupon defendant made a motion for a nonsuit, which motion was granted, and plaintiff appeals from that judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The grounds upon which the motion for a nonsuit was based are not stated as clearly and concisely as they should be, but they appear to be mainly that plaintiff failed to show that the title to the land was defective, and, again, if the title was defective, defendant was entitled to thirty days under the contract to remove such defects, and that he neither had notice that such defects existed, nor was given 30 days in which to correct or remove them.

This is an action to rescind a contract, and, in order for plaintiff to recover, it was necessary for him to allege and prove that he had performed all the conditions on his part to be performed, and that defendant was in default as to conditions to be performed by him. Under the contract, 15 days was allowed plaintiff to examine the title, and then, if the title was defective, defendant was allowed 30 days to perfect the same. It is extremely difficult to comprehend how plaintiff was entitled to recover back the $800 until he had first given defendant 30 days' time to perfect the title, (if the title was defective.) In order to recover in this action, plaintiff should have tendered the balance of the purchase price and demanded his deed; and, if such demand was refused, he should then have demanded the return of his money. If he based his right of recovery upon defective title, he should have notified defendant that the title was defective, and if, upon the expiration of 30 days from that time, defendant had not perfected his title, then he should have demanded the return of the amount paid, and a refusal would have formed a basis for a good cause of action. He demanded a return of the money upon September 22d. If he based his right to rescind upon defective title, then his demand for a return of the amount paid was premature, and of no avail; for the time in which defendant was allowed to perfect his title had not yet expired. The allegation and proof that the defendant, within 30 days after the making of the contract, did not tender plaintiff a deed adds no weight to his contention; for it was as much the duty of the plaintiff to tender the money as it was the duty of the defendant to tender the deed. "The obligation of the parties to an agreement for the sale of land are mutual and dependent, where one is to convey and the other at the same time to pay the purchase price; neither can put the other in default except by tendering a performance on his part, unless the other party waives the tender, or by his conduct renders it unnecessary." Englander v. Rogers, 41 Cal. 420. To the same effect are Hill v. Grigsby, 35 Cal. 661; Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 488. Conceding the title to be defective, and conceding the allegation of plaintiff's complaint to be true, by reason of the insufficiency of the defendant's denial thereof, to-wit, "that plaintiff has done and performed all the conditions and terms of the contract on his part to be done and performed," yet, in addition to these facts, he must prove that defendant has made default in the performance of some of the conditions upon his part to be performed; and we look in vain, either in allegation or proof, for anything alleging or showing neglect or refusal to perform such conditions upon his part. The defendant not being in default, the plaintiff has shown no ground upon which to base a rescission of the contract. The contract was a valid, binding contract, and it was only requisite that it should be signed by the party to be charged. Cavanaugh v. Casselman, (Cal.) 28 Pac. Rep. 515. For the foregoing reasons let the judgment and order be affirmed.

SUPPORT OF INSANE PERSON—HUSBAND'S LIABILITY.

Acts Cal. 1885, pp. 82, 83, which provide that, in case an insane person is able to pay actual expenses, a guardian may be appointed, whose duty it shall be to pay such expenses to the board of directors of the insane asylum, and, if indigent insane persons have kindred of degree of husband or wife of ability to pay, they shall support, etc., give such board power to collect a debt due the directors from a husband of an inmate, and they may maintain an action for such recovery as trustees of an express trust.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, San Benito county; JAMES F. BREEN, Judge.

This was an action brought by Watt and others, as directors of the state insane asylum at Stockton, against one Smith, to recover for the charges and expenses of his wife while an inmate of the asylum. Judgment was rendered upon the pleadings in favor of defendant, and plaintiffs appeal.

Wm. Fitzmaurice and Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, for appellants. N. C. Briggs, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This appeal is from the judgment and on the judgment-roll. The action is to recover from defendant, as husband of an inmate, the amount fixed by the directors to be paid by paying patients. Judgment was entered for defendant on the ground that plaintiffs were not the real parties in interest, and had not legal capacity to sue; and this is the only question raised here. All the facts necessary to enable the plaintiffs to recover, if they can sue in their own names, are found by the court. The defendant's wife was an indigent inmate, duly committed to the asylum; and the board had by resolution, in due form, fixed the amount to be paid by paying patients. The powers of the board are defined by section 2137 of the Political Code; but neither in that nor in any other statute existing at the time this suit was commenced is the board expressly authorized to sue. Such authority was given them by act of March, 1889, passed after this suit was commenced. The duties of the board with reference to such moneys are defined by St. 1885, pp. 32, 33. It is provided, in case an insane person is able to pay actual charges and expenses, a guardian may be appointed, whose duty it shall be to pay such expenses to the board; and "if indigent insane persons have kindred of degree of husband or wife, father, mother, or children, living within this state, of sufficient ability, who are otherwise liable, said kindred shall support such indigent insane person to the extent prescribed for such paying patients;" and, further: "All moneys belonging to the state received by the board of trustees other than that appropriated by the state shall be kept by said trustees in a separate fund, to be known as a 'contingent fund,' and the same shall by the said trustees be expended at such times and in such manner as to the said board appears for the best interest of said asylum, and for the improvement thereof, and of the grounds and buildings therewith connected. A full, strict, and itemized account of such receipts and expenditures shall be included in the biennial report of said board of trustees." It appears from the Code that all the expenses of the asylum are paid from the money appropriated by the state; and we have not found any source from which moneys belonging to the state can come into their possession except these funds, received by them in payment for inmates as provided in this act. At all events, these constitute a portion of this contingent fund, which the board is authorized to receive and to expend, and which, impliedly, it is made their duty to collect.

The obligation is fixed and certain upon the defendant to pay. Independently of the statute, he is liable for the support of his wife. The statute makes it his duty to pay the directors for such support. It is a debt due from him to the directors, as trustees of the asylum. Authorities may be found to the effect that all public officers have an implied power to take all legal measures in their official character which may be requisite to enable them to execute the trust or discharge the duty imposed upon them by law, where there is no statute prescribing the means by which such trust shall be executed; and therefore, if to accomplish their official duty, or to discharge their trust, it is necessary to sue, power to do so is implied. Cornell v. Town of Guilford, 1 Denio, 510, and authorities cited. This seems a rational conclusion, and logically follows from the fact of the trust or duty imposed, which can be performed in no other way. The difficulty arises from our Code, which requires all suits to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, except (section 369, Code Civil Proc.) an executor, administrator, trustee of an express trust, or one specially authorized by statute to sue. This last clause, it must be confessed, raises a presumption against the authority of any officer to sue unless specially authorized by statute; and we accordingly find, wherever similar Code provisions have been adopted, care is generally taken to authorize suits where it may be necessary. If the plaintiffs have capacity to sue, it must be on the ground that they are trustees of an express trust. And we see no reason why they are not such. The moneys are never to go to the state treasury. So long as the law is unchanged, the state can exercise no control over the funds, except to compel a faithful execution of the trust. The fund really belongs to the board as trustees, and the terms of their trust and their duties are plainly declared. Among these duties is that of collecting the money which shall constitute the fund, and there is no procedure prescribed. Under such circumstances, we think it a part of plaintiffs' duties to collect by suit if necessary, and as trustees of an express trust they may do so. It follows that the judgment should be reversed, and judgment entered for plaintiffs on the findings for the sum demanded in the complaint.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FITZGERALD, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below is directed to enter judgment for the plaintiffs on the findings for the sum demanded in their complaint.

BLAKELY V. BLAKELY. (No. 13,410.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1891.)

DIVORCE—CROSS-COMPLAINT—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action for divorce for abandonment, where a cross-complaint was filed alleging a subsequent abandonment of defendant, and the court refused to consider the same except by way of answer, it was error without injury, where the findings show that defendant abandoned plaintiff at the time alleged, and lives apart from him against his will and without his consent.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; WALTER H. LEVY, Judge.

Louis F. Dunand and Henry Eickhoff, for appellant. Geo. B. Gullin, for respondent.

FITZGERALD, C. This is an appeal upon the judgment roll from a judgment granting to plaintiff a divorce on the ground of desertion. The complaint alleges their intermarriage on the 23d day of September, 1887, and the willful desertion of plaintiff by defendant on the 23d day of September, 1887. The allegation of desertion is denied by the answer, and the defendant, by her cross-complaint, seeks affirmative relief on the same ground, and fixes the date thereof on the 24th day of February, 1888. This is denied by the answer to the cross-complaint. It appears from the record that the court below refused to consider the cross-complaint except by way of answer and defense, and declined to grant any affirmative relief based thereon, because no cross-complaint, as such, could be considered in an action for divorce. This ruling of the court, which was excepted to at the time, and is assigned for error, was clearly erroneous, (Wadsworth v. Wadsworth, 81 Cal. 182, 22 Pac. Rep. 648; Mott v. Mott, 82 Cal. 413, 22 Pac. Rep. 1140; Kirsch v. Kirsch, 83 Cal. 633, 23 Pac. Rep. 1083,) and unless the record affirmatively shows that the defendant was not injured thereby the judgment should be reversed, (Spanagel v. Dellinger, 88 Cal. 278; Leonard v. Kingsley, 50 Cal. 628.) The court in its decision found "that on the 23d day of September, 1887, the defendant willfully and without cause deserted and abandoned the plaintiff, and ever since has and still continues so to willfully and without cause desert and abandon said plaintiff, and to live separate and apart from plaintiff without any sufficient cause or any reason, and against plaintiff's will and without his consent." As none of the evidence taken at the trial was brought up by the record, it will be presumed that the finding is supported by evidence. It therefore follows that the allegation of the cross-complaint that plaintiff deserted the defendant on the 24th day of February, 1898, could not in point of fact be true, for the reason that the court found that the defendant deserted the plaintiff on the 23d day of September, 1887, and that she "ever since has and still continues to so desert * * *." It might, perhaps, be well to state, in this connection, that the same evidence necessary to sustain the allegation of desertion made by the cross-complaint would be equally competent in support of defendant's answer denying the desertion; hence the ruling of the court in refusing to consider the cross-complaint "was error without injury." We deem it but fair to the learned judge who presided at the trial of this case in the court below to state that while the point upon which his ruling was evidently based was not decided in De Haley v. Haley, 74 Cal. 491, 16 Pac. Rep. 248, yet it is manifest that what was said by Mr. Justice McKINSTRY in that case (the cases above cited not having been decided when this case was tried) was accepted by him as a very strong indication of what the action of this court would be when this question came fairly before it for decision. We advise that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

YATES v. JAMES. (No. 13,404.)

CONTRACT TO CONVEY LANDS—BREACH—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—INCREASED VALUE—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

1. Civil Code Cal. § 8906, provides that the detriment caused by the breach of an agreement v.26P.no.16—68 to convey realty is the price paid, and expense of examining title, with interest, and, in case of bad faith, the difference between the price paid and the value of the land at the time of the breach, with expenses in preparing to enter on the land; and where the failure to convey was caused by the refusal of the vendor's wife to join in the deed, the vendor being willing to convey, there is no bad faith, and it is error to allow as damages the increase in the value of the property.

2. The failure of defendant to object to evidence of the increase in value, and his concurring in submitting that question to the jury, does not prevent him from urging the error on appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; G. W. HUNTER, Judge.

Ernest Sevier, (Wilson & Wilson, of counsel), for appellant. J. H. G. Weaver, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. On November 15, 1884, the parties to this action entered into a verbal agreement, by the terms of which the defendant agreed to convey the land in controversy to the plaintiff upon the payment to him by plaintiff of the sum of $300, which was to be paid on or before the end of four years from the date of the contract. The court found that at the time the contract was made the defendant was, and ever since has been, the owner in fee-simple of the property; that immediately after the contract was entered into, defendant delivered the possession of the property to the plaintiff in pursuance of the agreement, and that plaintiff has ever since held the same, and has placed thereon improvements amounting in value to the sum of $280; that defendant saw the improvements as they were made, and offered no objection thereto; that the land has increased in value over the price agreed to be paid to defendant $250 per acre; that before the expiration of the four years, to-wit, on or about November 11, 1887, plaintiff offered in writing to pay defendant the full sum of $300, but defendant refused to accept the offer, and declared that he would not make a deed to the land; that plaintiff has performed all the conditions of the contract on his part to be performed; that $40 is the value of the use and occupation of the premises, which consist of three acres; that plaintiff has received from the sale of wood taken from the premises the sum of $36. The court further found that on September 2, 1884, defendant executed and filed a declaration of homestead, claiming as a homestead, together with other lands, the lands in controversy, and that the same has not been abandoned. It will be seen from the findings of the court that the plaintiff was allowed as damages $750, the enhanced value of the land, and the sum of $280, the value of his improvements, amounting in all to $1,030. From this amount the court deducted the sum of $76, that being the amount received from the sale of wood, and the value of the use and occupation of the premises, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $954 and costs.

We think the court erred in allowing the plaintiff $750 on account of the increase in value of the property. Section 3306, Civil Code, provides: "The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to convey an estate in real property is deemed to be the price paid, and the expenses properly incurred in examining the title and preparing the necessary papers, with interest thereon; but adding thereto, in case of bad faith, the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed, at the time of the breach, and the expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land." In this case bad faith on the part of the defendant was not alleged, found, or proved. It appears in evidence that the defendant would have conveyed the premises as he had agreed to if his wife had been willing to unite in the deed, but she refused. There has been much conflict of judicial opinion on the question as to what is the just measure of damages in such cases. Mr. Parsons, speaking on the subject, says, "If the action is brought on a contract to sell, and against the party who had promised to sell, and had failed to do so, many authorities have held that the result may depend upon the cause of the failure. For, if the intended vendor was honest, and was prevented from making the sale by causes which he did not foresee and could not control, then the plaintiff recovers only nominal damages, or, if he has paid the price, the same with interest, adding perhaps, in both cases, his expenses in investigating the title, or for similar purposes." 3 Pars. Cont. *229. The provisions of our Code referred to above were doubtless intended to settle the matter in accordance with the rule stated. In England this rule is sustained upon the ground that the purchaser should investigate the title before he is justified in taking any other step. Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. Bl. 1078; Walker v. Moore, 10 Barn. & C. 416. In this country, although the expense of investigating the title is not allowed in some of the states, the rule is generally based upon the analogy between this class of cases and actions upon covenants for title, in which the measure of damages where there has been an eviction is in many states the amount of the consideration money, with interest. Baldwin v. Munn, 2 Wend. 399; Peters v. McKeon, 4 Denio, 546. It has been held that where the seller knew he did not have a good title, but had reason to believe that he would be able to secure it before conveyance was required, there was no bad faith. Sikes v. Wild, 4 Best & S. 421, 1 Best. & S. 587.

It is claimed by respondent that inasmuch as the appellant made no objection to the evidence offered by plaintiff as to the increased value of the property, and concurred in submitting to the jury the question, "How much has this land increased in value since November 15, 1884?" he is now bound by the answer of the jury, and the finding of the court based thereon. We think, however, that as there is no allegation in the complaint upon which such a finding can be supported, the defendant is not estopped by his conduct at the trial from claiming the benefit of the objection which he now makes. The cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to modify the judgment by striking out from the last clause thereof the words and figures following: "$954 damages, and his costs and disbursements incurred in this action, amounting to the sum of $65," and inserting in lieu thereof, "$204 damages, and that each party pay his own costs."

CRIM et al. v. KESSING. (No. 13,279.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1891.)

AMENDMENT OF RECORD—FINAL JUDGMENT—AUTHENTICATION OF JUDGMENT—LIMITATIONS.

1. Where, on foreclosure, the judge made an order substituting in place of plaintiff his successor in interest, but such order was not entered by the clerk, a subsequent order nunc pro tunc making the substitution becomes a part of the judgment roll, as provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 670, and binds the judgment debtor in an action by the judgment creditor's executors to collect the same.

2. Section 577 defines a judgment as "the final determination of all the rights of the parties." Section 582 requires the court's decision to be "given in writing and filed with the clerk." Section 726 provides that on foreclosure proceedings the judgment shall direct a sale of the property, and an application of the proceeds to the costs, etc., "and the amount due to the plaintiff." Held, that an entry by the clerk at the end of the trial of the amount for which plaintiff was entitled to recover in a foreclosure suit does not constitute a judgment; and the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the decision has been "given in writing, and filed with the clerk," and recorded.

3. A judgment rendered by one judge is not impaired by his failure to authenticate it, and the authentication thereof after the expiration of his term of office by another judge, since the statute does not require a judgment to be signed.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN F. FINN, Judge.

Action to recover a judgment by Maria L. Crim and another against John F. Kessing. From a judgment for plaintiff defendant appeals.

Henry C. Firebaugh, for appellant. Blake, Williams & Harrison, for respondents.

HARRISON, J. April 23, 1877, Carrie A. Beach commenced an action in the late twelfth district court, upon a promissory note executed by the appellant, and to foreclose a mortgage on certain real property given to secure the payment of the same. May 20, 1882, the cause was tried upon the complaint and the answer of the appellant, before Hon. J. M. ALLEN, who on the same day announced his decision, which was thereupon entered in the minutes of the court, but findings were not filed until December 29, 1882. The term of office of Judge ALLEN expired December 31, 1882, and on January 10, 1883, the court made an order nunc pro tunc, as of March 20, 1882, that "Samuel Crim, the successor in interest of the plaintiff herein, be, and he is hereby, substituted as the plaintiff in this action, and that this action continue in his name as such plaintiff, in the place and stead of Carrie A. Beach, plaintiff therein." September 28,

1883, a judgment of foreclosure and for the sale of the mortgaged premises, signed by Hon. J. F. SULLIVAN, judge of said court, was entered of record in the cause. On the same day an order of sale was issued upon said judgment, under which the sheriff sold the mortgaged premises, and thereafter, on the 17th day of November, 1883, he made and filed his return of the same, showing a deficiency of $947.17, for which amount judgment was on that day docketed against the appellant, and in favor of Samuel Crim. September 4, 1888, the respondents, as the executors of the last will and testament of said Crim, commenced this action against the appellant to recover the amount of said judgment. In his answer the defendant denied the rendition of the judgment alleged in the complaint, and alleged that certain proceedings which had been taken in the case of Beach v. Kessing, prior to the entry of the judgment, were unauthorized, and without the jurisdiction of the court, and also pleaded the statute of limitations. The action was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment rendered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint. A motion for a new trial having been made and denied, an appeal has been taken to this court from both the judgment and order denying a new trial. When the plaintiffs offered in evidence the judgment roll in the case of Beach v. Kessing, the defendant made various objections thereto, which were overruled. The admissibility of the judgment was to be determined by the court upon its inspection, and, inasmuch as it was a judgment of the same court, and in terms purported to be the judgment alleged in the complaint in favor of plaintiffs' testator, and against the defendant, in an action against the defendant in which he had appeared, and of which the court had jurisdiction, the court committed no error in admitting it in evidence. The objection that the complaint was upon a judgment in an action wherein Samuel Crim was plaintiff, whereas the one offered in evidence was a judgment in favor of Carrie A. Beach, was answered by the fact that the judgment was entitled "Samuel Crim, substituted in place of Carrie A. Beach, Plaintiff, vs. John F. Kessing et al., Defendants;" and, after directing a sale of the mortgaged premises, adjudged that for any deficiency upon such sale "the clerk of the court docket a judgment for such balance against the defendant John F. Kessing, and that the defendant John F. Kessing pay to the said Samuel Crim the amount of said deficiency and judgment."

The judgment of a domestic court of general jurisdiction is conclusively presumed to be correct, unless the record itself of the judgment shows that the court did not have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, or of the person of the defendant. When the court has such jurisdiction, its record speaks absolute verity, because it is the court's record of its own acts; and such jurisdiction will be conclusively presumed, unless the contrary appears upon the face of the record. Whenever such judgment is received as evidence in another proceeding, it cannot be impeached; "for it is a settled rule and maxim that nothing shall be averred against a record, nor shall any plea or even proof be admitted to the contrary." 3 Bl. Comm. 24. In Carpentier v. City of Oakland, 30 Cal. 439, an action of debt was brought upon a judgment that had been previously rendered in an action between the same parties; and it was held in the court below that the defendant could not show that service of the summons had not been made upon it in the original action. In affirming this ruling, the supreme court used the following language: "The maxim of the law is that the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction imports absolute verity, and its truth cannot be questioned, either by showing otherwise than by the record itself that the court had no jurisdiction, or that its jurisdiction was fraudulently procured. Both upon the merits of the cause of action and upon all jurisdictional facts, the record imports absolute verity in law, and is to be tried by the court on inspection of the record only." In Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 455, a judgment in ejectment was offered in evidence, and it was objected to by the defendant upon the ground that no judgment had ever been rendered by the court, and that the clerk had no power to enter the judgment by default. The court said, (page 462:) "Purporting to be a judgment of the court, and found regularly entered in its minutes, the presumption is it was entered in pursuance of an order of the court. The rule is elementary that upon collateral attack all intendments are indulged in support of the judgments of courts of superior jurisdiction. Their records are conclusively presumed to speak the truth, and whatever is upon their records is presumed—the contrary not appearing—to be rightfully there." At the common law the only plea that was allowed to an action upon a judgment was nul tiel record, and the trial of this issue was by the record alone; "for as Sir Edward Coke observes, a record or enrollment is a monument of so high a nature, and importeth in itself such absolute verity, that, if it be pleaded that there is no such record, it shall not receive any trial by witness, jury, or otherwise, but only by itself." 3 Bl. Comm. 331. Such answer was in effect pleaded by the defendant in the present case, but the record of the judgment itself, having been produced and received in evidence, established the allegations of the complaint. Under our system of pleading, the defendant could have set up in his answer matter which would constitute an equitable defense to the judgment; but, as was said in Carpentier v. City of Oakland, supra, "he must plead such defense as fully as if he were bringing a suit, instead of defending one, * * * and file an answer which in matter of allegation would be a good bill in equity under the old system." An examination of the answer herein shows that it falls far short of this requirement, and, in fact, has not been regarded by the appellant, either at the trial or on this appeal, as an equitable defense to the judgment, within the rule above mentioned. The appellant maintains, however, that the verity of the judgment is impeached by an inspection of its record, and in his argument maintains that the various proceedings that were had subsequent to the entry in the minutes in March, 1882, were without the jurisdiction of the court, and that the judgment as finally entered was void.

1. The court had jurisdiction to make the order of January 10, 1883, by which Crim was substituted as plaintiff in the place of Beach, and its action in making such order is conclusive against any collateral attack. All courts of record have the inherent power to correct their records so that they shall conform to the actual facts, and speak the truth of the case; and such correction may be made at any time, either upon the motion of the court itself, or at the instance of any party interested in the matter. Ordinarily, a court would require notice of the motion to be given to all parties interested; but it has the power to make the correction without such notice. When made, the record so corrected, as well as the order making the correction, is conclusive upon any other court in which the record is offered in evidence. Balch v. Shaw, 7 Cush. 282. It appears by the order made in the present case that proof was made to the satisfaction of the court that at the trial of the cause, March 20, 1882, such order of substitution was in fact made, but had not been entered by the clerk. That court was the sole judge of the sufficiency of the proofs offered in support of the motion, and its action is conclusive, except in direct proceedings to vacate the order. The order making the substitution, being an order "relating to a change of parties," became a part of the judgment roll, (Code Civil Proc. § 670,) and imported the same verity as the other parts of the record.

2. The clerk's entry in the minutes of the trial, March 20, 1882, did not constitute a judgment. It was only a record of a portion of the proceedings in the case. "A judgment is the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding." Code Civil Proc. § 577. The complaint prayed for the foreclosure of a mortgage, and the sale of the premises mortgaged to secure the payment of the note. The answer did not deny the execution and existence of the mortgage, but alleged that after the action had been commenced, and while it was pending, the defendant made a payment upon the principal of the note, and also of the costs of the action, and that it was then agreed by the plaintiff that the action should be dismissed. This was the only issue presented by the pleadings to be tried by the court; and the court, having found against the defendant upon this issue, ascertained the amount due upon the note, and ordered judgment for that amount. Both parties had appeared at the trial, and there was no waiver by them of findings of fact. Although the court then ascertained the amount of money for which the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment, yet, inasmuch as the payment of that amount was secured by a mortgage, it was necessary that the judgment when entered should "direct a sale of the incumbered property, and the application of the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the costs of the court, and the expenses of the sale, and the amount due to the plaintiff." Id. § 726. It would have been error for the court to enter a mere money judgment against the defendant for the amount then ascertained to be due on the note. Until after a sale of the mortgaged premises, there could be no personal judgment docketed against him. The court did not, as is claimed by appellant, "refuse" the plaintiff any other relief than the money judgment. Its only action at this time was to determine the amount for which judgment should be entered, leaving the form of the judgment by which this amount should be collected until it should render its "decision" upon the whole case. The statute required its decision to be "given in writing and filed with the clerk," (Id. § 632,) and in it the facts found and conclusions of law were to be separately stated, (Id. § 633.) The "decision" upon which, by section 633, the judgment is to be entered, is that which by section 632 is to be given in writing and filed with the clerk; and until so given and filed there is no "decision" upon which judgment can be entered, and consequently no authority for entering any judgment. Accordingly, the judge before whom the case was tried made his findings of fact, and they were filed December 29, 1882. This was the rendition of the judgment which the clerk could thereafter at any time enter at length in the records of the court. The entry of a judgment after it has been rendered by the court is but the ministerial act of the clerk. The judgment, when entered, becomes the record of what the court has determined, and then becomes as binding upon the parties as if entered immediately upon its rendition. "The rendition of a judgment is a judicial act; its entry upon the record is merely ministerial." Freem. Judgm. § 38. Under the system of practice which prevailed in this state prior to the adoption of the Codes in 1872, findings were not essential to the entry or validity of a judgment, (Prac. Act, § 180;) and under that system it was held that the entry in the clerk's minutes of the decision as announced by the court, constituted the "rendition of the judgment," (Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416; Genella v. Relyea, 32 Cal. 159.) But under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, whenever findings are required, there can be no "rendition of the judgment" until they are made and filed with the clerk. Findings of fact, however, are required only "upon the trial of a question of fact," and they may in all instances be waived. Whenever they are waived or are not required, the entry of its decision in the minutes of the court constitutes the "rendition of the judgment" in the same manner as it did under the former system. In the case of Cook v. Cook, which was under consideration by this court in Re Cook's Estate, 77 Cal. 220, 17 Pac. Rep. 923, and 19 Pac. Rep. 431, the defendant, after service of the summons upon him, made default, and, the referee to whom the matter had been referred to take the necessary proofs having made his report, the court upon the hearing thereof made an order, which was then entered in its minutes, decreeing a divorce between the parties to the action; and this court held that, inasmuch as, in case of a default, findings are not required, the entry in the minutes constituted the "rendition of the judgment."

3. The subsequent authentication to the clerk by Judge SULLIVAN of the judgment to be entered did not impair its effect. The cause had been fully tried before Judge ALLEN, and he had rendered his decision before going out of office. The entry of the judgment upon that decision, being but a ministerial act, could be performed by the clerk after Judge ALLEN's term of office had expired with as much effect as before. Roberts v. White, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 272. There is no provision in our statute requiring any judgment to be signed by a judge, and it has been held that a judgment which is produced from the original records of the court in which it was rendered needs no signature or exemplification. Clink v. Thurston, 47 Cal. 29. The signature by the judge is "merely to give the clerk a surer means of correctly entering what has been adjudged." In re Cook's Estate, 77 Cal. 227, 17 Pac. Rep. 923, and 19 Pac. Rep. 431. Whether, if the clerk had, without any authentication from the court, entered the judgment which was subsequently entered, it would have been error, for the reason that in the conclusions of law made by Judge ALLEN there was no direction for a sale of the mortgaged premises, we are not called upon to decide in this case. The court could at any time before entry of judgment change its conclusions of law upon the facts that had been found, (Condee v. Barton, 62 Cal. 1;) and such change could be made by another judge than the one who had tried the cause. The complaint contained a prayer for the sale of the mortgaged premises; and the findings of fact, taken in connection with the facts that were admitted by the answer, would have justified the court in giving such relief. If it were necessary for the court to give any notice of such action, we could assume that the form of the judgment as entered was made by the court after notice to the defendant, and upon a proper showing therefor. As was said by this court in Re Cook, 83 Cal. 418, 23 Pac. Rep. 392, "so long as the decree stands, it is conclusive as to all matters of evidence necessary to its validity." In Sanford v. Sanford, 28 Conn. 6, after the defendant had appeared in the action, the court, upon the motion of the plaintiff, had entered an order of nonsuit. Nearly two years thereafter, in the absence of the defendant, and without any proof appearing upon the record that notice had been given to him, the court proceeded to try the cause, and rendered judgment against him. In an action upon that judgment, the supreme court of Connecticut held that the jurisdiction of the court must be presumed to have been properly exercised, and that its action, in the exercise of such jurisdiction, could not be collaterally impeached; saying: "If it were conceded to be necessary to the validity of the order of the court setting aside the nonsuit in question that notice of the motion for that purpose should have been given to the defendant, the presumption is that such notice was given, and this presumption supersedes the necessity of an express statement to that effect on the record." This principle is not affected by the fact that in the present case the court finds that the judgment in question was entered "without notice to the defendant Kessing, and in his absence from court," since, as we have before seen, the judgment itself cannot be impeached by any evidence outside of its own record. Even an inconsistency between the findings and the judgment will not impair the judgment, "for the question whether the findings support the judgment—in other words, whether the judgment is erroneous—cannot be raised in a collateral action." Johnston v. Savings Union, 75 Cal. 139, 16 Pac. Rep. 753. From the time that the court acquires jurisdiction of the defendant until the entry of the judgment, all the steps that are taken by the court are movements within its jurisdiction; and, however irregular such movements may be, they constitute only error, which must be remedied on a direct proceeding for that purpose. It follows from the foregoing considerations that the objections made by the defendant to the sufficiency of the judgment cannot be sustained.

The only remaining question presented by the record is whether the judgment sued upon was barred by the statute of limitations. This, however, we think cannot be considered an open question in this state. In Trenouth v. Farrington, 54 Cal. 273, it was expressly held that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the entry of the judgment, and in Condee v. Barton, supra, it was held that a judgment is not final until it is recorded. The evidence of Crim, which was objected to, did not tend to vary or contradict the record. It was, in fact, immaterial, and it was not necessary that the plaintiff should have offered it. We do not think, however, that it could by any possibility have prejudiced the defendant. Hobbs v. Duff, 43 Cal. 489. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE — CHANGE OF POSSESSION—REPLEVIN—JUDGMENT.

1. Though Civil Code Cal. § 3440, declares that transfers of personal property are conclusively presumed to be fraudulent where they are "not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred," it is a question for the court what constitutes immediate delivery and continued change of possession, and its finding thereon, upon conflicting evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Though Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 667, provides that, "in an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession, or the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had," a judgment for possession alone is sufficient, where delivery was made to plaintiff at the beginning of the action.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Los Angeles county; WILLIAM P. WADE, Judge.

H. W. Latham and M. L. Graft, for appellant. Adams & Mitchell, for respondent.

HARRISON, J. The plaintiff brought this action against the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, to recover the possession of certain personal property which had been levied on by him under a writ of attachment issued in an action against the plaintiff's vendor, and at the time of issuing the summons made the statutory claim therefor under which the property was taken from the defendant and delivered to him. Upon the trial of the cause the court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the possession of the property, together with damages for its detention, but made no finding as to its value. From this judgment and an order denying a new trial the defendant has appealed, upon the grounds that the transfer of the personal property to the plaintiff from his vendor was fraudulent, inasmuch as it was not accompanied by an immediate change of possession; and that the judgment as entered is erroneous, for the reason that it does not provide for a recovery of the value of the property in case a delivery cannot be had.

1. Section 3440 of the Civil Code declares that "every transfer of personal property * * * is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession." What constitutes an "immediate delivery" or an "actual and continued change of possession" is, however, a fact to be determined by the court upon the evidence presented in each particular case. Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 322. The circumstances connected with a transfer of personal property are so varied that it would be impossible to frame a rule applicable to each case, or to determine in advance what acts would be sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute. When the transfer is challenged as fraudulent under this section, all the circumstances connected therewith are essential to a determination of its character, and it can very rarely be the case that there will not be such a conflict of testimony as to preclude this court from re-examining its sufficiency. In the present case the court found upon such conflicting evidence "that on the 15th day of March, 1890, one A. P. Stone, the then owner of the property described in the complaint herein, sold, transferred, and delivered the said property to the plaintiff herein for a valuable consideration;" and also "that plaintiff was the owner, in the possession of, and entitled to the possession of, the said property continuously from March 15, 1890, until the same was taken by the defendant under said writ of attachment on March 18, 1890, without the consent of plaintiff." The evidence upon the subject of these findings is set out in the bill of exceptions, and, although it presents strong characteristics of an attempt to evade the provisions of the section, we cannot say that the conclusion reached by the court is not authorized; and, under well-settled principles, the finding of the trial court is conclusive.

2. Section 667, Code Civil Proc., declares that, "in an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession, or the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had, and damages for detention." The evident purpose of this provision is that if the plaintiff, after obtaining judgment for its possession, is unable to obtain a delivery of the property, he may, in the same action, have a judgment for its value. The primary object of the action is to recover the possession of the property. Whetmore v. Rupe, 65 Cal. 238, 3 Pac. Rep. 851. But, if the plaintiff has already obtained this possession before judgment, there is no occasion for any judgment for its value, as the condition is wanting upon which such clause in the judgment is authorized, viz., "if a delivery cannot be had." The plaintiff need not avail himself of the provisional remedy for obtaining possession prior to judgment, or, if he does, the defendant may have retaken the property, or, without retaking it, may obtain judgment for its return. In either of these cases the judgment must be in the alternative, in order that, in case a delivery cannot be had, the prevailing party may recover its value, (De Thomas v. Witherby, 61 Cal. 92.) or in order to determine the amount to be recovered from the sureties upon the undertaking, (Nickerson v. Stage Co., 10 Cal. 520.)

Under the provisions of section 627, Code Civil Proc., in an action for the recovery of specific personal property, the jury are authorized to find the value of the property, if their verdict be in favor of the plaintiff, only "if the property has not been delivered to the plaintiff," and, e converso, if the property has been delivered to the plaintiff, they are not required to find the value; and, in the absence of such finding, there is no verdict upon which to base an alternative judgment. In Waldman v. Broder, 10 Cal. 379, the plaintiff, under a provisional remedy, had obtained possession of the property prior to the judgment. At the trial a verdict was rendered in favor of the defendant, and judgment thereon entered for a return of the property, without any mention of its value. Upon the objection on appeal that such judgment was erroneous, the court said: "Nor is there anything in the failure to give an alternative judgment for the value of the property. This omission might be complained of by defendants if they had shown the value, but it is no ground of complaint on the part of the plaintiff."

In Brown v. Johnson, 45 Cal. 76, the judgment was for the value of the property without the alternative for its return. Upon appeal it was urged that the judgment should be in the alternative, but the court held that if it had been shown that the property had been destroyed, so that a judgment for its delivery would have been necessarily unavailing, "the failure to render judgment for its possession would, at most, be but a technical error or omission,—one for which we would not reverse the judgment." In Whetmore v. Rupe, supra, where the alternative judgment for the value of the property was for less than the value as found, the court said: "Appellant cannot complain that the judgment was for less than the value of the property." In Burke v. Koch, 75 Cal. 356, 17 Pac. Rep. 228, it was said: "Conceding that this action is, as claimed by appellant, an action of claim and delivery, it does not follow that the judgment is void or erroneous because not in the alternative." We can see no difference in principle between a judgment for the value of the property sued for without the alternative for its delivery, and a judgment for the delivery of the property without an alternative for its value. If the former is free from error, the latter must be equally so. Certainly the defendant against whom a judgment for the possession has been rendered, where a delivery was obtained by the plaintiff before trial, cannot complain or feel aggrieved because the judgment as rendered does not also authorize a recovery from him of the value of the property. We are aware that in Berson v. Nunan, 63 Cal. 550, under a state of facts similar to those in the present case, this court reversed the judgment, and remanded the cause, with directions to enter a judgment in the alternative form. It will be observed, however, that in that case the judgment as rendered was "for a return of the property or its value and costs," and that the judgment as entered varied from that which was rendered by not including the value of the property. This ruling was afterwards cited with approval in Brichman v. Ross, 67 Cal. 601, 8 Pac. Rep. 316, but the judgment in this latter case was reversed upon other grounds. We think, however, that the mere failure to include in the judgment a clause which cannot have any operative effect, or confer any right or protection upon either the plaintiff or the defendant, does not affect the substantial rights of either party, and is not a sufficient ground for the reversal of the judgment, (Code Civil Proc. § 475.) and that the cases last mentioned should not be regarded as authority for such reversal. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. K. WILSON, Judge.

William Matthews, for appellants. Rosenbaum & Scheeline, Jarboe & Harrison, Neuman & Elckhoff, and Edward R. Taylor, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. On February 3, 1877, one Estanislao Hernandez, a defendant herein, being insolvent, made an assignment of his property—consisting of several tracts of land, and a large amount of live-stock and other personal property—to Frederick Roeding, also a defendant, in trust for the payment of his debts and the benefit of his creditors. At the time of the assignment Hernandez made an inventory and statement which purported to set forth his property, his debts, and his creditors. The present action was brought by a large number of creditors of said Hernandez. It is averred in the complaint "that the assignment was fraudulent; that, by collusion between said Hernandez and said Roeding, property of the former of great value was fraudulently omitted from said inventory, and pretended, but not real, debts were set forth in said statement as owing to certain persons, who are also made parties defendant; that after the assignment Roeding allowed Hernandez to remain in possession and receive the profits of a large part of the property; that Roeding for a long time failed to render any account as assignee, and, when pressed to do so by plaintiffs, rendered a simulated and fraudulent account; and that Roeding has no knowledge of agricultural pursuits, is incompetent to manage the trust-estate, and has greatly wasted it. There are other averments not necessary to be mentioned. The prayer is that the assignment be declared void as to all property remaining in the hands of the assignee; that he render a full account to plaintiffs of all his transactions as assignee; that he be removed from his office as assignee; that a receiver be appointed to take possession of all the property; that the property be sold and the proceeds of the sale be paid to plaintiffs 'according to their respective rights'; that the assignee be restrained from doing any further acts in the premises; that said pretended debts be declared fraudulent, and that plaintiff have such other relief as the court may deem just." The answer of defendants denies nearly all the material averments of the complaint, except the assignment itself. It appears from a number of papers printed in the transcript, and not objected to by respondents, and from a short bill of exceptions duly authenticated, that on June 22, 1886, the court made a large number of "findings." In these most of the issues of fraud were determined in favor of defendants; it is declared that Roeding should not be removed from his office; and it is found that a preliminary order restraining him from controlling the property or selling it should be set aside. Certain other issues are disposed of in these findings. It is ordered that an account be taken, and, further, that, "inasmuch as it is impossible to examine said account in open court, a referee will be ordered and a referee appointed, on application and notice, to take and report such account to the court." It is also further ordered that, "upon the rendition of such account, such order will be made by this court as to the disposition of the moneys in his hands as shall best serve to protect the rights of all parties interested in said fund." Afterwards, on August 9, 1886, a document was signed by the judge of the court and filed, which is called a "decision," but which appears to be an interlocutory decree, and intended to carry out the mandates of the findings. It also appears from other straggling papers printed in the transcript that certain sales of property were made by said assignee on the order of the court, and that the sales were approved. There is also printed in the transcript what purports to be a report of a referee, which sets forth four schedules or balance-sheets, so that the court might adopt either one of the four as a statement of the account of the assignee; and the bill of exceptions states that a referee was appointed in accordance with the directions of the said "findings." The full order of reference does not appear; but the scope of it certainly was not to try the issues of the action and report a judgment, but to ascertain some fact or facts necessary to enable the court to determine the action, as provided in the second subdivision of section 638 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The bill further shows that the report of the referee was set for hearing for a certain day, and was argued and submitted to the court for decision; that on May 23, 1888, the judge rendered an "opinion," (which is given in full,) and in accordance with said opinion caused a minute order to be made, as follows: "In this cause the motion to settle the account of receiver and referee herein having been heretofore duly submitted to the court for consideration and decision, and, the court now being fully advised, it is ordered that balance-sheet No. 1, as submitted by the referee, be adopted and settled as account of referee." (This order read literally means nothing, as it was the account of the assignee, and not of the "referee," that was under consideration; but, as counsel make no objection, we will assume that "assignee" was meant where "receiver and referee" and "referee" were written in the first and last parts of the order.) It further appears from the bill of exceptions that a few days afterwards, May 31, 1888, the court, without notice to plaintiffs, made the following order: "In this cause, on motion of Messrs. Harrison and Rosenbaum, ex parte, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that the order made and entered in this cause on the 23d day of May, 1888, settling the account of the referee appointed herein, be, and the same is hereby, vacated and set aside, on the ground that said order was prematurely made; further ordered that order to settle account of referee be placed on calendar for further argument." From this last order of May 31st, setting aside said order of May 23d, and from said order alone, the plaintiffs in the case at bar appeal. (It may be remarked that the words, "account of referee appointed herein," as used in the last order, are quite confusing; for, if "assignee" was meant, there was no assignee "appointed herein.") We have given the history of the case at some length, so that its character, and the exact situation at the time of the last two orders, can be readily understood.

The said order of May 31st was clearly not appealable. It was not one of the orders mentioned in section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, other than an order after final judgment; and it was not a "special order made after final judgment." This negative is specially emphasized by the provision of said section that there may be an appeal from an order affecting the report of referees "in actions for partition of real property." The order set aside was not in any sense a "final judgment," within the meaning of section 939. It does not purport to be a final judgment, and was not such in legal effect. No execution or other writ could have been issued upon it by which either of the parties could have enforced a right against another. It was merely one of the various steps taken by the court at various times in its approach to a final judgment and decree which would settle the rights of all the parties, dispose of all the property, and wind up the administration of the trust. The authorities cited by appellants do not support their contention. The cases referred to by counsel which are nearest in point are Williams v. Conroy, 52 Cal. 414, (cited by respondents,) and Harris v. Refining Co., 41 Cal. 393, (cited by appellants;) and they both favor the view above expressed. Whether or not the order appealed from was properly made, or whether there should have been a motion for a new trial, need not be here discussed. That question could be raised only upon an appeal from the final judgment, or, perhaps, upon certiorari to test the jurisdiction. The appeal is dismissed.

ASSAULT WITH DEADLY WEAPON—EVIDENCE—IMPEACHMENT.

1. On an indictment for assault with a deadly weapon, while it is competent, as showing the present relation between the parties, to show by the prosecuting witness that he has since the assault instituted proceedings against defendant for a breach of the peace, it is error to allow him to testify further that these proceedings were based on an unprovoked attack on him by plaintiff since the original assault.

2. Where the witness has stated the reputation of another for veracity from what he has heard of it in the neighborhood, it is error for the court to state that he can only testify to what he knows of it of his own personal knowledge.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Santa Barbara county; R. M. DILLARD, Judge.

W. P. Butcher, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., and Walter B. Cope, Dist. Atty., for the People.

FITZGERALD, C. The defendant was convicted in the court below of assault, upon an information charging him with an assault with a deadly weapon. It appears from the record that several exceptions were taken by the defendant to the rulings of the court, but only two of them are urged here, and they are upon questions involving the admission and exclusion of evidence. At the trial one J. N. Marsh, who is the subject of the injury complained of in the information, was called and sworn as a witness for the prosecution. On cross-examination the question was asked him if he, "witness, had not since the arrest of defendant upon this charge had defendant arrested and tried in the justice's court on a charge of disturbing the peace, and if the jury did not acquit him of the charge." This question was answered by the witness in the affirmative, without objection from the prosecution. On redirect examination he was asked by the district attorney to "state the facts of that case." This he was permitted to do by the court, against the defendant's objection, he (the witness) stating, among other things, in this connection, "that the defendant had tried to ride over him with his horse while he was peaceably walking along the public highway," on which occasion defendant called him names, not necessary or fit to be repeated here. While the question asked on cross-examination, and affirmatively answered without objection, was competent for the purpose of showing the relations between the parties, and the state of feeling of the witness towards the defendant, yet under no rule or principle with which we are familiar could such evidence be justified as that which was admitted, against objection, on the redirect examination of the witness Marsh, and through which was injected into the trial of this case the facts involved in and brought out at the trial of the other case, the probable effect, if not the purpose, of which was to put in issue his character, and thereby to excite in the mind of the jury feelings of prejudice against the defendant. People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 163; People v. Dye, 75 Cal. 108, 16 Pac. Rep. 537; People v. Taylor, 36 Cal. 255.

The only other ruling of the court which we propose to notice, and to which exception was taken, was upon a question of evidence involving the general reputation of the prosecuting witness Marsh, for "honesty, truth, and veracity," and which was offered for the purpose of impeachment. It appears from the bill of exceptions that the witness Tallant, who was called for the defense, was asked "whether he knew the general reputation of the prosecuting witness Marsh in the community where he lived for 'honesty, truth, and veracity.'" The witness answered "that he only knew from what he had heard people generally say of him." Here the court interposed and "told the witness he could only testify to what he knew of his reputation of his own personal knowledge." This ruling of the court, reversing as it did an old and very familiar common-law rule, of which the plain provisions of section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure are but declaratory, was excepted to at the time, and is assigned as error. The question as propounded was perfectly competent to show such general reputation, and while technically it should have been answered directly, "Yes," or "No," still the response was such in effect, and in addition thereto clearly showed the competency of the evidence for the purpose for which it was sought to be introduced. People v. Methvin, 53 Cal. 68. For these prejudicial errors we advise that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; BELCHER, C. C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

CODY V. MURPHEY. (No. 14,498.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 23, 1891.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LOCAL ACTS—REDUCTION OF SALARIES—SHERIFF'S COMPENSATION.

1. Act Cal. March 14, 1891, readjusting the salaries of all county officers of counties of the thirty-fifth class, and reducing the salaries of the sheriffs thereof, is not repugnant to Const. Cal. art. 1, § 11, providing that all "laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," nor to article 4, § 25, prohibiting the passage of any local or special law "affecting the fees or salary of any officer."

2. Act March 31, 1891, reclassifying the counties for the purpose of regulating the compensation of county officers, but making no provisions as to sheriffs of counties of the thirty-fifth class, and providing that the act, unless otherwise provided, so far as it relates to all officers named, * * * shall not affect the present incumbents, does not affect Act March 14, 1891, so far as the latter relates to the salaries of such sheriffs.

In bank. Original petition for mandamus by M. J. Cody against J. D. Murphey. Fox, Kellogg & King, for plaintiff. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for defendant.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an original proceeding for a writ of mandate against the defendant, county auditor of the county of Mono, to compel him, as such auditor, to issue his warrant on the county treasurer of said county in favor of the plaintiff, who is the sheriff of said county, for the sum of $333.33 as and for his salary as such sheriff for the month of April, 1891. Under the county government act of 1883, Mono county became a county of the thirty-fifth class. Section 197 of the act of 1883, as amended in 1885, fixed the salaries of the county officers of counties of the thirty-fifth class, and by that section the sheriff's salary was fixed at $4,000 per annum. By an act of the legislature, approved March 14, 1891, (St. 1891, p. 106,) and which was to take effect from April 1, 1891, section 197 of the act of 1885 was amended, readjusting and reducing the salaries of all county officers of counties of the thirty-fifth class, and fixing the compensation of the sheriffs thereof at $2,000 per annum. Plaintiff contends that this act is local and special, and therefore in conflict with article 1, § 11, of the constitution of the state, which requires that all "laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," and also that it is in conflict with article 4, § 25, which prohibits the passage by the legislature of any local or special law "affecting the fees or salary of any officer." Subdivision 29. If the foregoing act is a general law, as contradistinguished from a local or special law, within the meaning of those terms as used in the constitution, then there can be no question as to its being uniform in its operation, for it acts upon all counties and all officers of counties of the thirty-fifth class. The case of Miller v. Kister, 68 Cal. 142, 8 Pac. Rep. 813, is not in point. Chief Justice SEARLS, in drawing a distinction between that case and People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 444, 18 Pac. Rep. 413, said: "The distinction attempted to be made by the statute under consideration in that case is not found here. It dealt with 48 classes of officers, and was to take effect as to all of them, except 3 classes, upon the expiration of the terms of office of the incumbents. It was a general law applying alike to all classes, but took effect at different times upon different classes." "No such distinction is made by the law under consideration here. The statute we are reviewing operates alike upon all the persons to whom it applies, and it applies equally to all persons in the same category." And, again, the chief justice says: "To so classify them that general laws applicable to these separate classes [referring to the classification of municipal corporations] will meet the necessities of the case was a wise provision; and a law which applies to one or more, but not to all, of these cases, is not for that reason special legislation." People v. Henshaw, 76 Cal. 444, 18 Pac. Rep. 413. See, also, Longan v. County of Solano, 65 Cal. 125, 3 Pac. Rep. 463; Thomason v. Ashworth, 73 Cal. 73, 16 Pac. Rep. 615. Justice SCOTT, in Knickerbocker v. People, 102 Ill. 229, appears to state the same rule when he says: "General laws are those which relate to or bind all within the jurisdiction of the law-making power, limited as that power may be in its territorial operation, or by constitutional restraints. A law applicable to all the counties of a class as made or authorized by the constitution is neither a local nor special law. If it applies to all the counties of a class authorized by the constitution to be made, it is a general law; and whether there may be few or many counties to which its provisions will apply is a matter of no consequence." It follows that the act of March 14, 1891, was a general law, of uniform operation, and therefore not hostile to the provisions of the constitution heretofore quoted. It becomes a part of the county government act of 1883, as amended by subsequent acts of the legislature, and is in full force and effect unless repealed by later legislation.

Subsequent to the 14th day of March, 1891, the legislature passed "An act to establish a uniform system of county and township governments." It was approved March 31, 1891, went into effect immediately, and repealed all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with its provisions. St. 1891, p. 295. Among other things it reclassified the counties of the state for the purpose of regulating the compensation of the county officers of the various counties, and fixed the salaries of all such officers. Section 234 of said act reads: "The provisions of this act, unless otherwise herein provided, so far as it relates to the fees and salaries of all officers named, except justices of the peace and constables, shall not affect the present incumbents." There can be but one construction placed on this provision of the act, and that is, the legislature intended, except where it was otherwise provided in the act, that the compensation of all county officers holding office upon the 31st day of March, 1891, should not be affected by the act. There appears to be nothing in the act "otherwise providing;" and it necessarily follows that the compensation provided for county officers by the act of March 31, 1891, does not affect the plaintiff in this case. The act of March 14, 1891, went into effect April 1, 1891, unless repealed by the later act of March 31st; but we have already held, in consonance with the views of plaintiff, that the provisions of the act of March 31st, relative to salaries of county officers, do not affect present incumbents, and consequently do not repeal, until the expiration of the terms of the present officers, the provisions of the act of 1883, with its amendments relating to the compensation of county officers. Therefore the act of March 14, 1891, being an amendment of the act of 1883, and not being repealed, is in full force and effect, and the plaintiff is entitled to his salary thereunder. Let the application for the peremptory writ be denied.

PEOPLE V. RIBOLSI. (No. 20,785.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1891.)

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS—INDICTMENT—ALLEGATION OF OWNERSHIP—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. An information charging defendant with feloniously receiving stolen goods, "the property of the estate of G. H. Tay and O. J. Backus, copartners doing business under the firm name of G. H. Tay & Co.," is sufficiently direct and certain as to the ownership of the stolen property.

2. It is not necessary that the information should state the name of the person who stole the goods.

3. Pen. Code Cal. § 956, provides that when an offense involves the commission of a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured is not material. Held, that where the charge was feloniously receiving goods stolen from the estate of G. H. Tay and O. J. Backus, copartners, and the proof showed that one of the partners was dead, and his executors were the legal owners of his property, the variance was not material.

4. A statement in an instruction that if, on full consideration of all the evidence, you are "fairly and clearly satisfied" of defendant's guilt, is equivalent to saying that the jury must be "entirely satisfied."

5. Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1111, providing that an accused cannot be convicted by the evidence of an accomplice, unless corroborated by other evidence "tending to prove" defendant's complicity, an instruction that a conviction for receiving stolen goods cannot be had on the testimony of the thief, unless corroborated by such evidence as tends to impute to defendant knowledge that the goods were stolen, is not erroneous in using the expression "tends to impute," instead of "imputes."

6. On a trial for feloniously receiving stolen goods, the court charged that "under our statute the following presumptions are to be regarded as satisfactory, if uncontradicted, but may be controverted, viz.: That an unlawful act was done with unlawful intent, and that a person intends the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act. The effect of these rules is that when the doing of an act is proven which, if there be guilty intent, would be a violation of law, the burden of proving the act to have been without such intent is in most cases upon the accused." Held erroneous, where the defense was confined to the original transaction on which the accusation was founded, and no special defense, as insanity, was interposed.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; F. W. VAN REYNEGOM, Judge.

Davis Louderback, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

FOOTE, C. The defendant was convicted of feloniously receiving and buying stolen goods for his own gain and profit, and to prevent the owner thereof from again possessing them, under section 496 of the Penal Code. From the judgment rendered against him, and an order refusing a new trial, he has taken this appeal. He contends that the information on which he was tried was obnoxious to a demurrer he filed thereto, in the respects that it does not give the particular circumstances of the offense charged, and that it is not direct and certain as to such offense; that it does not set forth the names of the persons from whom the goods were received, or the names of those who stole them; that it is not direct and certain as to the ownership of such goods. The information states, among other things, that the stolen goods received by the defendant at the city and county of San Francisco were the "personal property of the estate of Geo. H. Tay and Oscar J. Backus, copartners in business, and doing business in said city and county under the firm name and style of George H. Tay & Co." We do not perceive but what the defendant was thereby informed in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, in such a manner as that he was enabled, being a person of common understanding, to know what property it was intended to charge he had feloniously bought and received, etc. Section 959, subd. 6, Pen. Code. We do not think he was at all in doubt about the matter from the language used. The sufficiency of indictments or informations in this state depends upon whether or not they are in conformity to statutory provisions; and tested by that rule, and in accordance with what has been determined as to similar objections raised to such pleadings in People v. Ah Sing, 19 Cal. 598; People v. Barnes, 65 Cal. 16, 2 Pac. Rep. 493; People v. Henry, 77 Cal. 445, 19 Pac. Rep. 830;

People v. Goggins, 80 Cal. 229, 22 Pac. Rep. 206; People v. Arras, (Cal.) 26 Pac. Rep. 766,—it would clearly appear that the information in hand is entirely sufficient to save all the defendant's legal rights as to a proper statement of the ownership of the property feloniously received and bought.

"There is nothing in the section defining the crime which by necessary implication requires that the name of the thief shall be alleged in the indictment, and it is therefore unnecessary." People v. Avila, 48 Cal. 199. The information was therefore sufficient, as against the demurrer.

It is further claimed that there was a material variance between the proof and the allegations of the information as to the ownership of the property; that the proof showed that Tay, one of the partners, was dead, and that his estate was represented by executors, who were the legal owners of the property; and that such ownership must necessarily have been alleged in the information. Section 956 of the Penal Code, reads: "When an offense involves the commission of, or an attempt to commit, a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or intended to be injured, is not material." Here there is, if anything wrong, an erroneous allegation as to one of the owners of the property, who is now dead, but who, when alive, was a partner with the living alleged owner. It would seem, therefore, that there could be no doubt as to the sufficiency of the description in other respects so accurate and satisfactory as to leave no doubt as to the identity of the act charged to have been committed. This is entirely sufficient. People v. Watson, 72 Cal. 403, 14 Pac. Rep. 97; People v. Anderson, 80 Cal. 204, 22 Pac. Rep. 139; People v. Arras, (Cal.) 26 Pac. Rep. 766.

It is further objected that the following portion of the charge of the court is erroneous: "But if, upon a full and fair consideration of all the evidence in the case, you are fairly and clearly satisfied that the defendant committed the crime charged against him, you should find him guilty by your verdict, notwithstanding the proof of his good character." The criticism made by the appellant seems to be that the words "fairly and clearly satisfied" do not convey the idea that the jury must be "entirely satisfied of the defendant's guilt." But the appellate court has said: "A juror would have no excuse for saying that he did not 'feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty' of the truth of a fact which had been 'clearly established by satisfactory proof.'" People v. Wreden, 59 Cal. 395.

Again, it is said that the court erred in not giving instruction No. 3 asked for by defendant, and in giving it after modification. As requested, it read: "In case you should find that the witness Duket [an alleged accomplice,] either alone or with another, stole the goods described in the information, then I instruct you that in this case you cannot convict on the testimony of the thief, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, and without the aid of the testimony of the thief, imputes to the defendant a knowledge that the goods were stolen." As given, it read: "In case you find that the witness Duket, either alone or with another, stole the goods described in the information, then I instruct you that in this case you cannot convict on the testimony of the thief, unless he is corroborated by other evidence which in itself, without the aid of the testimony of the thief, tends to impute to the defendant a knowledge that the goods were stolen." The argument of the defendant is that the word "imputes" should not have been changed to "tends to impute." Section 1111 of the Penal Code establishes the rule that an accused cannot be convicted by the evidence of an accomplice alone, unless corroborated by "other evidence tending to prove the defendant's complicity in the offense charged." People v. Clough, 73 Cal. 353, 15 Pac. Rep. 5. We perceive no merit in the contention as made. As to the other portions of the charge objected to, with the exception of that hereafter noticed, we do not see, considering it as a whole, and giving to it a fair interpretation, that it is subject to the objections made in this behalf.

As a portion of the charge to the jury, the trial court said: "Under our statute the following presumptions are to be regarded as satisfactory if uncontradicted, but they may be controverted by other evidence, namely: That an unlawful act was done with an unlawful intent, and also that a person intends the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act. The effect of these statutory rules of evidence is that when the doing of an act which, if coupled with a guilty intent, would be a violation of law, is proven, the burden of proving the act to have been done without a guilty intent is in most cases thrown upon the accused. The portion which we have italicized is assailed as being misleading, and as stating the law erroneously. It is plain that where the court announces a rule of evidence, and states that it is applicable to "most cases," the jury would be justified in accepting it as the rule laid down for their guidance in the case which they were then engaged in considering. In cases like this, the crime is made out if the accused received or bought the stolen goods knowing them to be such, either for his own gain, or to prevent the owner from again possessing his property; the guilty intent consisting either in receiving or buying them for his own gain, or to prevent the owner from again possessing his property. People v. Avila, 43 Cal. 199; Pen. Code, § 496. The instruction, then, must have been understood by the jury to mean that in this case, if it was proved that the defendant received or bought the stolen property, knowing it to be such, then it was proved he did an act which, if coupled with the intent to receive or buy it for his own gain, or to prevent the owner thereof from again possessing it, he would be guilty of the offense charged against him; and that when the doing of the act of receiving or buying the property, knowing it to be stolen, was once proved, then the burden of proving the want of guilty intent, as above stated, is thrown upon the accused. It is plain that the trial court laid down the rule as to the extent of the burden of proofs necessary to rebut the presumption of guilty intent raised by the proof of the acts of receiving or buying the property knowing it to be stolen, as if the case had been one of homicide, under section 1105 of the Penal Code, in which case the rule would be as declared in People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 164, 22 Pac. Rep. 127, 549; for in the transcript it is said: "There is a marked difference in the degree of proof required to establish any fact against the defendant and that sufficient to establish any in his favor. As against the defendant, every fact material to the issue must be proved to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt, or the jury should acquit. Any fact necessary to the defense only needs to be established sufficiently to create a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt when taken into consideration with all the evidence in the case. And, if the facts proved in favor of the defendant are sufficient to create a reasonable doubt of his guilt, he should be acquitted." But in such cases as this the statutory rule declared in the case last referred to, under section 1105 of the Penal Code, does not apply; and when the defendant relies upon no distinct, separate, or independent fact, such as insanity, but confines his defense to the original transaction on which the charge is founded, with its accompanying circumstances, the burden of proof never shifts, but remains upon the people throughout the whole case to prove the act committed a criminal one beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Mize, 80 Cal. 41, 22 Pac. Rep. 80; People v. Gordon, (Cal.) 26 Pac. Rep. 502. To declare otherwise would be to say that the mere proof of the taking away of the horse of another from a pasture, without permission of the owner,—a mere trespass,—would throw upon a party doing that act, if charged with larceny, the burden of proving that he did not take the horse and carry it away with intent to steal, at least to an extent sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt of the existence of such intent. We perceive no other error, but for the reasons given we advise that the judgment and order be reversed.

WE CONCUR: FITZGERALD, C.; BELCHER, C. C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed.

BAIRD V. MILFORD LAND & LUMBER CO.
(No. 13,143.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 23, 1891.)

LEASE OF TIMBER-LAND—CONSTRUCTION.

A contract leasing certain land, with the privilege of removing timber therefrom, provided that the lessee should remove at least 1,500,000 feet the first year, and 2,000,000 each succeeding year and pay one dollar per thousand feet therefor, in quarterly installments: provided that, if he should not remove such amount in any one year, he should pay therefor, and remove the same in any subsequent year without further charge; the lease to continue 20 years, renewable at the option of the lessee, on certain stated terms. Held, that such contract provided only for the sale of the timber, and not for a continuous rent, and, where the timber is all removed before the end of the lease, the lessor cannot recover rent for the remainder of the term, though the lessee is still entitled to possession.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Humboldt county; J. J. DeHAVEN, Judge.

John A. McQuade, John R. Jarboe and J. H. Henderson, for appellant. S. M. Buck, for respondent.

PATERSON, J. On April 21, 1875, plaintiff and defendant's assignors entered into an agreement by the terms of which the former leased unto the parties of the second part certain lands for general lumbering purposes. The contract provides: "Said parties of the second part hereby agree and bind themselves to cut and remove from said land all of the merchantable timber fit for saw-logs on said land as follows: The first year at least fifteen hundred thousand feet, board measure, and each and every year thereafter two million feet, board measure, and as much more as they may think proper, and pay said party of the first part therefor one dollar in United States gold coin for each and every thousand feet, board measure, of merchantable lumber, so as aforesaid to be by them taken from said land, such payments to be made in equal installments, quarterly, each year: provided, however, that if said parties of the second part do not remove the amount of timber above specified to be taken in any one year, they shall, nevertheless, pay therefor; and they may remove the same in any subsequent year, without further charge or pay. * * * The term of this lease, and the rights hereby granted, shall be and continue twenty years from the date hereof, and, at the expiration of said term, said parties of the second part may, at their option, renew this lease for such length of time as they shall choose, on making a written demand of said party of the first part, and on paying rent, at the rate of ten dollars per year, in addition to the stumpage rent hereby reserved for each year, the same shall be occupied under such renewed lease for lumbering or milling purposes." Plaintiff contends that under this contract he is entitled to recover $500 quarterly as rent or royalty, so long as the defendant remains in possession of the land under the contract, whether the timber has been removed or not. The court below held that the defendant was liable only for the value of the merchantable timber fit for saw-logs at one dollar per thousand, and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $3,343, the value at $1 per thousand of the timber remaining on the land, and not paid for, with interest thereon and costs of suit. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, claiming that the court ought to have given him a judgment for $5,000, the amount of rent at $2,000 per annum since the last payment. The motion was denied, and plaintiff appealed from the order and from the judgment. We think the court properly construed the contract, and that the judgment is correct.

Whatever may be the rights or liabilities of either of the parties at the end of the term of 20 years, under the clause providing for a renewal we think it clear that plaintiff sold all the merchantable timber fit for saw-logs at one dollar per thousand feet, and gave the parties of the second part and their assigns 20 years in which to remove the same. There is nothing in the language of the clause which fixes the liability of the defendant, indicating an intention to provide for a dead or sleeping rent. The price of the lumber is the sole consideration named, and to guard against any misunderstanding, apparently, it is expressly provided that timber, which has been paid for in the payment of the quarterly installments, but not removed, may be removed "in any subsequent year, without further charge or pay." It is certain that defendant cannot be deprived of the use of the land "for general lumbering purposes" until the end of the 20 years named, whether the timber is removed or not, and we do not think that the parties intended that any consideration should be paid to plaintiff during that term other than the value of the merchantable timber at the price fixed. Mills had to be built and roads constructed. It was uncertain how fast the timber could be cut, sawed, and marketed. The parties of the second part were given 20 years in which to remove it, but plaintiff protected himself against unnecessary delay by a provision that the timber should be paid for in regular installments, commencing with the first quarter of the first year of the lease, whether it was removed or not. The timber was the basis of his compensation, and he evidently did not care how long the lessee might take to remove it, so long as it was promptly paid for. It might remove it all in a year if they desired, but, in any event, the plaintiff should be paid $1,500 the first year, and $2,000 every subsequent year, until all of it should be paid for at one dollar per thousand. Appellant asks: "Suppose the defendant was still in possession, and had never cut a stick of timber, * * * admitted the lease, but said there was not, and never had been, any timber upon the land. * * * What distinction can there be in principle between the cases of the land being originally devoid of timber and having become so during the term?" That is not a supposable case. We are construing the contract, and must consider all the circumstances as they appeared to the parties. There was a large amount of timber on the land, and it was all visible when the contract was made. In this respect, as well as in the terms used, the contract differs from the mining contracts in the cases cited by appellant.

Whether the defendant will be entitled to a renewal of the lease at the end of the 20 years, if at that time all the timber shall have been removed from the land, or if not removed it be made to appear that the failure to remove it was caused by bad faith, negligence, or want of diligence, we are not called upon to determine; but it would seem that, under such circumstances, a fair interpretation of all the terms of the contract would not give the defendant the right to renew the contract for an additional term at a rental of $10 per year, whatever may be the meaning of the expression, "stumpage rent hereby reserved." Although appellant does not discuss the matter, and it is therefore unnecessary to notice it, we think that the court did not err in refusing to add 10 per cent. for waste in sawing to the amount of timber found by the jury to be on the land. The judgment and order are affirmed.

ASSAULT WITH DEADLY WEAPON—SELF-DEFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS.

On a trial for assault with a deadly weapon, an instruction that if the jury find that defendant did make an assault with a knife, which was a deadly weapon, and not in necessary self-defense, it is their duty to find him guilty, but if they find that he made the assault in necessary self-defense, in order to prevent D. O. from committing a violent assault upon him, then he is not guilty, does not exclude the consideration of apparent necessity.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. McGARVEY, Judge.

J. A. Cooper, for appellant. W. H. H. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the People.

McFARLAND, J. The appellant was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, and the main point upon which he relies for a reversal is the omission of the court to charge the jury fully enough on the subject of self-defense. Neither party asked any instruction upon any subject. The charge of the court given on its own motion was brief, and what is contained on the subject of self-defense was as follows: "Now, if you find from the evidence that this party did make any assault with a knife, and you find that knife to be a deadly weapon, and he did it not in necessary self-defense, it is your duty to find him guilty as charged. If you find that he made the assault, and that he did it in necessary self-defense, in order to prevent this Dan Olie from committing a violent assault upon him, then he is not guilty." At the conclusion of the charge the court, turning to counsel, said: "Anything further than that?" Counsel made no answer. The point made by appellant is that the charge ignored the doctrine of "apparent necessity," and excluded the jury from considering that defendant, as a reasonable man, might have believed himself in danger, although as a matter of fact there was no real danger. But it is not true that the charge of the court excludes the consideration of apparent necessity. "Necessary self-defense," as explained in the text-books, as defined in our Penal Code, and, indeed, as generally understood by laymen as well as by lawyers, includes every case where "there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design to commit a felony, or to do some great bodily injury," and where the circumstances are "sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man." If a defendant were charged with injuring or killing a man who was apparently about to shoot him, no jury would convict because it turned out afterwards that the fire-arm used was not loaded, whether the court instructed on the subject or not. The cases cited by appellant's counsel are not in point. They were cases where the express language of the instructions excluded the doctrine of apparent necessity. In the main case relied on, (People v. Anderson, 44 Cal. 65,) the trial court, in defining "self-defense" to the jury, told them that the right "cannot be exercised in any case or to any extent not necessary. The party making the defense is permitted to use no instrument and no power beyond what will prove simply effectual." And on appeal this court held that "this definition excludes all that class of cases," etc. In People v. Flanagan, 60 Cal. 2, in the instruction held to be erroneous, the court used the language, "manifestly endeavoring and intending to commit a felony," while in the Code "or" is used instead of "and." In People v. Gonzales, 71 Cal. 569, 12 Pac. Rep. 763, the jury were told in the seventeenth instruction that "the necessity must be apparent, actual, imminent, absolute, and unavoidable;" and this court held the instruction to be contradictory and misleading. It was also said in that case that the eighteenth instruction excluded certain considerations from the jury; but, as the instruction is not given in the report, it does not appear how they were excluded. The sections of Wharton's Criminal Law referred to merely state the general doctrine, nowhere disputed, that apparent danger is sufficient. There are no other citations, and in all the cases cited the error of the instruction was one of commission, and not of omission. No doubt, in a case where the evidence at all warrants it, the court should instruct about apparent necessity when counsel for defendant requests it; and, perhaps, it is possible to imagine a peculiar case where it would be error for the court not to do so on its own motion; certainly it should not use express language which excludes that doctrine. In the case at bar there was no question before the jury as between real and apparent danger. According to the evidence of the prosecution, defendant made an entirely unjustifiable attack on the injured party, and said afterwards that he wanted to kill him. Defendant testified that the injured party first struck him; that he grabbed defendant by a handkerchief which was around his neck, and hit him several times with a rock which he had in his hand; that defendant told him that if he did not let go he would cut him; that he would not let go; that he cut him in the arm to make him let go; that as soon as defendant was released he ran away, and that the other party threw the rock after him. If the jury had believed defendant they would have acquitted him, and would not have been confused by any distinction between real and apparent danger. And it was peculiarly a case where counsel should have asked further instruction on the subject if he desired it, within the rule stated in People v. Marks, 72 Cal. 46, 13 Pac. Rep. 149; People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511, 15 Pac. Rep. 102; and People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 122, 22 Pac. Rep. 125. The court expressly asked counsel if any further instruction was desired. We think, therefore, that the judgment should not be reversed on account of said charge of the court.

2. The other error assigned is the refusal of the court to strike out the answer of the witness Olle, on his redirect examination, that he had known the defendant "since he was at San Quentin." But this error is not material, because the witness had said the same thing on his cross-examination by defendant's counsel without any objection being made to it. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PARTNERSHIP—FARMING LEASE.

A contract recited that the party of the first part, in consideration of certain agreements by the parties of the second part, "their heirs, executors, and assigns," "granted, demised, and let" a certain ranch for three years, with the privilege to the second parties to keep hogs thereon until a certain date succeeding the expiration "of this lease." The second parties were to plant certain crops and make certain improvements; the first party to furnish farming implements, seed, and materials, and make certain improvements. The increase of certain hogs and fowls belonging to the first party, and certain crops, were to be divided in certain proportions, the sales thereof to be made only upon "mutual consent." The first party could re-enter, etc., in case of default in any of the covenants by the second parties; but, if such covenants were performed, then the second parties might during such term hold the premises without hindrance from the first party, "his heirs and assigns." Held, that such contract is one of lease, and not of partnership.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Contra Costa county; JOSEPH P. JONES, Judge.

Action by J. C. Smith against Henry Schultz, L. E. Caldwell, and A. P. Caldwell to set aside an alleged partnership. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

E. F. Sworttguer and Geo. A. Wentworth, for appellants. L. B. Mizner and Ben Morgan, for respondent.

MCFARLAND, J. The complaint sets forth a certain written instrument, executed December 10, 1883, by plaintiff, J. C. Smith, as party of the first part, and the defendants Schultz and L. E. Caldwell, parties of the second part, and avers that said instrument created a partnership between said three persons "in the business of raising hogs," to be conducted on a certain tract of land or ranch owned by the plaintiff, and which, by the terms of said instrument, is leased to said Schultz and L. E. Caldwell for the term of three years, from the 1st day of December, 1883. It is also averred that said L. E. Caldwell and Schultz were given and took possession of said land, and certain live-stock and personal property thereon, and that they failed to perform certain things enumerated in said written instrument, and abandoned said land and stock. It is further averred that the other defendant, A. P. Caldwell, claims to have purchased the interests of said Schultz and said L. E. Caldwell in said instrument, and to have succeeded to their rights under the same. It is also averred that said A. P. Caldwell is incompetent to carry out the agreements of said instrument; that he made said purchase against plaintiff's wishes; that plaintiff has no confidence in his ability or integrity; that he is insolvent; that he is in possession of the ranch, and the live-stock thereon, and refuses to give them up; and that the personal property is in danger of being lost and injured. The prayer is for judgment against Schultz and L. E. Caldwell for a dissolution of the alleged partnership, an accounting and settlement, the appointment of a receiver, etc., and that said A. P. Caldwell be adjudged to have no interest or title to any of the property, and no rights under said written instrument. Schultz answered, admitting the averments of the complaint as against him, but averring that on March 5, 1884, he sold and assigned to the defendant A. P. Caldwell all his right to the partnership land and property described in the complaint, and that he has no interest therein. He prayed to be discharged. Separate answers were filed by the Caldwells, in which all the material averments of the complaint were denied, except the execution of the said written contract, and it was denied that said instrument created a partnership. It was also averred in said answers that said instrument was the result of negotiations between plaintiff and the defendant A. P. Caldwell, who is the father of said L. E. Caldwell; that at plaintiff's request A. P. Caldwell allowed Schultz to be united with him as a party to the instrument; that L. E. Caldwell had advanced, or was to advance, some money to his father, A. P., and that for his security the name L. E. instead of A. P. Caldwell was inserted in the instrument with the consent of plaintiff; that the real contract was between plaintiff on the one part, and A. P. Caldwell and Schultz on the other, and that it was well understood and consented to by plaintiff that L. E. Caldwell would not enter upon the land, or take possession of the personal property, or carry out the contract, but that the same should be done by A. P. Caldwell and Schultz, who, with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, took possession of the premises and property, and proceeded to comply with the provisions of said instrument; that on March 5th the said Schultz, with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff, sold and assigned all his interest in said instrument and property to said A. P. Caldwell, who afterwards, and until the commencement of this action, (which was December 26, 1884,) remained in possession and continued to comply with the provisions of said instrument, with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff; and that on December 6,

1884, said L. E. Caldwell, for the purpose of putting the legal title in A. P. Caldwell, assigned to the latter all his interest in said instrument.

The court tried the case upon the theory that the written instrument, of its own force, created a partnership between plaintiff, Schults, and L. E. Caldwell; that plaintiff could at any time, at his own pleasure, dissolve said alleged partnership, put an end to the further operation of the instrument, ignore the term of three years therein provided for, and take immediate possession of the ranch. By the findings the main averments of the complaint are found to be true, and the material averments of the answers of the Caldwells untrue. By the judgment and decrees the partnership was dissolved; a receiver was appointed, who took possession of all the property; a referee took an accounting; judgment was rendered against L. E. Caldwell and Schults for a large sum of money to be paid out of the assets, and A. P. Caldwell was decreed to have succeeded to their rights in the property, and to be entitled to any surplus remaining out of the assets after payment of the judgment and other charges; and it was decreed that plaintiff "be fully restored to his possession of all the real property described in the complaint, and to all the original stock owned by him on the premises at the date of the agreement of December 10, 1883, or which he may have put thereon at any time since, which has not been sold and accounted for by the receiver." The defendants L. E. and A. P. Caldwell made a motion for a new trial, and from an order denying said motion they appeal.

We do not see how the judgment can be maintained. At the trial the only evidence introduced by the plaintiff was (1) the instrument itself, upon which there was the following indorsement: "March 5, 1884. For value received I hereby sell, assign, transfer, and set over unto A. P. Caldwell, his heirs and assigns, all my right, title, and interest in and to the within indenture of lease and the land therein described. [Signed] HENRY SCHULTZ." (2) A statement by plaintiff, as a witness, as follows: "Subsequent to December 6, 1884, I have not made any contract or agreement to carry on business with A. P. Caldwell. The land is used for pasturage, pasturing stock exclusively. I have no confidence in A. P. Caldwell. I know that he don't pay me his bills. He couldn't pay me; that is all I know about it." And, (3) a statement by A. P. Caldwell, called as a witness by plaintiff, as follows: "I reside on Smith's ranch. I am one of the defendants in this suit. I am not on the tax-roll in this county. I have no money in bank anywhere. I owe some money in this county, and some outside this county." There was a cross-examination of plaintiff by defendants' attorney, and many of his questions were ruled out on objections made by plaintiff. The exceptions to these rulings need not be here examined. Sufficient evidence was admitted on the cross-examination to show that down to the latter part of September, 1884, at least, the plaintiff recognized and dealt with A. P. Caldwell as rightfully in possession of the land and property and carrying out the contract. Defendants moved for a nonsuit on proper grounds, and the motion was overruled. Defendants then introduced uncontradicted evidence showing that the substantial averments and denials of the answers of the Caldwells were true, and also that valuable permanent improvements had been made on the land by the lessees, which would be lost to them if the term of the lease were shortened. Under these circumstances, we do not think that any finding of the court upon any material issue is supported by the evidence. Moreover, we think that the motion for a nonsuit should have been granted. Plaintiff's case in chief depended entirely upon the proposition that the said instrument in writing constituted a partnership, and we do not think that such proposition can be maintained.

The instrument is in form a lease. The first part of it (omitting immaterial matters) is as follows: "This indenture, made the 10th day of December, 1883, between," (naming Smith as party of the first part, and Schults and L. E. Caldwell as parties of the second part,) "witnesseth, that the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the covenants and agreements hereinafter mentioned, reserved, and contained on the part and behalf of said parties of the second part, their executors, administrators, and assigns, to be kept and performed, has granted, demised, and let, and by these presents doth grant, demise, and let, unto the said parties of the second part, all that farm, ranch, and tract of land," (here follows a description of a certain tract of land in Contra Costa county, containing 485 acres,) "for the term of three years from the first day of December, 1883, with the privilege to the said parties of the second part to keep fattening hogs on said ranch until the first day of January next succeeding the expiration of this lease." Then follow certain covenants and agreement to be performed by each of the parties. The principal agreements by the parties of the second part are that they are at stated times during the term to put certain fields in alfalfa, barley, carrots, etc., and to build certain fences, and make certain improvements,—some in the first year, some in the second year, and some in the third year, of the term,—and to manage the ranch in a farmer-like way. The plaintiff was also to furnish certain farming implements, and seed and feed, to make certain improvements, and to furnish certain materials for fencing, etc. The instrument recites that there are certain hogs belonging to plaintiff on the ranch, and provides that they are to remain the property of plaintiff, but "the increase of hogs and the profits thereon" are to be divided one-half to the party of the first part, and the other half to the parties of the second part,—sales to be made, however, only upon the "mutual consent of the parties hereto." There is also a provision about certain fowls on the ranch, "the increase, yield, and profits" of which are to be divided, one-third to go to the party of the first part. There is also a provision about alfalfa hay, which is to be baled by the parties of the second part, and put into a warehouse, or delivered at a landing, and divided equally between the parties. Mention is also made about certain horses and cattle, and some provisions made in relation to them. There are other stipulations and agreements not material to the determination of the character of the instrument. It closes with the provisions that "in case default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained on the part of said parties of the second part, their executors, administrators, and assigns, to be kept and performed," then the party of the first part may re-enter, etc.; but that, if said covenants are so performed, then said parties of the second part "shall and may at all times during said term peaceably and quietly hold and enjoy said premises without any suit, let, trouble, or hindrance of or from said party of the first part, his heirs or assigns."

This instrument certainly created a lease of the land for a term of three years, from December 10, 1883; and we cannot see upon what recognized principle plaintiff, at his own pleasure, could terminate it during the first year. His right to do so could come only from some breach of covenant by the lessees, which by the terms of the lease, or operation of law, worked a forfeiture, and gave a right of re-entry. But plaintiff did not show, or attempt to show, any such breach. The lease on its face was expressly assignable; and plaintiff offered no evidence that either the original lessees named in the instrument, or the assignee, A. P. Caldwell, failed to perform any of the things undertaken to be performed by the parties of the second part. The theory that the instrument created an ordinary partnership between the three persons, Smith, Schultz, and L. E. Caldwell, which gave to either of them the right, at his own pleasure, to end at any time the relation which the instrument created, is erroneous. It was in form and legal effect a lease for a definite term of years, and the relation which it created was that of landlord and tenant. It did not create a partnership. In the first place, neither the word "partnership" nor "partner," nor any other word or phrase ordinarily employed in written contracts of copartnership, was used. The use of such words, of course, is not essential when the whole instrument shows clearly that a partnership was meant; but their absence is significant when such intent is not clear. In the second place, the idea of a permanent lease for a definite term of years is at war with the notion of such an indeterminate and fitful a relation as that of a partnership. And in the third place, there is nothing in any of the language of the instrument that expresses or suggests the intention that plaintiff was to be a general partner in business with the defendants, or either of them, (and certainly there was no special partnership, within the provision of the Code.) It gives no power to one to bind the others; it contemplates no common liability; it does not make one the agent for the others in carrying on any business whatever; it contains no agreement, either express or implied, for the division of any losses; and there is no intimation in it that plaintiff was to be "liable to third persons for all the obligations of the partnership jointly with his copartners." Civil Code, §§ 2442, 2443, 2429, 2404.

Nor does it contain any agreement among themselves that the party of the one part should be bound to any extent for the obligations of the party of the other part. They were not to be partners, therefore, either as to third persons or inter sese. The instrument was a letting upon shares, and cannot be distinguished in principle from the one considered in Walls v. Preston, 25 Cal. 60. In that case the instrument was in form a lease for a certain term, with covenants by the lessee that he would properly cultivate the land and give to the lessor a certain share of the crops. It was there sought to "explain away" the lease by the theory that it was not indeed a partnership, but a cropping contract. The court, after an elaborate consideration of the subject, Rhodes, J., delivering the opinion, concludes as follows: "It clearly appears to us that the parties in this case intended to make a lease, and that the instrument executed by them was a lease; but its effect as such was not destroyed by their having contracted for the payment to the lessor of a portion of the specific crops to be produced, and that that covenant was an agreement to pay the rent of the premises out of the crops." And so in the case at bar the legal effect of the covenant of the lessees is simply that they will deliver as rent certain shares of the increase of certain live-stock, as well as certain shares of crops. A similar contract as to the increase of sheep was held in Robinson v. Haas, 40 Cal. 478, not to constitute a partnership. See, also, on the general subject of partnership, Wheeler v. Farmer, 38 Cal. 213; Barber v. Cazalis, 30 Cal. 98; and Smith v. Moynihan, 44 Cal. 57. There being no partnership, the judgment was therefore erroneous. If the lessees, or their assignee, broke the covenants of the lease, the respondent has a clear remedy. The order appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

1. Where lands were sold under a decree of foreclosure against two persons, and bought in by the mortgagee, and on appeal the decree was reversed as to one, the mortgagee cannot thereafter treat the original decree as valid against the latter for the purpose of retaining title under the foreclosure, and invalid for the purpose of charging interest and taxes.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Tobin & Tobin and Thos. F. Barry, for appellant. Shafter, Parker & Waterman, (Parker & Eells, of counsel,) for respondents.

MCFARLAND, J. This action was brought by plaintiff against Charles Carroll Moore and Mary Adams Moore to foreclose two certain mortgages. The complaint contained two counts, and stated two causes of action. The first was upon a promissory note for $57,500, and a mortgage upon eight different pieces or lots of land to secure it. The note and mortgage were signed by said Charles Carroll Moore, and purported to have been signed by said Mary Adams Moore, by her attorney in fact, the said Charles. The second cause of action was upon another promissory note for $7,500, and a mortgage upon the same property to secure it, both of which were signed by said Charles and by said Mary Adams Moore personally. The seven pieces of land first mentioned in said mortgage were the property solely of said Charles; the eighth was the property of said Mary alone. Mary Adams Moore answered, denying all liability on the said first cause of action, and averring that said Charles had no authority to sign her name to the note or mortgage therein named; but she made no defense as to the second cause of action on the note and mortgage for $7,500. The court rendered judgment on the 29th day of December, 1881, against the said Charles for the principal and interest of the said first note, amounting to $76,463.35; and against said Charles and said Mary for the principal and interest of said second note, amounting to $9,055.70; and decreeing a foreclosure of both of said mortgages against both said Charles and said Mary; and providing that the proceeds of the sale of said eight pieces of land should be applied first to the satisfaction of the amount found due on said first note and mortgage set up in the first count of the complaint. Mary Moore appealed, but gave no stay-bond, and plaintiff proceeded to have the property sold under the decree. All of said lots were so sold by the sheriff to plaintiff on February 20, 1882; and, no redemption having been made, they were conveyed by the sheriff to plaintiff on August 24, 1882. The lots were sold separately; the seven lots of Charles for $53,000, and the lot of Mary Moore for $20,000. The amount due at the time on the said first note and mortgage was $78,165.95. Afterwards, on November 30, 1885, this court sustained the appeal of said Mary, and adjudged that "the decree against the defendant Mary A. Moore, and the order denying her motion for a new trial, are reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings." 68 Cal. 156, 8 Pac. Rep. 824. In this court the case was treated entirely as an appeal from that part of the judgment which decreed her property to be subject to the lien of the said first mortgage for $57,500. No mention is made in the opinion of the court, or in the report of the case, of the said second mortgage for $7,500, to which she had made no defense in the court below. When the case went back to the superior court, the plaintiff filed an "amended and supplemental complaint against Mary Adams Moore," which is of a somewhat anomalous character. It commences as though it were a complaint de novo against said Mary alone upon the said second note and mortgage for $7,500, making no mention of the said first mortgage for $57,500; but it proceeds afterwards to aver the facts about the former decree of foreclosure, the sale under the decree to plaintiff, and its ownership of the eight lots through the sheriff's deed, as hereinbefore stated. No other or further decree of foreclosure is sought, but "plaintiff therefore prays the aid of the court in the premises; that the amount due to the plaintiff upon said note and mortgage be ascertained and determined; that plaintiff be allowed a reasonable counsel fee, to be fixed by the court, together with its costs and disbursements in this action; that plaintiff be credited with the total amount of such indebtedness, and be charged with $20,000, the amount for which it purchased the property; that plaintiff have judgment against the defendant Mary Adams Moore for any amount that may remain unpaid," and for such other relief, etc. To this supplemental pleading the said Mary demurred upon various grounds, and the demurrer was overruled. Shortly afterwards the said Mary died, and the defendant Francis H. Jones, having been appointed her administrator, answered, setting up all the previous history of the case. By an amendment to his answer he denied the payment by plaintiff of certain taxes and assessments, pleaded the statute of limitations, and, uniting with plaintiff in a prayer for an accounting, asked that plaintiff be accredited with the amount of the original judgment on said second note and mortgage, viz., $9,055.70, with interest from the date thereof until the date of plaintiff's said purchase of said eighth lot; that the same be deducted from the $20,000 for which said lot sold; and that defendant have judgment against plaintiff for the amount due on such accounting. The court took an accounting, and gave judgment for defendant for $12,971.61. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

It is not necessary to inquire whether plaintiff's supplemental complaint was a proper pleading, or whether the relief sought by it could be obtained against an objecting party. That point would arise only upon an appeal by defendant. Plaintiff, having sought that mode of procedure cannot now object to it. If no error has been committed in any other respect, and justice has been done between the parties upon the plan devised by plaintiff, then the judgment should stand. We see no error committed by the court against the plaintiff. Plaintiff was credited with the amount of the original judgment, $9,055.70, with interest to the date of his purchase of the land, and also with a counsel fee of $500, and the further sum of $1,168.22 for taxes which he is found to have paid. If any error was committed as to the taxes, it was in plaintiff's favor, for there was certainly no greater amount than that proved; and it is doubtful if he was entitled to any allowance for taxes or counsel fees. The amounts thus credited to plaintiff were deducted from the $20,000 for which defendant's land was sold, and defendant was given judgment for the balance, with legal interest. In this we see no error. Plaintiff's theory seems to be that it can treat the former judgment as intact for one purpose, and as no judgment at all for another purpose; that while retaining the title to defendant's land, which he obtained through the foreclosure sale in 1882, he can also consider the judgment as open for the purpose of charging interest at the conventional rate of the note, compounded monthly, down to the date of the present judgment, which was January 17, 1888. But it is evident that such a position is not tenable. When plaintiff proposed an accounting upon the theory that the foreclosure should stand, and that his title under it should remain undisturbed, the only proper basis for such accounting was the one adopted by the court.

The court allowed defendant, by an amended answer, to plead the statute of limitations, and also to deny certain averments in the complaint of taxes and assessments, after the evidence was closed; and appellant attacks these rulings as erroneous. As to the statute of limitations, it is sufficient to say that its consideration did not enter into the judgment, and that therefore it cuts no figure in the case. In regard to the taxes, we see no abuse of discretion in allowing the amendment. It was in furtherance of justice. Appellant was allowed $1,168.22 for taxes, which was more than the plaintiff, upon the evidence, and upon the theory of an accounting without a new decree of foreclosure, was entitled to. Plaintiff did not ask to introduce further evidence. There are no other points necessary to be noticed. The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

STATEMENT FOR NEW TRIAL—TIME TO SERVE—EXTENSION.

Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 659, subd. 3, provides that, if a motion for a new trial is made upon a statement of the case, the moving party must within 10 days after service of the notice, or such further time as the court may allow, prepare a draft of the statement, and serve the same or a copy therefor upon the adverse party. Held, that an order allowing 80 days to prepare a "statement on motion for a new trial" carries with it the same extension of time to serve the statement.

Action by George Bryant and Dennis A. Mullin, copartners under the firm name of Bryant & Mullin, against Adolph, Herman, and Morris Sternfeld, copartners under the firm name of Sternfeld Bros. & Co. Plaintiffs appeal.

G. E. Harpham and Smith & Murasky, for appellants. M. J. Platshek and M. S. Elsner, for respondents.

FITZGERALD, C. The transcript in this case contains two appeals,—one upon the judgment roll from a judgment rendered in favor of defendants; the other from an order dismissing plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. It appears from the record that the order appealed from was made upon the ground that the order granting to plaintiffs an extension of time for 30 days "to prepare their statement on motion for a new trial," did not extend the time to serve it. Section 1054, Code Civil Proc., under which the court or judge derives the authority to make the order for such extension, provides only for the preparation of statements, and the word "service," as there used, is expressly limited in its application to notices other than appeal. The order here made, extending the time for the purposes therein stated, is in strict compliance with the provisions of this section, and carries with it the same extension of time to serve the statement. Curtis v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 390, 11 Pac. Rep. 652; Burton v. Todd, 35 Cal. 485, 9 Pac. Rep. 663. Subdivision 3 of section 659, Code Civil Proc., upon which counsel for respondent mainly rely in support of their contention, that the order referred to did not extend the time to serve the proposed statement, has no application, as we have already shown, to an order granting an extension of time to prepare such statement, but simply provides that the moving party must within the time therein prescribed, or the time allowed by the court or judge, prepare a draft of the statement, and serve the same or a copy thereof upon the adverse party. And the record shows that the proposed statement was prepared and served upon defendants' counsel within the time fixed by the order. It follows, therefore, that as the court below erred in making the order appealed from, it should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings on the motion for a new trial. No error appearing on the judgment roll, the judgment should be affirmed, and we so advise.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; BELCHER, C. C.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS — STRIKING OUT PORTIONS — POWER OF SUPREME COURT.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 649, which provides that a bill containing the exceptions to any decision may be presented to the court or judge for settlement, and, after having been settled, shall be signed by the judge, and filed with the clerk, the supreme court has no power to strike out part of the bill settled and certified by the trial court.

2. A trial judge may amend a proposed bill of exceptions to conform to the facts, although the opposite party does not propose amendments.

In bank. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; J. P. HOGG, Judge.

Action by Hyde against Boyle and others. Defendants appeal. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 649, provides that a bill containing the exceptions to any decision may be presented to the court or judge for settlement, and after having been settled shall be signed by the judge and filed with the clerk.

Geo. H. Buck and Edward F. Fitzpatrick, for appellants. T. M. Osmont, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The appellants ask to have struck out of the printed transcript filed herein a portion of the bill of exceptions that had been settled and certified by the judge of the superior court, prior to the filing of the transcript, upon the ground "that no part of the said matter was read, referred to, or submitted to the court below upon the hearing of the motion upon which the order appealed from was made and entered;" and have presented certain affidavits in support of their motion, and of the grounds upon which it is made. We think that the subject-matter of this motion was substantially passed upon by this court in its refusal to grant the petition of the appellants "to prove an exception in this case," (Hyde v. Boyle, 86 Cal. 352, 24 Pac. Rep. 1059;) and that the reasons then given for refusing their petition are applicable to the present motion. The statute provides that a bill of exceptions shall be settled by the judge who heard or tried the cause, and, except in the single instance in which the judge "refuses to allow an exception in accordance with the facts," (Code Civil Proc. § 652,) has provided no other mode of settling the bill, and has made no provision whatever for any review of his action in settling a bill. The settlement of a bill of exceptions is one of the duties imposed upon a judge by virtue of his office, and is to be performed by him under the sanction of his official oath. It is not to be presumed that he will in any instance so far violate his official obligation as either willfully or knowingly to insert in the bill any matter that is not properly there, or exclude therefrom any matter that should be inserted. This court is not the tribunal to determine whether he has in any instance violated his duty in this respect, or from which a litigant is to seek redress for any such violation. When the bill of exceptions has been settled and allowed by the judge before whom the proceedings were had, it must, for all purposes of reviewing the action of the court, be deemed by this court to be a correct statement of what took place. If the judge has refused to allow an exception, the statute has provided a remedy by which a party may prove that exception, but it has given to this court no authority for striking out from a bill matters which are alleged not to have occurred in the court below. It would lead to endless confusion if, after the judge has solemnly settled and signed the bill, his action could be set aside, or a portion of the bill struck out, upon the affidavits of spectators or parties in interest. As was said by this court in Vance v. Superior Court, 87 Cal. 393, 25 Pac. Rep. 500: "If it be an evil that a statement of what evidence was introduced, made by a judge who presided over the trial, and who acts in his judicial character, and under his judicial oath, cannot be overcome by the contrary statement of somebody else, it must be put into the large class of evils (real or imaginary) which this court has no jurisdiction to remedy." We do not wish to be understood as holding that everything that is contained in a bill of exceptions is always to be considered by this court in reviewing the action of the court below. It may frequently happen that irrelevant matters are incorporated into the bill, and the bill itself may show upon its face that the matters therein recited were not presented to the court at the time it made its rulings, or could not have any weight in determining the correctness of such rulings. This court will consider only such matters as by the bill of exceptions itself purport to be pertinent, and to have been considered by the court below.

The fact that the respondent did not propose any amendments to the draft of the bill that had been proposed by the appellants did not preclude the judge from making the same conform to the facts. The time within which the judge may settle a bill after it has been presented to him is not fixed by statute. If no amendments are proposed, the bill is to be presented to the judge for settlement; and it is the duty of the judge, in settling the bill, to make it conform to the facts. He is not precluded from so doing by reason of the failure on the part of the opposite party to propose such amendments to the draft as will cause the same to correctly represent what transpired before him. The provision in the statute that he is "to strike out all redundant and useless matter, so that the exceptions may be presented as briefly as possible," is not a limitation upon his functions in settling the bill, but is more in the nature of a definition of the course which the judge is authorized to adopt "in settling the bill." Motion denied.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—ORAL AGREEMENT TO EXCHANGE—PART PERFORMANCE—STATUTE OF FRAUDS—MEMORANDUM.

1. In an action for specific performance, the evidence showed that defendant placed the property in the hands of an agent to sell or exchange, and by his efforts met plaintiff, and agreed orally to exchange with him. Plaintiff left a deed with the agent, but defendant refused to accept it. Held, that a delivery to the agent was not a delivery to defendant, so as to constitute part performance, and take the agreement out of the statute of frauds.

2. Where one orally agreed to convey property, and made a deed, which was not delivered, such deed cannot be treated as a memorandum of the agreement, in the absence of evidence showing that it contained the terms thereof.

3. An oral agreement for the exchange of land cannot be enforced by one whose title is defective, when the agreement was that the exchange should be made if titles were satisfactory.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; W. E. GREENE, Judge.

Geo. W. Lewis, (Ben. Morgan, of counsel,) for appellant. J. C. Plunkett, (N. B. Malville, of counsel,) for respondents.

DE HAVEN, J. This is an action to enforce the specific performance of an alleged agreement for an exchange of lands. The making of the agreement was denied by defendants. The answer alleges that defendant Nellie C. Burnette, who is the wife of the other defendant, E. T. Burnette, is the owner of the land in controversy. The evidence in the record before us shows that the defendant E. T. Burnette employed one Crane, a real-estate agent, to effect a sale or an exchange of said land, by a writing, the material part of which is as follows: "I will place this property in your hands for sale, and will pay you five per cent. commissions on the amount of sale. Price, $5,000. You to pay all advertising expenses. Or you can trade this property for property in Oakland that will be satisfactory to me. I will accept the same as cash." It appears that Crane, acting under this employment, brought the plaintiff and the defendants together, and it may be inferred from the testimony of Crane that an oral agreement was made between the parties for an exchange of their lands. It was further shown that on July 15, 1884, the plaintiff left with Crane for the defendants a deed properly signed and acknowledged by him in form conveying to Mrs. Burnette the land which he claims he was to give in exchange for that in controversy, but the defendants refused to accept this deed. It also appears that at some time during the negotiations the defendant Mrs. Burnette signed and acknowledged a deed of the land in controversy. In it the plaintiff was named as grantee, but it was never delivered, nor did Mrs. Burnette in any manner part with its possession, and she finally destroyed it. Its contents were not shown further than that it was sufficient in form, if delivered, to convey the land which it described. In addition to this, there was also introduced in evidence the following letters written by defendant Mrs. Burnette to the said Crane, in relation to the proposed contract with plaintiff: "Haywards, Cal., June 26, 1884. A. E. Crane—Dear Sir: My husband has returned, and has ascertained from the records of Alameda county there is a claim against the property you propose exchanging, belonging to Mr. Swain. The claim is known as the 'Dungan Title,' now pending in the superior court of Alameda county, and entered February 9, 1882. Therefore you can consider the trade at an end, as you both told me there was no suit over it. You can take the property off your books, as I will not sell the property through you." "Haywards, July 11, 1884. Albert E. Crane—Dear Sir: The ten days have expired in which Mr. W. B. Swain was to furnish me a good title of his property on Filbert street. There still stands on record a mortgage not released; also the Dungan title, not released. Therefore you can take the property off your books, and I will take up my deposit of $250.00, as I consider the trade at an end." Upon this evidence the plaintiff was nonsuited, and on this appeal he contends—First, that the evidence shows such a part performance by him of the oral agreement as to entitle him to its specific performance by defendants; second, that there was a sufficient memorandum in writing of the agreement to satisfy section 1624 of the Civil Code.

1. There was no part performance by plaintiff of the oral agreement, within the meaning of the rule relating to that subject. It may be conceded that, if he had conveyed his own land in accordance with the terms of such agreement, this would have been such a performance by him that a court of equity would have compelled the defendants to perform their part of the contract. Caldwell v. Carrington, 9 Pet. 86; Pom. Spec. Perf. Cont. § 134. But the evidence falls far short of showing that he conveyed to the defendant Mrs. Burnette the land which he claims he was to exchange for the land in controversy. She refused to accept the deed; and the delivery to Crane, even if unconditional, was not a delivery to her, as it does not appear that Crane was her agent for the purpose of accepting a delivery of this deed. Certainly, the written authority to effect a satisfactory exchange of her land signed by her husband, and, we may assume, ratified by her, did not constitute Crane her agent to enter into a binding contract for such exchange, or to accept a deed for her if she afterwards made a contract for the exchange of her land. By this writing there was reserved to the defendant, signing or adopting it, the right to make his or her own contract; and Crane was only authorized, so far as relates to an exchange of lands, to find some one who would make a satisfactory exchange with defendant, and in the event of his success Crane was to be allowed the same commission as on a sale for $5,000 in money, and its main purpose seems to have been to fix the compensation to which Crane would be entitled under such employment. But, in addition to this, we think the fair inference to be drawn from the evidence is that plaintiff left his deed with Crane, to be delivered to Mrs. Burnette only on condition that she executed her deed to plaintiff, and, as this condition was not performed, plaintiff's deed never took effect as a conveyance. For both of these reasons we think there was no part performance by appellant.

2. The appellant further insists, that the deed signed by the defendant Mrs. Burnette, although not operative as a conveyance because not delivered, may yet be regarded as a sufficient memorandum of the oral agreement within the meaning of section 1624 of the Civil Code. We do not think so. It is unnecessary for us to determine, at this time, whether a deed not delivered, nor intended by the party signing it as a memorandum, if otherwise sufficient, could be treated as a memorandum of an agreement for the sale of land, within the meaning of the statute, because there is nothing in the evidence to show that this writing, which lacked only delivery to constitute a deed, contained a memorandum of the terms of the agreement which plaintiff claims that he made with defendants in reference to an exchange of lands, and, unless it did, it would not satisfy the statute. It may have been sufficient in form to have operated when delivered as a conveyance, and yet have been entirely silent as to the agreement in pursuance of which it was made, and therefore insufficient as a memorandum of such agreement. Campbell v. Thomas, 42 Wis. 441; Caggar v. Lansing, 43 N. Y. 553.

3. The letters do not purport to state the terms of any completed agreement. The first, of June 26th, is simply a rejection of the proposition to make the exchange. It is apparent from this letter that the matter of an exchange had been submitted to her for consideration, and, upon examination of the records, the proposition was not accepted by her. In regard to the letter of July 11th, it may also be said that it does not state the terms of a completed agreement, such as plaintiff claims was made. It simply states that the title of plaintiff's property is not satisfactory, and that the time within which he was to make a good title had expired, and that she did not intend to pursue the matter further. And it is very clear from both of these letters that the question of plaintiff's title was under consideration and discussion at all times during the negotiation between the parties, and that until satisfied it was good the defendant did not propose to make an exchange. These letters do not furnish sufficient evidence of the agreement alleged by plaintiff to entitle him to the judgment he seeks to obtain.

4. The order refusing to modify the judgment is not an appealable order. Judgment and order affirmed.

BOUNDARIES—EVIDENCE—INTERLINEATIONS—EVIDENCE OF HANDWRITING.

1. In ejectment to recover land claimed by plaintiff to be included in his surveys of swamp and overflowed land, and by defendant as being included in another survey to him, the county surveyor who made all the original surveys, and his successor, testified that the land was in plaintiff's survey, and there was a natural monument still standing at which the surveys were begun. The surveyor employed by defendant commenced at a stake which defendant told him was the section corner, but about which he knew nothing. Held, that the evidence warranted a finding for plaintiff.

2. Where the maker and recorder of a survey testifies that interlineations appearing therein were made by him before its execution, the survey is admissible in evidence.

3. The successor of a county surveyor, having charge of the documents in the office, who testifies that he has made frequent examination of documents purporting to be in his predecessor's handwriting, is competent to testify that interlineations appearing in a survey made by his predecessor are in his handwriting.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2.

Appeal from superior court, Marin county; E. B. MAHON, Judge.

T. J. Crowley, for appellant. Hepburn Wilkins, for respondent.

FOOTE, C. This is an action in ejectment to recover possession of certain parcels of land claimed by the plaintiff. The trial was had before a jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff. Judgment was thereupon rendered, from which, and an order refusing a new trial, the defendant appeals. One ground of error claimed is that the evidence does not support the verdict. The plaintiff claimed title through certain state patents to swamp and overflowed land, surveys numbered 56 and 61, and certain meane conveyances made under those patents. The defendant claimed some of the land in controversy as being within the lines of a Mexican land grant, to which he had title, and by virtue of a certain state patent of swamp and overflowed land, survey No. 55, and by adverse possession for five years. We think the evidence sufficient to show that no such adverse possession ever took place. The real conflict in the matter was as to whether the land in controversy lay within the patents for surveys Nos. 61 and 56, or lay within the Mexican grant and the state patent for survey No. 55. The county surveyor who made all the original surveys for these patents, Mr. Easkoot, and Mr. Dodge, who succeeded him, testify that the two parcels of land last described in the complaint are within the patent for swamp land survey No. 56; and the defendant, in his original brief, at page 2, concedes as much. This being so, it cannot be said that the jury were wrong in their verdict to that extent, particularly when we come to look at the testimony for the defendant, which falls far short of satisfactorily showing that this land was within the patent for swamp-land survey No. 55. Easkoot seems to have made all the surveys of these swamp lands, and to have commenced at a certain bay tree, a natural monument, still standing, as an initial point. Dodge followed his plan in locating the boundaries on the ground. But the surveyor employed by the defendant commenced at a stake at the southwest corner of section 32, which he was told by the defendant was a section corner, but about the truth of which he knew nothing. Neither he nor the defendant satisfactorily established this as the true corner of that section; and, when Easkoot was recalled to rebut their evidence, he stated that, in making the surveys for these swamp-land patents, he never set any stake at that corner, never made any survey by reference to it, and never saw one there. In fact, the evidence did not show in any satisfactory way that this stake from which the defendant's surveyor commenced his survey to locate the line between the land embraced in patents for survey 55 and survey 56 was the true south-west corner of section 32 at all. This being so, the jury were fully warranted in finding, as they did, for the plaintiff, whose evidence as to the true line between these surveys was virtually uncontradicted. So as to the land claimed by plaintiff as being in survey 61, to which he had title, the evidence is conclusive that it was within the survey on which his patent was based. It is claimed, further, for the appellant, that certain instructions given by the court were erroneous. We have searched the transcript laboriously, and find no such instructions asked for, given, or excepted to.

The further point is made that the court erred in admitting in evidence the record of survey No. 61, because it appeared to be interlined, and no sufficient explanation given thereof. Even conceding that the objection made was sufficient, although not pointing to the particular respect in which the document was inadmissible, by stating that it was because of an interlineation, still it appears that Easkoot, the maker and recorder of the survey, showed that the interlineation was made before execution thereof by him. This was sufficient. Code Civil Proc. § 1982; Sedgwick v. Sedgwick, 56 Cal. 213.

We think, also, that the evidence of Dodge, as to the interlineation being in the handwriting of Easkoot, was admissible and proper, under the rule announced in Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 344; it being shown that Dodge was Easkoot's successor as county surveyor, and had charge of the official documents of that office, and had given frequent examination to numerous documents therein purporting to be in Easkoot's handwriting, and which Easkoot also testified as being in his handwriting. It is also urged that a certain question, viz., "In running that line in the direction that you did, did it fall north or south of the wharf?" asked by defendant's counsel of defendant, Taylor, as a witness, ought to have been allowed by the court to be answered. The defendant's counsel, in his brief, states that the question is to be found in the transcript. But there is no such question there. On page 79, at the end of what is marked as an answer, this question appears to have been put and not allowed to be answered. This jumbling up of the record is unfortunate, but, after searching through it, we have found that the question was probably asked, and an answer disallowed. But we cannot perceive that this worked any prejudice to the defendant. The defendant, the witness, was not possessed of any knowledge where the true line between surveys 55 and 56 ran, and his statement that the line he was following fell north or south of the wharf could prove nothing as to the accuracy of the line. Again, the evidence of his surveyor and himself, as to the boundaries of the survey, commencing at a stake which was not sufficiently shown to be the southwest corner of section 32, which they claimed it to be, would not have warranted the jury in finding for the defendant, as against the uncontradicted evidence of Easkoot and Dodge, as to the true lines of the surveys, even if the defendant had been allowed to state where the line he and his surveyor were running fell. We perceive no merit whatever in this appeal, and advise that the judgment and order be affirmed.

MASTER AND SERVANT—DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP—TERMINATION OF CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT.

The dissolution of a copartnership by the death of a partner terminates a contract of employment for a year between the firm and a salesman, under Civil Code Cal. § 1996, providing that every employment in which the power of the employer is not coupled with an interest in the subject, is terminated by notice to him of the death of the employer, and, if the surviving partners retain him to assist in winding up the affairs of the partnership without an express agreement, the implied contract is only for such time as his services may be needed, and at such a salary as his services may be reasonably worth.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JOHN HUNT, Judge.

Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, for appellants. Jos. Rothchild and Morris C. Baum, for respondent.

¹Petition for rehearing pending.

VANCLIFF, C. This action was brought to recover from the defendants $500 alleged to be due the plaintiff, as salary for his services as salesman for Elfelt & Co., during the month of December, 1886. The answer of defendants denies that plaintiff was employed by Elfelt & Co. or by the defendants for any part of the month of December, 1886, and denies that he rendered any services to Elfelt & Co. or to defendants during that month. The plaintiff had judgment for the sum demanded, from which, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. The material facts are: (1) That on January 1, 1884, and until June 14, 1886, Elfelt & Co., a copartnership composed of A. B. Elfelt, Alfred P. Elfelt, S. Goldsmith, George A. Kohn, and Philip Kohn, were engaged in the wholesale clothing business in San Francisco, generally carrying a stock of merchandise of the value of $600,000 to $700,000. (2) That prior to April, 1884, the plaintiff had been employed by the firm as traveling salesman, at a salary of $350 per month and his expenses. (3) That in April, 1884, he was employed as city salesman, at a salary of $6,000 a year, he paying his own expenses, and the increased salary to commence from January 1, 1884. (4) No other express agreement was ever made as to salary, or as to the length of time he should be employed; but he continued in the employment by tacit consent of all parties, and was paid the same salary, until June 14, 1886, when Alfred P. Elfelt died. (5) On the death of Alfred P. Elfelt, the surviving partners continued the business for the mere purpose of winding it up, and plaintiff continued in their employment, without any new express agreement, until some time in October, 1886, when they notified him that his services would not be required after November following. Plaintiff continued in the service through the month of November, and on December 1st offered and claimed the right to continue until the end of the year; but defendants then discharged him according to previous notice. After his discharge he reported himself as ready for work from time to time, and was ready and willing to continue his services throughout the month of December; but he was told there was nothing for him to do, and his services were not accepted during any part of that month. (6) On December 1, 1886, the stock of the concern was so much reduced that they could not supply their customers with the assortments ordinarily required, and most of the remnants of stock were sold at auction during that month and January following; and the business was entirely closed out in January, 1887. As conclusions of law the court found—"First, that said contract of employment between plaintiff and the copartnership of A. B. Elfelt & Co. was an entire one, by the year, and not otherwise, to-wit, from January 1, 1884, to January 1, 1885; second, that said contract was renewed by consent of the parties thereto on the 1st day of January, 1885, and again on the first day of January, 1886, and was in full force and effect during the entire month of December, 1886; third, that said defendants, as surviving partners of said copartnership, assumed said contract, and all obligations arising thereunder, and during the month of December, 1886, were guilty of a breach of the terms thereof without cause or right."

This third conclusion of law is also found as a fact; but, as there is no evidence that the surviving partners assumed any obligation not devolved upon them by law, it must have been intended as a mere conclusion of law, and, as such, may be correct as to all obligations not dissolved by the dissolution of the copartnership. There is no finding or evidence of any copartnership agreement as to continuing the business, nor as to the mode of winding up the business, after a dissolution by death of one of the copartners. Appellants contend that the term for which plaintiff's employment was renewed, on the 1st day of January, 1886, (one year,) was terminated by the death of Alfred P. Elfelt, and the consequent dissolution of the copartnership on the 14th day of June, 1886, and I think this point should be sustained. No doubt the contract for a year's service was presumptively renewed on the 1st day of January, 1885, and again on the 1st day of January, 1886, by implied consent of the parties, (Civil Code, § 2012;) but the dissolution of the copartnership by the death of Alfred P. Elfelt (Id. § 2450) dissolved the contract, (Wood, Mast. & S. 165; Whart. Cont. § 322; Civil Code, §§ 1996, 1997;¹ Tasker v. Shepherd, 6 Hurl. & N. 575; Farrow v. Wilson, L. R. 4 C. P. 744.) The death of Alfred P. Elfelt extinguished the copartnership and business of the copartnership in which the plaintiff was employed. Upon the dissolution of the copartnership, the law devolved upon the surviving partners the power and duty to "settle the affairs of the partnership without delay." Code Civil Proc. § 1585. If deemed advisable, and for the interest of the concern, they might have sold the entire partnership stock of goods at auction or otherwise within a month after the dissolution; but it was within their discretionary power to continue to dispose of the stock to the customers of the concern in the ordinary way, if that was deemed more beneficial to the interest of all parties concerned, and for that purpose to employ the necessary salesmen and other agents. So far as the plaintiff served the surviving partners, he was by implication newly employed by them to assist in settling the affairs of the extinct copartnership. For this employment, in the absence of special agreement, he was entitled to such compensation only as his services were reasonably worth. They paid him $500 per month, and there is no complaint that this was not the full value of his services. It was neither their duty nor within their lawful power to retain and pay him a salary a single day after they considered his services unnecessary and unprofitable to the business of settling the affairs of the copartnership. Civil Code, §§ 2458, 2462, inclusive. I think the judgment should be reversed, and that the trial court should be directed to enter judgment for the defendants upon the findings.

We concur: FOOTE, C.; FITZGERALD, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment is reversed, and the court below directed to enter judgment for defendants upon the findings.

PATERSON, J., (concurring.) I am fully satisfied with the reasons stated by Commissioner VANCLIEF, and with his conclusion. It is a general rule that death does not absolve a man from his contracts, but there are exceptions as well settled as the rule itself. Contracts of a purely personal nature do not survive. An executor as such cannot maintain a suit or be sued for breach of promise. The death of a servant within the term of hiring discharges the contract, and no action can be maintained against his executors for its non-performance. The death of the plaintiff within the year would have been a legal excuse from the further performance of his contract, and the effect of death upon the survivor must be mutual. The defendants are prevented by the act of God and the operation of law from continuing the partnership affairs. There are cases which hold that the dissolution of a firm does not discharge the contract, but they are cases in which the dissolution resulted from the act of the parties. The question whether damages can be recovered depends upon the question whether the dissolution resulted from the act of God and the operation of the law, or from the act of the parties.

EJECTMENT—TITLE BY JUDICIAL SALES—ABATEMENT—ANOTHER ACTION PENDING.

1. One who takes a conveyance, before expiration of the time for redemption, from the purchaser at a sale under execution, and afterwards receives a deed from the sheriff, acquires a perfect title.

2. The pendency of an action of ejectment by one having the equitable title under a conveyance by a purchaser at a judicial sale before expiration of the time for redemption is not a bar to another action by him after acquiring the legal title by a deed from the sheriff.

3. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a purchaser of land at a sheriff's sale, or his grantees, until delivery of the sheriff's deed.

4. The fact that before the purchaser at a sheriff's sale, or his grantees, has received a deed from the sheriff, a person claiming title through a conveyance from the judgment debtor has entered into possession and made valuable improvements, without objection by the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, or his grantees, is not sufficient to constitute an equitable estoppel against the latter.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Charles B. Younger, for appellant. Julius Lee, for respondents.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover possession of 16.73 acres of land described by metes and bounds, and situate in Santa Cruz county. Defendant Eugene Flynn disclaims all interest and possession. Defendant Patrick Flynn denies the allegations of the complaint; alleges title in himself; alleges that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of sections 312, 318, and 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure; "that another action is pending between the same parties, asking for the same relief; that for a long time prior to November 12, 1884, defendant's grantor was seised in fee and possessed of said tract of land, and upon said day she transferred her interest therein to defendant, who thereupon entered into the actual possession of said land, and ever since that time has had and now has the actual, exclusive, notorious, and adverse possession thereof, against all the world, claiming the same in his own right, and during said time has paid all the taxes assessed thereon." Defendant also sets out facts which he claims constitute an equitable estoppel against plaintiff. As conclusions of law, the court found "that defendant and his grantor had been in the adverse possession of the land for more than five years prior to the commencement of the action; that plaintiff was not the owner, and was not entitled to the possession, thereof; that the action is barred by reason of the pendency of the former action; that plaintiff is estopped," etc. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. Plaintiff and defendant claimed title from a common source. Plaintiff's title rests upon a sheriff's deed based upon a judgment and execution against Mary J. Roache, who was originally seised of the property in fee.

1. It is conceded that the proceedings of the sheriff in selling the tract of land under execution were valid; that Edward Briody was the purchaser at such sale, and the certificate of sale was issued to him December 13, 1873. Briody conveyed to Margaret Curn, who was a grantor of plaintiff. Defendant claims title by virtue of a quit-claim deed from Mary J. Roache, dated November 13, 1884. The court found that Robert Orton, as ex-sheriff of Santa Cruz county, upon May 28, 1888, made a deed to Edward Leonard, based upon the aforesaid execution and sale of this tract of land. Leonard at that time was the equitable owner of the land, under mesne conveyances from Briody. The court further found that the deed from Briody to Curn was made June 11, 1874, and prior to the expiration of the time for redemption. The fact that the deed was made prior to the expiration of the time for redemption is immaterial, for it operated to transfer Briody's interest in the property, and was equivalent to an assignment of the certificate of sale. In Page v. Rogers, 31 Cal. 301, Justice SAWYER, after an exhaustive examination of the law pertaining generally to this matter, held that the estate of a purchaser of realty, at a judicial sale, may be seized and sold under execution, and that, too, prior to the expiration of the time for re demption. He says: "If a sale of a purchaser's interest after the time for redemption expires operates as an assignment of the sheriff's certificate of sale, a sale before the time expires must have the same operation." To the same effect is Green v. Clark, Id. 591; Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 244, 17 Pac. Rep. 193. Upon May 28, 1888, Edward Leonard, claiming the property through mesne conveyances from Briody, the time for redemption having long since expired, and being the assignee of the certificate of sale by reason of these conveyances, certainly had a perfect equitable title to the realty as against Mary J. Roache, the judgment debtor, and all parties having notice of these matters, and was entitled to a deed of the property from the sheriff.

The deed of the sheriff, dated May 28, 1888, conveyed to him the dry legal title, which, in conjunction with his equity, gave him a perfect title, which he passed by conveyance to his grantee, the plaintiff here.

2. We will now examine the conclusion of the court "that there is another action pending between these parties involving the same subject-matter." In a case such as we have under investigation here, where, in addition to the defense of abatement by reason of the pendency of another action, the defendant relies upon other defenses, which go directly to the merits of the cause, it would seem to be the better practice for the trial court to require the defendant to present his evidence upon his plea in abatement at the opening of his defense; for, if proven to be meritorious, it would in many cases save much useless labor and great expense in litigating other defenses. In addition to finding favorably to the defendant upon his plea in abatement, the court found that the plaintiff had no title, and was not entitled to the possession, that the plaintiff was estopped, and that the defendant had gained title by adverse possession, and proceeded to pass final judgment upon the merits of the action. The defendant, by his answer, asked that this action abate by reason of the pendency of a prior action. The court found that such action was pending, and instead of abating this action, by reason of such fact, for all practical purposes, it proceeded to abate the prior action by adjudicating upon all matters involved therein. It would be an absurdity for the trial court to hold that the action should abate, and then proceed at once to try it upon its merits, and render final judgment. This proposition needs no authority to support it; but Larco v. Clements, 36 Cal. 134, and Cou-brough v. Adams, 70 Cal. 379, 11 Pac. Rep. 634, are directly in point. In the former action between these parties, after the plaintiff had presented his evidence to the court and rested, upon motion of the defendant he was nonsuited and immediately thereafter filed the complaint in this action. Respondent's contention, that that action is now pending, cannot be sustained in the face of the provisions of section 1049 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also, if we may be allowed to speak de hors the record, in face of the fact that that case is now pending before us under final submission, and ripe for decision. Conceding that in all other respects these two actions are identical, yet the finding of the court in this regard must be set aside, because appellant acquired the legal title to the land in litigation after the commencement of the first action. A plaintiff may have two suits against the same defendant for the recovery of the possession of the same land, pending at the same time, if the second is brought on a title acquired after the commencement of the first. Vance v. Olinger, 27 Cal. 358; Mann v. Rogers, 35 Cal. 318; Larco v. Clements, 36 Cal. 132; Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 368. The finding of the court, therefore, that another action was pending between these parties, etc., is not supported by the evidence, and is erroneous; but this finding upon the question of abatement, being erroneous, presents the anomalous proposition that for that reason, perchance, the judgment should be affirmed, for we are now compelled to examine respondent's defenses to the merits of the cause.

3. Plaintiff's grantor, as we have already seen, was not possessed of the legal title to this tract of land until he received the deed from the sheriff, May 28, 1888. He had no right of entry until that time, and it was only at that time that his cause of action accrued. The statute of limitations does not begin to run until the cause of action has accrued. Collins v. Driscoll, 69 Cal. 550, 11 Pac. Rep. 244. If he had no right of entry until 1888, it would be a harsh rule to hold that a title by adverse possession was undergoing the process of creation against him prior to that time; yet there are some reasons and also authority from other states supporting such rule of law. Pratt v. Pratt, 96 U. S. 704. We will not enter into a detailed discussion of this question, owing to the fact that it is essentially a rule of property, and therefore it is of vast importance that the law as heretofore laid down by this court should be deemed unquestioned and conclusive. "The statute of limitations does not commence running against a purchaser of land at a sheriff's sale until the sheriff's deed has been delivered to the purchaser." Jefferson v. Wendt, 51 Cal. 573. For the foregoing reasons we deem it unnecessary to enter into a detailed examination of the evidence upon which the defendant relies to create his title by reason of an adverse possession for the period of five years.

4. The facts that defendant relied upon to constitute an estoppel, as shown by his answer, are: "That shortly after his entry upon this tract of land he placed valuable improvements thereon. That at that time plaintiff and his grantors well knew that he was making such improvements, and claimed the land as his own, and they did not object to the making of such improvements; nor did they, or any one of them, make known to him that they claimed any interest in said land." The court found in conformity with the foregoing allegations, and, in addition, found that, at the time, plaintiff and his grantors knew their title, and that it was the same at the commencement of the action. Neither the facts alleged nor the facts found are sufficient to constitute an equitable estoppel. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 279. Let the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

EJECTMENT—EVIDENCE OF TITLE—POSSESSION.

Prior possession of plaintiff, or parties through whom he claims for many years, is sufficient evidence of title to support ejectment.

Department 1. Appeal from superior court, Santa Cruz county; F. J. McCANN, Judge.

Charles B. Younger, for appellant. Julius Lee, for respondent.

GAROUTTE, J. This is an action to recover the possession of a tract of land in Santa Cruz county. Plaintiff appeals to this court from a judgment of nonsuit rendered against him. His complaint was in the ordinary form, and the evidence upon which the trial court acted in granting the motion for nonsuit was as follows: The tract of land which forms the subject of this litigation was a part of the Rancho San Andreas. Upon August 18, 1873, by partition proceedings, the tract in dispute was set apart to Mary J. Roache in fee. Upon December 13, 1873, it was sold by the sheriff of Santa Cruz county under and by virtue of an execution against her to Edward Briody, who received a certificate of sale thereof, containing the usual recitals. Upon June 12, 1874, Edward Briody conveyed it by grant, bargain, and sale deed to Margaret Curn. Upon January 22, 1880, it was conveyed in the same manner by John Curn and Margaret Curn to Edward Leonard. Upon December 19, 1887, it was conveyed by Edward Leonard and Mary E. Leonard to James Joseph C. Leonard. Upon January 13, 1888, it was conveyed by the above-named grantee to the plaintiff in this action. From June 12, 1874, until some time in 1886, plaintiff and his grantors were in the possession of the tract of land in dispute, claiming title to the same. Defendant's answer denied the ownership of plaintiff, and set up title and possession in himself. Defendant's motion for a nonsuit was made and granted upon the grounds that plaintiff had not shown any legal title in himself, either paper title or by adverse possession, or any other title. At the time Edward Briody conveyed the property, he had no title other than a certificate of sale issued by the sheriff under an execution sale of the property. Under such circumstances the legal title remained in the judgment debtor, and Briody had an equitable estate in the lands, conditional, but which would become a perfect equity upon the expiration of the time allowed by law for redemption. Page v. Rogers, 31 Cal. 301. Owing to the views we hold upon another branch of the case, it will not be necessary to pass upon the ruling of the court refusing to admit in evidence the deed from the sheriff based upon the certificate of sale.

The possession required by a plaintiff, in order to recover in ejectment, where his documentary evidence is lacking, does not go to the extent demanded in order to ripen an adverse possession into legal title. "It is incumbent on the plaintiff in ejectment to prove the proper conveyances from a party having the title. If the conveyance is from a party in peaceable possession, claiming title at the time it was executed, that is sufficient; for possession is prima facie evidence of title." Tyler, Ej. p. 541. In Morton v. Folger, 15 Cal. 283, Chief Justice FIELD used the following language in the opinion of the court: "But, aside from all considerations of the grant, the evidence was prima facie sufficient to go to the jury on the ground of the prior possession shown in Sutter. * * * As prior possession in a plaintiff or his grantors is of itself sufficient to warrant a recovery, it would be strange if an unsuccessful attempt to add to it the additional weight of documentary evidence should operate to destroy its original and legitimate effect." The same eminent jurist says in Nagle v. Macy, 9 Cal. 427. "It is the settled doctrine of the law, repeatedly affirmed by this court, that the prior possession of the plaintiff, or parties through whom he claims, is sufficient evidence of title to support the action of ejectment." Foot v. Murphy, 72 Cal. 104, 13 Pac. Rep. 163. When plaintiff proved that he and his grantors had been in the possession of this tract of land for many years, and up to within a short time prior to the commencement of this action, claiming title thereto, under conveyances from their respective grantors, he established a prima facie case which entitled him to the possession, and the motion for a nonsuit should have been denied. Let the judgment be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

FAY v. PACIFIC IMP. CO. (No. 13,350.)¹

INNKEEPER'S LIABILITY—LOSS BY FIRE—GUESTS—BOARDERS.

1. Under Civil Code Cal. § 1859, making an innkeeper liable for the loss of personal property placed by his guests under his care, "unless occasioned by an irresistible superhuman cause," a loss occurring by a fire which originated in the battery room of an hotel cannot be considered occasioned by an "irresistible superhuman cause."

2. One who keeps a house for the entertainment of all who choose to visit it, and extends a general invitation to the public to become guests, is an innkeeper, and liable as such, though the house is situated on inclosed grounds.

3. A guest at a public inn may retain personal custody of necessary wearing apparel; and jewelry worn daily by her need not be deposited with the innkeeper, when not in use, to make him liable for its loss by fire.

4. Where one went to a public inn, and was assigned a room, the fact that she inquired as to the price of room and board is not sufficient to show that she was received as a boarder, and not as a guest.

Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Monterey county; JOHN K. ALEXANDER, Judge.

Gell & Morehouse, for appellant. D. M. Delmas, for respondent.

DE HAVEN, J. The plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant for damages occasioned by the loss of her jewelry, wearing apparel, and other articles of personal property consumed by fire at the burning of the Hotel Del Monte, April 1, 1887, of which the defendant was at that time the proprietor. The court below found that the Hotel Del Monte was at the date named a public inn, and that plaintiff was a guest therein. On this appeal the defendant claims that the evidence does not sustain these findings; and also that the burning of the hotel was an irresistible superhuman cause for which it is not liable, and that it is not, in any event, liable for plaintiff's diamonds and other jewelry, because not deposited in defendant's safe.

1. An inn is a house which is held out to the public as a place where all transient persons who come will be received and entertained as guests for compensation,—an hotel. In Wintermute v. Clarke, 5 Sandf. 247, an "inn" is defined as a public house of entertainment for all who choose to visit it, and this definition was quoted with approval by this court in Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 596. The fact that the house is open for the public, that those who patronize it come to it upon the invitation which is extended to the general public, and without any previous agreement for accommodation, or agreement as to the duration of their stay, marks the important distinction between an hotel or inn and a boarding-house. This difference is thus stated in Schouler on Bailments: "An inn is a house where the keeper holds himself out as ready to receive all who may choose to resort thither and pay an adequate price for the entertainment, while the keeper of a boarding-house reserves the choice of comers and the terms of accommodation, contracting specially with each customer, and most commonly arranging for long periods and a definite abode." Schouler, Bailm. p. 253. We think that the evidence in this case is full and complete to the point that the Hotel Del Monte was a public inn. It not only had a name indicating its character as such, but it was also shown that it was open to all persons who have a right to demand entertainment at a public house; that it solicited public patronage by advertising, and in the distribution of its business cards, and kept a public register in which its guests entered their names upon arrival, and before they were assigned rooms; that the hotel, at its own expense, ran a coach to the railroad station for the purpose of conveying its patrons to and from the hotel; that it had its manager, clerks, waiters, and in its interior management all the ordinary arrangements and appearances of an hotel, and the prices charged were for board and lodging. These facts were certainly sufficient to justify the court in finding, as it did, that the appellant was an innkeeper. Krohn v. Sweeney, 2 Daly, 200. Nor was the force of this evidence in anywise modified by the fact that the hotel was not immediately upon a highway, or that the grounds upon which it stood were inclosed, and the gates closed at night. The location of the hotel, the extent of the grounds surrounding it, and the manner in which these grounds were improved, and reserved for the exclusive use and enjoyment of those who patronized it, doubtless made the hotel more attractive to those who chose to make a transient resort of it, but did not convert it into a mere boarding-house. An hotel is none the less one because in some respects it may be conducted differently or have more attractions than other public hotels, so long as it is held out to the public as a place for the entertainment of all transient persons who may have occasion to patronize it. "Modes of entertainment alter with the fashion of the age, and to preserve a clear definition is not easy. It is not wayfarers alone, or travelers from a distance, that at the present day give character to an inn; the point being rather that people resort to the house habitually, no matter whence coming or whither going, as for transient lodging and entertainment." Schouler, Bailm. p. 249.

2. The evidence shows that the plaintiff was a guest, and not a boarder. The fact that upon her arrival, and before being assigned to her room she ascertained what she would have to pay for the room and board, is not sufficient of itself to show that she was not received as a guest. Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 597; Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, Jalle v. Cardinal, 35 Wis. 118; Hall v. Pike, 100 Mass. 495, Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 417. The Del Monte being a public hotel, in the absence of evidence showing that plaintiff went there as a boarder, the presumption would be that she went there as a guest. Hall v. Pike, supra. Not only does the evidence fail to overthrow this presumption, but the testimony of the plaintiff shows that she was there as a mere temporary sojourner, without any agreement as to the time she should stay, and with only the intention on her part of resting a week or two, and then proceeding to the east. She obtained no reduction of price in consideration of an agreement to remain a definite time, or as a boarder; nor was there anything said from which it could be inferred that there was any understanding between her and the defendant that she was to be received as a boarder, and not as a guest.

3. Under section 1859 of the Civil Code, an innkeeper is liable for the loss of personal property placed by his guests under his care, "unless occasioned by an irresistible superhuman cause, by a public enemy, by the negligence of the owner, or by the act of some one he brought into the inn." In this case the loss was occasioned by the burning of the hotel, and the origin of the fire is not shown further than that it broke out in one of the rooms in which there was nothing except the batteries which supplied the bells with electricity. Under this state of facts the defendant is liable. Hulett v. Swift, 33 N. Y. 571. A fire thus occurring cannot be considered an "irresistible superhuman cause," within the meaning of section 1859 of the Civil Code.

The words "irresistible superhuman cause" are equivalent in meaning to the phrase "the act of God," and refer to those natural causes the effects of which cannot be prevented by the exercise of prudence, diligence, and care, and the use of those appliances which the situation of the party renders it reasonable that he should employ. 1 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 174. A loss arising from an accidental fire is not caused by the act of God, unless the fire was started by lightning or some superhuman agency. Miller v. Navigation Co., 10 N. Y. 431; Railroad Co. v. Sawyer, 69 Ill. 285.

4. The court finds that the property lost was such as was needed for the present personal use of the plaintiff. We cannot say that the evidence does not support this finding. It certainly cannot be said that jewelry worn by a woman daily must, when not actually upon her person, be deposited with the innkeeper in order to make him responsible for its loss in the inn. If worn daily, it does not cease to be needed for present personal use, when its possessor lays it aside upon retiring for the night. Nor is it necessary, in order to render the innkeeper liable, that the property should have been delivered into his exclusive personal possession. "The guest may retain personal custody of his goods within the inn, as of his trunk and its contents, his wearing apparel and other articles in his room, and any jewelry or valuables carried or worn about his person, without discharging the innkeeper from responsibility." Jalie v. Cardinal, 35 Wis. 126. We have examined the other points made by appellant, but do not think they call for special discussion. The rule which makes an innkeeper liable for the value of the property of his guest, in case of its loss by fire, may at first thought be deemed a harsh one; but the loss must fall somewhere, and section 1859 of the Civil Code provides upon whom it should properly fall, and the innkeeper's liability, in this respect, is one of the burdens pertaining to the business in which he is engaged, and in view of which it must be supposed that he regulates his charges. Judgment and order affirmed.

JUDGMENT OF DEPARTMENT—REHEARING IN BANK—EFFECT.

A motion before one department of the supreme court, to set aside a sale of real property, will be dismissed, without prejudice to its renewal, where the judgment of that department on which it rests has been set aside, and a hearing in bank ordered.

Department 2. Motion before supreme court.

Victor Montgomery, for appellants.
Ray Billingsby, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause is pending before this department upon a motion to set aside the sale of certain real property; but as the judgment in this court upon which said motion rests has been set aside, and a hearing in bank ordered, the motion is dismissed without prejudice to its renewal, if the circumstances under which it was made again occur.

CONTRACTS—PAROL EVIDENCE—PRIOR CONVERSATIONS.

D. M. Delmas, for appellants. Louis Lee and King, Rogers & Lindley, for respondent.

TEMPLE, C. This is the defendant's second appeal. 70 Cal. 608, 12 Pac. Rep. 778. It is from the judgment and an order refusing them a new trial, upon a bill of exceptions, wherein are stated certain rulings, admitting evidence against the defendants, and claimed to be erroneous. The action is for the specific performance of a contract alleged to have been made in writing by Mathew Tarpey, the ancestor of the defendants. It is charged that Tarpey induced plaintiff by fraudulent representations to accept a deed for a portion of the premises, under the belief that it conveyed the whole. This action, in effect, to reform the deed. Defendants admit a parol contract for the premises conveyed by Tarpey, and deny that any other contract was made. The plaintiff claimed that the contract was executed in duplicate, each party retaining one, and that his copy was surrendered to Tarpey, and destroyed when he received the deed. The issue tried was whether there was a written contract, and, if so, as to its contents. The alleged contract was in May, 1867. The deed was delivered and received as performance in October, 1868. Plaintiff built a house and went upon the land to live in 1871, and claims to have had possession of the whole tract ever since. The tract comprised about 400 acres, was evidently much of it unsuitable for cultivation, and was not inclosed. It does not appear whether there was any improvement or cultivation upon the part now in dispute. Mathew Tarpey died in 1873. The line between the part agreed to be conveyed and that retained was not fenced until 1879, shortly before the commencement of this litigation.

The testimony objected to is the same deposition, same objections to which were considered on the last appeal, and respondent claims that that decision has become the law of the case. To this it is sufficient to reply that the objections are not the same. Depositions are taken subject to all legal exceptions, except as to the form of the interrogatory, and when read on the retrial parties were at liberty to interpose new objections. The witness, having stated that plaintiff and Tarpey went to look at the land while negotiations were in progress, was asked: "Did you hear any conversation between them after they returned that day? and, if so, state fully what it was." It was objected to as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and that negotiations and conversations preceding the execution of the written contract were merged in it, and that it did not purport to call for the contents of the writing. Plaintiff's counsel then stated that they desired to prove by it the contents of the bond, which was in the possession of the defendants, and beyond their control, and promised to account for its non-production. The objections were renewed and overruled, defendants excepting. The witness then proceeded to detail the conversation between Tarpey and plaintiff, in response to numerous direct questions, explicitly calling for such testimony, all of which were duly objected to and exceptions reserved. For example: That Nicholson said he was to pay $1,500 in wagons, etc. "That he bought this piece of land from Mr. Tarpey, running from a certain corner of the San Juan road,—corners with Juan Anser,—running down San Juan road to a picket fence; thence up to Castro line, corner of Castro; thence cross to the three stakes; thence back to beginning,—being the land in dispute,—for $1,500." That Tarpey said there was wood enough on it to pay for it, that the spring was included, and was worth more than all the ranches around there, etc. This evidence was offered and received expressly to prove the contents of the writing, which the witness stated was made at that time, and was all composed of remarks previous to, or at best contemporaneous with, the execution of the writing. It was clearly incompetent.

The question on the former appeal was, apparently, whether, when the deposition was read, the loss of the original had been sufficiently proven. The court evidently misapprehended the facts of the case. It seems to have supposed that Mathew Tarpey was the defendant, and had in his possession a duplicate of the writing. He had been dead about seven years before the action was commenced. There is no evidence which tends to show that the bond was ever in the possession of the defendants, who are the heirs of Mathew Tarpey. Apparently, too, the court overlooked section 1855, Code Civil Proc., which expressly requires reasonable notice to a party, before his failure to produce the writing will justify oral testimony of its contents. In Goldman v. Davis, 23 Cal. 256, this court said: "The law deems all such stipulations merged in the writing, which, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, is treated as the exclusive medium of ascertaining the agreement to which the parties bound themselves." To the same effect is section 1625, Civil Code. There is no claim of mistake or fraud in regard to the written agreement. It is assumed that it correctly stated the contract. The final agreement may have differed widely from propositions made during negotiations. The parties may both have been mistaken in regard to whether the agreed boundaries would include the spring. By-standers were quite likely to have misunderstood the agreement. The material question was as to the language of the written contract. The final agreement and negotiations preceding it throw a very uncertain light upon that issue. Whether lost or not, there can be no evidence, in the absence of mistake or fraud, of the intention of the parties, other than the written instrument itself. The rights of the parties must be ascertained from its terms. Section 1856, Code Civil Proc. The Code expressly provides, in case of lost instruments, for oral evidence of its contents. Sections 1855, 1870, subd. 14. Evidence of the character received in this case imposes upon the court the construction of the contract by the witness. In U. S. v. Britton, 2 Mason, 264, Mr. Justice Story remarked: "If no such copy exists, the contents may be proved by parol evidence, by witnesses who have seen and read it, and can speak pointedly and clearly to its tenor and contents." The precise question was decided in Taylor v. Riggs, 1 Pet. 591. Chief Justice MARSHALL said: "This not being an action for deceit and imposition, but on a written contract, the right of the plaintiff to recover is measured precisely by that contract, and the secondary evidence must prove it as laid in the declaration. The conversation which preceded the agreement forms no part of it; nor are the propositions or representations which were made at the time, but not introduced into the written contract, to be taken into view in construing the instrument itself. Had the written paper been produced, neither party could have been permitted to show his inducements to make it, or to substitute his understanding of it, for the agreement itself. If he was drawn into it by misrepresentation, that circumstance might furnish him with a different action, but cannot affect this. * * * "When a written contract is to be proved, not by itself, but by parol testimony, no vague, uncertain recollection concerning its stipulations ought to supply the place of the written instrument itself. The substance of the agreement ought to be proved satisfactorily; and, if that cannot be done, the party is in the condition of every other suitor in court who makes a claim which he cannot support. When parties reduce their contract to writing, the obligations and rights of each are described and limited by the instrument itself. The safety which is expected from them would be much impaired if they could be established upon uncertain and vague impressions made by a conversation antecedent to the reduction of the agreement." See, also, Vincent v. Cole, Moody & M. 258; Dennis v. Barber, 6 Serg. & R. 426. We think the judgment and order should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

WE CONCUR: BELCHER, C. C.; VANCLIEF, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial ordered.

EJECTMENT—INSTRUCTIONS—AGREED LINE.

1. In ejectment, where defendant claims by virtue of the statute of limitations, and also by reason of an alleged settlement of the line between him and plaintiff by their respective grantors, failing which defenses there is no question of plaintiff's right to the land, it is not error to instruct that plaintiff is entitled to recover, unless defendant shows title in one of the ways pleaded, and that the fact that he has in good faith made improvements on the land in controversy cannot affect the verdict.

2. An instruction that the agreed line claimed by defendant must have been "distinctly agreed on" is not misleading, as impliedly excluding evidence to prove the agreed line from the acts, situation, acquiescence, and relation of the parties.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Mendocino county; R. MCGARVEY, Judge.

Yell & Seawell, for appellant. J. A. Cooper and T. L. Carothers, for respondent.

BELCHER, C.C. This is the second appeal in this case. The decision on the first appeal is reported in 76 Cal. 476, 18 Pac. Rep. 604, and the facts involved in the case are there very fully stated. The new trial again resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff, from which, and from an order refusing a new trial, defendant appeals. The question in controversy was as to the true location of the line dividing the lands of plaintiff and defendant. The defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, and then alleged that, while the line was uncertain and in dispute, the grantors of plaintiff and defendant agreed upon and established the line claimed by defendant as the true line, and erected and maintained a fence thereon; that they and their successors in interest thereafter, till the commencement of this action, acquiesced in the line so agreed upon and established, and respectively held and claimed possession up to the same. The defendant further, "as a set-off for all damages and rents claimed by the plaintiff, or that may be recovered by him," alleged that he had placed certain permanent improvements upon the disputed strip of land, and that in the erection of the improvements he acted in good faith, and believed he had a good title to the said strip. At the trial the evidence upon most of the issues raised by the answer was conflicting. The court gave to the jury eight instructions at the request of the plaintiff, and six at the request of the defendant. These instructions state the law applicable to each party's theory of the case, and should be read together; when so read, they seem to cover the whole case, and to be clear and explicit. The only points made in support of the appeal are that the court erred in giving the sixth and seventh instructions asked by the plaintiff, and in modifying one of the instructions asked by the defendant. The sixth instruction was to the effect that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, unless the defendant had acquired title to the land in dispute in some one of the ways set up in his answer, "and the fact that defendant has placed improvements upon the property in dispute should not make any difference with the verdict you should give in the case." We see no error in this instruction. It was not and is not questioned that the plaintiff owned the land, unless the defendant had acquired title to it as against him; and, if he did own it, certainly his action could not be defeated by a showing that defendant had placed improvements upon it. The seventh instruction was, in substance, that the burden was upon the defendant to establish an agreed line by parol testimony, and that, unless the line claimed by defendant was distinctly agreed upon by the adjacent owners, the jury could not find in favor of the defendant, upon the theory of an agreed line. It is claimed that the word "distinctly," as used in the instruction, "was calculated to mislead the jury in this: that they were impliedly told no parol evidence was admissible to prove an agreed line from the facts, situation, acquiescence, and relations of the parties." We do not understand this to be the effect of the instruction. In the eighth instruction asked by the plaintiff, and in the third asked by the defendant, the court very clearly told the jury when and under what circumstances a division line would become established by the acquiescence of the parties. Here the court was speaking of a line claimed to have been established by an oral agreement, and the jury were simply told that, to make such an agreement effective, it must have been distinctly made; that is, the minds of the parties must have fully met. In this we see no error prejudicial to the defendant. Defendant's instruction, which was modified and given, was upon the subject of estoppel. Other instructions upon that subject were given at his request, which very fully stated the law applicable to the case. The instruction complained of did not state all the elements or conditions necessary to constitute an estoppel in pais, and it might properly have been refused. As modified, we do not think it misled the jury or prejudiced the defendant. The judgment and order, in our opinion, should be affirmed, and we so advise.

We concur: VANCLIEF, C.; TEMPLE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

INSOLVENCY—DISCHARGE—OPPOSITION—PREFERENCES.

1. The insolvent act of California, §§ 49, 55, declare void "fraudulent preferences contrary to provisions of this act," preferences "made in contemplation of becoming insolvent," and preferences "made within one month before filing a petition in insolvency." Held, that allegations by a creditor that an insolvent made certain preferences more than a year before the filing of his petition, knowing himself then to be insolvent, do not show valid grounds of opposition to the insolvent's discharge, and hence the insolvent is not required to answer or demur thereto, under section 50.

2. Nor is it a valid ground of opposition that opponent's debt was created by a fraud of the insolvent, and while a fiduciary relation existed between the parties, since under section 52 such debts are not affected by the discharge.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, Alameda county; NOBLE HAMILTON, Judge.

Campbell & Wright, for appellant. Pillsbury & Blanding, for respondent.

BELCHER, C. C. This is an appeal from an order granting the respondent, Joseph P. Dyer, a discharge from his debts, under the insolvent act of 1880. It appears from the record that Dyer filed his petition in insolvency on the 3d day of August, 1888, and was adjudged to be an insolvent debtor. Subsequently the appellant, Richard Bradley, proved his debt against the insolvent, amounting to $5,928.50. At the proper time thereafter the respondent applied to the court by petition for a discharge from his debts. The appellant objected to his discharge, and filed specifications in writing of the grounds of his opposition. These specifications were, in substance, as follows: (1) That on December 6, 1886, the respondent paid to the Nevada Bank of San Francisco, one of his creditors, a large sum of money, not less than $70,000, with the intent to prefer the bank as a creditor, and to pay it in full, and did in paying the said money to said bank prefer the same as a creditor, and pay it in full, and did thereby defraud his other creditors. (2) That on the 2d day of December, 1886, the respondent, knowing that he was insolvent and unable to pay his just debts, paid to M. C. Blake, a creditor, a large sum of money, not less than $35,000, the same being greatly in excess of any amount due the said Blake from the respondent, and that such payment was made with the intent to prefer him as a creditor, and to pay him in full, and the respondent in paying this money to Blake did prefer him as a creditor, and pay him in excess of the full amount due him, and did thereby defraud his other creditors by reason of such preference. (3) That the relationship existing between the appellant and respondent was a fiduciary one, and the indebtedness of respondent to appellant was created by reason of such fiduciary relationship, and in this way: During the year 1886 the respondent was a stock-broker, engaged in buying, selling, and holding stocks for his patrons. The appellant, reposing special confidence and trust in the honesty and solvency of respondent, deposited with him divers mining stocks of the value of $5,928.50, to be kept and taken care of for appellant, and to be subject only to his order. These stocks the respondent afterwards sold and converted to his own use, without the knowledge, consent, or order of appellant. (4) That on the 3d day of December, 1886, the respondent, well knowing his insolvency, but contriving and wishing to defraud appellant, in answer to inquiries, assured appellant that he was perfectly solvent, and that the property intrusted to him by appellant, as aforesaid, was perfectly safe and secure, and that by leaving the same with him the appellant could and would run no risk of losing the same; that appellant, relying on said assurances, took no steps to secure and recover his property as he otherwise could and would have done; and that the indebtedness of respondent to appellant was created by the loss of said property, and that by reason of said deceit appellant was defrauded. (5) That the debt owing by respondent to appellant is a fraudulent debt, and was fraudulently created; that is to say, prior to December 3, 1886, respondent was a stock-broker, and was intrusted by appellant with certain mining stocks, of the value of $5,928.50, which he wrongfully and fraudulently converted to his own use, and by reason of such conversion became indebted to appellant for the value thereof. Afterwards, pursuant to an order to show cause why the discharge should not be granted, the parties appeared in court, and the attorneys for respondent then orally moved the court to strike out the opposition of appellant, and for an order discharging respondent from his debts, notwithstanding the opposition, on the ground that it did not appear that the appellant was entitled to make the opposition; and that the alleged opposition did not state facts sufficient, and was not in form or substance sufficient, to constitute any valid ground of opposition to the discharge. The attorneys for appellant objected that the respondent had not filed any demurrer or answer to the opposition, and asked the court to require the respondent to file his demurrer or answer before any further proceedings should be taken. The court refused to make the order requested. The application for a discharge was then taken under advisement by the court, and was subsequently granted, and a certificate of discharge given to respondent in the form prescribed by statute. Hence this appeal.

The appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to require the respondent to demur or answer to the specifications of the grounds of his opposition, and in granting the discharge without any trial of the issues tendered thereby. On the other hand, the respondent contends that the specifications tendered no material issues, and that no demurrer or answer was therefore required. The insolvent act (section 50) provides: "Any creditor opposing the discharge of a debtor shall file specifications, in writing, of the grounds of his opposition, and after the debtor has filed and served his answer thereto, which pleadings shall be verified, the court shall try the issue or issues raised, with or without a jury, according to the practice provided by law in civil actions." Under this section, we think the opposing creditor must state in his specifications facts which, if denied, will raise material issues, and, if admitted or established, will constitute valid grounds of opposition to the discharge. If he does not do this, but states only irrelevant and immaterial matters, the specifications may, on motion, be stricken out or disregarded as surplusage. This is a long-settled rule as to immaterial matters stated in pleadings in civil actions, and we think it equally applicable to proceedings under the insolvent act.

The only question, then, is, did the facts stated by appellant in his specifications, if true, constitute a valid ground of opposition to the discharge? It will be observed that the charges against respondent may be divided into three classes: (1) That, a year and eight months before he filed his petition in insolvency, he, knowing that he was then insolvent, paid two of his creditors in full, with intent to prefer them to other creditors; (2) that the debt to appellant was created while respondent was acting in a fiduciary character; (3) that the debt to appellant was created by fraud on the part of respondent.

The provisions of the insolvent act bearing on the question are as follows: Section 49 provides that no discharge shall be granted, or, if granted, shall be valid, "if, within one month before the commencement of such proceedings, he [the debtor] has procured his lands, goods, money, or chattels to be attached or seized on execution; * * * or if he has given any fraudulent preference contrary to the provisions of this act, or made any fraudulent payment, gift, transfer, conveyance, or assignment of any part of his property; * * * or if he has, in contemplation of becoming insolvent, made any pledge, payment, transfer, assignment, or conveyance of any part of his property, directly or indirectly, absolutely or conditionally, for the purpose of preferring any creditor or person having a claim against him, or who is or may be under liability for him, or for the purpose of preventing the property from coming into the hands of the assignee, or of being distributed under this act in satisfaction of his debts." Section 55 provides that, "if any person being insolvent, or in contemplation of insolvency, within one month before the filing of a petition by or against him, with a view to give a preference to any creditor or person having a claim against him, or who is under any liability for him, * * * makes any payment, assignment, transfer, or conveyance of any part of his property, * * * the person receiving such payment * * * having reasonable cause to believe that such person is insolvent, and that such * * * payment * * * is made * * * with a view to prevent his property from coming to his assignee in insolvency, or to prevent the same from being distributed ratably among his creditors, * * * such transfer, payment, conveyance, pledge or assignment is void, and the assignee may recover the property, or the value thereof, as assets of such insolvent debtor." And section 52 declares that "no debt created by fraud or embezzlement of the debtor, * * * or while acting in a fiduciary character, shall be discharged under this act, but the debt may be proved, and the dividend thereon shall be a payment on account of said debt."

1. Unless made so by the above-quoted provisions of the statute, the preferences complained of were neither fraudulent nor unlawful. Dana v. Stanford, 10 Cal. 269; Randall v. Buffington, Id. 491; Wheaton v.26P.no.17—70

v. Neville, 19 Cal. 46; Dean v. Grimes, 72 Cal. 447, 14 Pac. Rep. 178. It is true, it is charged that the payment to Blake was in excess of the amount due him; but that we regard as of no consequence, for, so far as appears, the excess may have been paid by mistake, and may have been returned or properly accounted for before the proceedings in insolvency were commenced. It is also charged that by making the payments respondent "did thereby defraud his other creditors," but that was a mere conclusion of law. No facts were stated from which it can be said that the payments constituted a fraud upon the other creditors, or that the respondent intended thereby to defraud his other creditors. It will be noticed that section 49 speaks of only two kinds of preferences which will prevent or make invalid a discharge, one a "fraudulent preference, contrary to the provisions of this act," and the other a preference made "in contemplation of becoming insolvent;" and section 55 only declares void a preference made "within one month before the filing of a petition" in insolvency. These sections are parts of the same act, and must be read together. When so read, the question is, within what time must the inhibited preferences be made, in order to impose the penalty declared by section 49? It seems to us the answer is found in sections 49 and 55, and that the time there named is controlling. Certainly it could not have been intended that the time might extend back indefinitely, possibly for years. In Bump's Law and Practice of Bankruptcy (page 708) it is said: "No preference can be fraudulent under the act, unless it is made within four months [the time named in similar provisions of the bankrupt act] before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy;" citing authorities.

2. The charges that the debt to appellant was created while the relations of the parties were of a fiduciary character, and by the fraud and wrongful conversion of the respondent, are not grounds for opposing a discharge. Under section 52, a debt so created is not affected by the discharge, and such a creditor has therefore nothing to complain of. Herrlich v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472, 22 Pac. Rep. 299; In re McEachran, 82 Cal. 224, 23 Pac. Rep. 46. We see no error in the rulings of the court below, and therefore advise that the order appealed from be affirmed.

DEDICATION OF PUBLIC ALLEYS — NUISANCE — PLEADING.

1. Where the owners of a block, by mutual agreement, opened an alley, and the same was recognized as an alley for more than 30 years, such dedication is sufficient to maintain an action to abate a private nuisance in obstructing the same.

2. A house built in a public alley so as to partly abut upon plaintiff's lot, and prevent access to the public highway, is a private nuisance, and plaintiff may maintain an action to abate it, although she has suffered no actual pecuniary damage.

3. Where a complaint to abate a nuisance does not explicitly state that plaintiff has sustained an injury different in kind to the general public, it is insufficient on special demurrer; but when such injury appears by inference it is proper to overrule a motion for judgment on the pleadings at the commencement of the trial.

Commissioners' decision. Department 2. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; T. H. REARDEN, Judge.

John D'Arcy and Otto Tum Suden, for appellant. Hutchinson & Campbell, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. Appeal from judgment and order denying defendant's motion for new trial. This action is brought to abate a nuisance, — to remove an obstruction placed by defendant in what is alleged to be a public alley, extending from Sixteenth street northerly to Fifteenth, through the block bounded by these streets and Mission street and Julian avenue, in the city and county of San Francisco. The alleged alley is known as "Lida Place" or "Court." From the complaint it appears that plaintiff Selma Hargro owns a lot extending from Julian avenue to Lida place, and that defendant has erected a house in the alley, occupying the whole of it for a distance of 30 feet. From the measurements given, it can be ascertained that for the greater part of this distance it abuts upon the property of plaintiff Selma, who is the wife of the other plaintiff, James Hargro, thus shutting her off to that extent from access to the alley. But there is no express allegation of such fact. It is averred that the obstruction greatly damages plaintiff, decreases the value of her real estate, and jeopardizes her right in the alley; "that said house interferes with plaintiff's use and enjoyment of said alley, and plaintiff has already been damaged by said erection and maintenance of said house on said alley-way by the defendant in the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars United States gold coin." The defendant denies all the allegations of the complaint, except that, in regard to the erection and maintenance of the obstruction, the denials are qualified by the word "unlawfully," and avers ownership in defendant of the land claimed as an alley.

At the commencement of the trial, defendant moved for judgment on the pleadings, because the complaint states no special damage or injury to plaintiff. The motion was denied. The same point is urged here, in connection with the further point that there was no evidence which tended to show peculiar injury to plaintiff. In regard to the objection to the pleading, it may be noted that it was not made by demurrer, either special or general. It may be admitted that if the complaint does state injury to plaintiff different in kind, and not in amount merely, to that sustained by the general public, it does so by inference only, and not by explicit, positive averment, as the rules of pleading require. In such a case the pleading would fall before a special demurrer, and the pleader would be permitted to amend. But when a party craftily lies by, in presence of such an objection, to spring it when, if sustained, it would be lethal, the sufficiency of the pleading will be tested by a very different rule. Then the pleading will be upheld, if the essential fact appears by plain and necessary implication. The matter will be more fully considered in connection with the objection to the proof, and, if our views as there expressed are correct, it will be manifest that, tried by such a test, the complaint is sufficient. In regard to the obstruction, the facts are found as stated in the complaint; expressly stating, however, that the house abuts upon the rear of plaintiff's lot, and cuts off 20 feet and 6 inches, or over two-thirds, of the alley frontage of her lot. The court also found that she suffered special injury thereby, but assessed no damages. It was further found that plaintiff's lot had never been occupied or improved.

It is claimed that this action cannot be maintained unless the plaintiff has suffered actual pecuniary damage; that the failure of the court to find any amount of damage is a finding that she has suffered none, much less damage peculiar or special to her, different in kind from that suffered by other members of the community; and it is asserted that there was no evidence tending to show such damage. The doctrine asserted in Bigley v. Nunan, 53 Cal. 403, that it is pecuniary damage which constitutes the basis of the action is expressly limited to actions at law for damages. As to bills in equity, it is only said that the injury complained of must be special in character, and not merely greater in degree than that of the general public. If a substantial right has been invaded, especially if the wrong be in the nature of a continuing trespass of such a character that its continuance will create a right against the plaintiff's estate, or operate to deprive plaintiff of a substantial right incident to her property, the nuisance will be abated, although the damage is merely nominal. Indeed, the fact that a threatened injury is of such a nature that it is incapable of pecuniary estimation is a well-known ground of equitable

¹Petition for rehearing pending.

A. Webb v. Manufacturing Co., 3 Sum. Wood, Nuls. pp. 825, 826, and cases cited. That the plaintiff has suffered from the obstruction peculiar to itself, differing in kind from that suffered by others, is clear. The cases in this state hold that to obstruct a public way so as to completely prevent it will not constitute a special injury to an individual, such as will enable him to maintain a private action to abate the nuisance, even where such highway constitutes the only means by which the individual can reach his property. Aram v. Ellenberger, 41 Cal. 449; Ranch Co. v. Barks, 74 Cal. 463, 16 Pac. Rep. 250. But it has never been held that an individual can maintain an action to abate an obstruction which, while obstructing the public highway, also cuts off access from premises to the public highway. So far as it does this it becomes a private nuisance. His complaint is not that it obstructs the street or road, but that it prevents him from reaching it. Such was the case in Blanc v. Klumpke, 29 Cal. 156. The water frontage of plaintiff was cut off by piles driven in front of his lot, shutting him out from the common highway,—the navigable waters. The same character of obstruction existed in Schulte v. Transportation Co., 50 Cal. 592, and in Ford v. Railroad Co., 59 Cal. 290. In these cases it was held that special injury resulted to the complainants from a public nuisance. The result is the same as though it had been held that it constituted both a public and a private nuisance, although the latter would seem the more accurate statement; for it is the obstruction of the street which renders it a public nuisance, and that is not the injury to the individual; that is, that it cuts him off from the street.

The only remaining question of importance in the case is, does the evidence justify the decision to the effect that the alley in question is a public alley by dedication? There is a general finding to this effect; and the probative facts, or some of them, are also found. It is not stated that the general finding is based upon the probative facts found, but their correctness is not disputed, and so far as they go they constitute a convenient statement of the evidence conceded to be correct. It appears from these findings that in October, 1853, Joseph H. Moore and Thomas Varney owned all of this block on the westerly side of the center line of the alleged public alley, and Ferdinand Vassault, Lucien Herman, and P. Theodule Brou owned the land on the east side of this line. Vassault and Herman proposed in writing to Moore and Varney as follows: "We * * * agree to give ten feet from off the depth of our lots for the purpose of opening an alley twenty feet wide between our property and the property owned by yourself and others on the rear of ours, provided yourself and others owning said rear property will also give ten feet from the east line of yours, in order that the alley may be made continuous from Center to Tracy streets. * * * Please let us know if you accept the proposition." The next day Moore and Varney accepted this proposition, also in writing. Center and Tracy streets were afterwards called, respectively, "Sixteenth" and "Fifteenth" streets. Brou did not sign either part of this contract, but it is found that he consented to the dedication. At the trial it was stipulated "that all the deeds, mortgages, and transfers of lots in Mission block 35, between Julian avenue and Mission street, from those of the original owners down to those under which the present owners hold, recognize the alley on the block [in question] * * * by making the depth of the lots fronting on Mission street 182 feet, and those on Julian avenue 84 feet, and most of them recognize the alley by name, and that a number of deeds and mortgages made and recorded from 1865 to January, 1886, executed by defendant, recognize said alley by name." There can be no doubt that there was an offer to dedicate this alley on the part of all the proprietors, and that all of the present owners purchased with the understanding that it was a public alley, and had a right to so conclude from the acts of their vendors in selling the property. As to such owners it is perhaps unnecessary to go further. Stallard v. Cushing, 76 Cal. 472, 18 Pac. Rep. 427. But it is found that from the year 1857 the alley has been continuously, and is now, open and accessible to the public, and actually used by the public, 165 feet northerly from Sixteenth street. That portion of the street is the only part involved in this case. It is a strong circumstance in this connection, that if this strip of land was not dedicated it still belongs to the original owners, not one of whom now owns a lot in this block. None of the present lot-owners claim to have purchased any part of this strip. The defendant claims under the statute of limitations. It is plain, therefore, that he and his vendees have regarded it as a public alley.

It is claimed that defendant has for many years had actual possession of the portion of the alley involved in this case. If it were a public alley, no rights could be acquired as against the public by such adverse holding. But the possession was not adverse. Defendant put a gate across the alley near Sixteenth street, with the consent of abutting owners, to prevent the alley from being made a dumping-ground for rubbish; and the gate was opened, and the alley at all times freely used, by all who had occasion to make use of it. So far from tending to show an exclusive claim on the part of Hodgdon, it shows a recognition by him of the rights of others. He testifies that he himself made it an alley, and sidewalked it as such.

There was no error in the admission of the map and the street assessment. If they did not tend to prove an official acceptance of the alley, they were still admissible as tending to show general knowledge of the existence of the alley. There was no objection to the testimony of Center, and we think it could not have been harmful. The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FITZGERALD, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion the judgment and order are affirmed.

BUTLER V. HYLAND et al. (No. 13,162.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1891.)

TRUSTS—DEED ABSOLUTE—LIMITATIONS—LACHES.

1. In an action to recover property claimed to have been conveyed in trust to plaintiff's aunt by deed which was absolute, the plaintiff testified that she signed a paper, and her aunt said, "I will hold the property for you;" that she did not know what the paper was, and did not discover it until her aunt's death; and that she received nothing for the conveyance. Held sufficient to establish the trust.

2. Where a trustee voluntarily assumes a trust, with an implied agreement to reconvey upon request, the statute of limitations does not run against the beneficiary.

3. Although plaintiff did not commence suit for 2 years after her trustee's death, 8 years after marriage, 16 years after attaining her majority, and 19 years after executing the deed, the delay will not be considered laches, when it appears that she lived with her trustee most of the time, and that the defendants have expended nothing upon the lands.

Commissioners' decision. Department 1. Appeal from superior court, city and county of San Francisco; JAMES G. MAQUIRE, Judge.

F. J. Castelhun, for appellant. T. C. Coogan, for respondents.

TEMPLE, C. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit, and from an order refusing a new trial. Plaintiff's father, as she avers, died June 5, 1853, leaving, as heirs, plaintiff, aged 8 years, and her brother, aged about 14. Her mother had previously died. Her father was the owner, at the time of his death, of the lot in controversy. Just before her father's death, her aunt, who was a widow with three children, the present defendants, came to live with her father on the lot in suit, and plaintiff became at once a member of her aunt's family, and lived with her until her own marriage; in 1879. While she was a minor, living with and in the custody of her aunt, her aunt represented to her that her brother would get her property from her, and said if plaintiff would convey it to her she would hold it in trust for plaintiff. Upon this representation and agreement she conveyed her right to her aunt. That by mistake the deed was made absolute in form, and purported to be made for a consideration of $500. That she and her aunt were both ignorant of this fact. That she received nothing for the conveyance, and did not discover the mistake until after the death of her aunt, in 1885. She never demanded or received a deed from her aunt, who remained in possession up to her death, and the defendants, who are the only descendants of her aunt, although fully aware of her rights, repudiate and deny them, and claim to be themselves the owners. She sues to recover the property, for a conveyance, and for general relief. The defendants do not deny the ownership of plaintiff's father, or the facts which show that plaintiff was his heir, but they deny the trust, and aver that the deed was in fact an absolute conveyance for a valuable consideration. They also plead the statute of limitations, and charge laches in the bringing of the suit.

At the trial the plaintiff was the only witness examined. She testified that her father died June 5, 1853, leaving herself and her brother as the only children, her mother having died before; that shortly before her father's death her aunt came to live with her father upon the lot in suit, and after her father's death they all continued to live there together. She said: "I continued to live with my aunt in the same house. My aunt took care of me, sent me to school, and I had no one else to provide for or look after me; but my uncle sometimes sent money to my aunt for me. I was received in and become a member of her family, and so continued until the time of my marriage, which took place April 30, 1879. * * * After my father's death, when I was about sixteen years old, and while I was still living under my aunt's care, my brother tried to get me to sign a paper while I was visiting him, and I wouldn't sign it; and when I got home I told my aunt what he wanted me to do. My aunt said, 'I will fix it so he can't get your property from you.' The next day a notary called at the house, and I signed a paper. My aunt said, 'I will hold your property for you.' I did not know what the paper was, and never discovered it until my aunt's death, and a short while before this suit was brought, but I suppose it was read over to me before I signed it. My aunt gave me nothing and I received nothing for signing the paper, and I was under age at the time." The witness recognized a deed shown her as the deed she executed, dated October 12, 1866, purporting to be in consideration of $500, acknowledged and recorded on the same day. She testified that her aunt died September 10, 1885, leaving, her surviving, the defendants, her children; that she never asked her aunt for a deed, and never received one. The rental value was $7.50 per month. On cross-examination she said that her aunt was in exclusive possession of the property at the time the deed was executed, and had paid all taxes and assessments, and that plaintiff had continued all the time to reside in the city and county of San Francisco, and knew these facts. The plaintiff here rested her case, and the defendants moved for a nonsuit, which was granted. In the motion for a nonsuit the alleged defects in the proof were specifically pointed out, but need not be formally repeated here. Such a motion is in the nature of a demurrer to evidence. The truthfulness of the testimony is admitted, but its sufficiency is challenged. The evidence shows that a confidential relation existed between plaintiff and the mother of defendants, and that at her request plaintiff conveyed to her an undivided half interest in the property, with the understanding that her aunt would hold it for her. The law, under such circumstances, implies an agreement to reconvey upon request, and it is immaterial that there was no proof of a distinct understanding that the trust was to have been set out in express terms in the deed, and was omitted by mistake. Immediately upon the death of her father, plaintiff became the owner of one undivided half interest in the premises, and it was not necessary for her to show administration and distribution of his estate.

This is not an action to disaffirm plaintiff's deed as the act of a minor, and to recover property thus conveyed. Plaintiff asks no relief which would not have been her due under the same circumstances had she been of mature age. Her minority is material only as tending to establish that the relations between herself and her aunt were confidential. It was not necessary, therefore, for her to disaffirm, under section 35 of the Civil Code. The testimony of plaintiff being taken as true, there can be no doubt that it establishes a trust under the rule laid down in Brisson v. Brisson, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. Rep. 689.

Nor can any plausible claim be made that the action is barred by the statute of limitations. It was not a constructive trust forced upon the conscience of the trustee, but one voluntarily assumed, and which, by the understanding of the parties to it, was to be a continuing one. The trustee—so far as the evidence goes—continued to hold according to the understanding, and never repudiated the relation, or did any act inconsistent with it. Love v. Watkins, 40 Cal. 565; Tiff. & B. Trusts, 19.

There is more plausibility in the claim that there have been such laches as will prevent the plaintiff obtaining relief. As respondent has succinctly stated, she commenced her suit "two years after her aunt's death; eight years after her marriage; sixteen years after she had attained her majority; nineteen years, eleven months and twenty days after the deed had been executed and recorded." But it must be remembered that, by the terms of the trust, her aunt was to hold the title for her. The conveyance was made for that purpose. For most of the time she was a member of her aunt's family, who stood in loco parentis to her. Between four and five years only elapsed after her own marriage before her aunt's death. The rental value of the place was small, and she knew that her aunt was paying the taxes, assessments, and repairs, the amount of which are not shown. The doctrine of laches is not applied so strictly between near relatives. 2 Story, Eq. Jur., §1520. On the other hand, nothing is shown which would make it inequitable to enforce the trust. It does not appear that plaintiff has stood by allowing the trustee to treat the property as her own, and under that belief expending money in improvements. There is nothing tending to show that up to her death Mrs. Hyland ever supposed or claimed that she had any interest in the property. The defendants have expended nothing upon the property. It does not appear, even, that the premises have been included in their mother's estate by any proceedings in probate. If any injury has resulted through the delay, it must be in rendering proofs of the real facts difficult, but there certainly was no culpable delay until after her aunt's death, since which nothing has occurred to increase the difficulties of the defendants as to the evidence. That the plaintiff waited so long after she ceased to be a member of her aunt's family before asserting her claim to the property may possibly have some bearing upon the probability of her story,—that is, upon her credibility. We have not considered the value of the testimony, weighed against other proofs or circumstances. We think the judgment and order should be reversed, and a new trial awarded.

We concur: BELCHER, C. C.; FOOTE, C.

PER CURIAM. For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are reversed, and a new trial awarded.

STATE V. CENTRAL PAC. R. CO. (No. 1,335.)
(Supreme Court of Nevada. July 6, 1891.)

TAXATION—BOARD OF EQUALIZATION—REVIEW—FRAUD.

Gen. St. Nev. § 1091, relative to the board of equalization of taxes, makes its action final except in cases of fraud; and fraud on the part of the assessor is no ground for disturbing a valuation where no fraud is alleged on the part of the board which confirmed the valuation.

Response to a petition for rehearing. For statement of facts, see the prior report of this case, 26 Pac. Rep. 225.

BIGELOW, J. A rehearing is asked in this case upon the ground that, instead of judgment being ordered in favor of the plaintiff, a new trial should have been granted, to enable the defendant to show that, notwithstanding the action of the board of equalization fixing the valuation of the road at $14,000 per mile, it is not worth more than $12,000. The answer alleges that the assessor, with knowledge that the road was only of the value of $10,000 per mile, fraudulently assessed it at $14,000; but there is no charge that the board of equalization acted fraudulently, or otherwise than in good faith, in equalizing the value at the same amount. Under these circumstances, we are of the opinion that this defense is not open to the defendant. It was evidently the intention of the legislature that, in the absence of fraud, the action of the board should be final. No review of or appeal from their decision is provided for. That is the tribunal specially charged with the duty of equalizing values. If any tax-payer is aggrieved by the action of the assessor, his remedy is by appeal to this board; and, if the members thereof act fairly and in good faith in the matter, their judgment concerning the valuation of property is not to be revised by a court which has no better opportunity than the board of arriving at a correct conclusion. Fraud in the assessment is one of the defenses allowed the tax-payer by Gen. St. § 1108; but, clearly, this must be such fraud as works the defendant some damage. A fraudulent overvaluation of property, attempted by the assessor, can do him no harm if it is corrected by the board. If the board bring their honest judgment to bear upon the matter, and determine that the property has not been overvalued, this determination is conclusive that the assessor's attempted fraud has done the defendant no damage. Gen St. § 1091 in at least one instance, by express language makes the action of the board final; and a review of the whole act shows it was intended to be final in all cases except where fraud intervenes. No further appeal is given, and no more delay contemplated. In other states where statutes similar to ours have been construed, it has been invariably held, so far as we have been able to find the decisions, that the action of the board of equalization fixing values is final and conclusive, where taken honestly and in good faith. This is the rule in Michigan, (Case v. Dean, 16 Mich. 12. McDonald v. City of Escanaba, 62 Mich. 556, 29 N. W. Rep. 93;) in Indiana, (Rhoads v. Cushman, 45 Ind. 85;) in Illinois, (Insurance Co. v. Pollak, 75 Ill. 294;) in Wisconsin, (Lefferts v. Calumet Co., 21 Wis. 688;) in Pennsylvania, (Hughes v. Kline, 30 Pa. St. 227;) in Maine, (Gilpatrick v. Saco, 57 Me. 277;) in Massachusetts, (Lincoln v. Worcester, 8 Cush. 55;) in Texas, (Texas & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Harrison Co., 54 Tex. 119;) in Arizona, (Atlantic & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Yavapai Co., 21 Pac. Rep. 768;) and is laid down as correct by the text-writers, (Cooley, Tax'n, 528; 1 Desty, Tax'n, 498.) The petition for a rehearing is denied.

JUDGMENTS—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

1. There must always exist some substantial reason to authorize a court of equity to take cognizance of a cause which has already been determined by law.

2. When a party has had full opportunity to be heard and make his defense before a verdict is found and judgment is rendered thereon against him, equity will not assist him, and grant relief, after such verdict and judgment, unless obtained by fraud, accident, or mistake, unmixed with any fault on his part.

3. It is not enough that the judgment at law may be wrong, but some equitable circumstance also must be shown to exist to warrant the interference of equity.

4. The failure to obtain a new trial or to effect an appeal from accident alone is not sufficient to warrant the interference of equity with the judgment, unless injustice or hardship is made to appear, or some other ground of equitable interposition, so that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience to allow the judgment to be enforced.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from circuit court, Gilliam county; L. R. WEBSTER, Judge.

Mays, Huntington & Wilson, for appellant. A. S. Bennett, for respondent.

LORD, J. This is a suit in equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment rendered in a justice's court in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff. The facts are these: The plaintiff commenced an action in the court aforesaid to recover from the defendant the value of a heifer, alleged to have been converted by him, upon which issue was joined, and the cause tried before a jury, which resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant for his costs and disbursements. The judgment was entered on the 12th day of November, 1888, and it is alleged that on the 30th day of November, 1888, the justice before whom the cause was tried, resigned, and, the said office remaining vacant for some time, he was prevented thereby from perfecting his appeal. It also appears that, within the time allowed by law, the plaintiff prepared and served his notice of appeal, and presented the same, together with a duly-executed and proper undertaking to stay proceedings therein; but the justice having at the time stated resigned his office, and the office being vacant, and no one to act in the premises, he lost his right of appeal, without any fault on his part. Under the Code, an appeal may be taken to the circuit court from a judgment given in a justice's court within 30 days from the date thereof. Deady's Code, p. 471, § 68. According to the facts, from the date of the rendition of the judgment and its entry until the resignation of the justice, of the 30 days within which an appeal may be taken, 18 of such days were permitted to elapse before any effort was made to perfect the appeal. Upon this state of facts the plaintiff contends that, having lost his right of appeal from the judgment rendered in the justice's court, without any fault on his part, but by unavoidable accident, he is entitled to the aid of the injunction to prevent the enforcement of such judgment, and to a new trial of the cause. It is to be noted that a complaint for a new trial is watched by equity with extreme jealousy. There must always exist some good and substantial reasons to authorize or justify a court of equity in taking cognizance of a cause which has already been determined at law. "Whenever a party," says Mr. Freeman, "asks a court to grant him a new trial, he must show some reason for not getting it at law." Freem. Judgm. § 506. Some ground for equitable relief must be shown, for a court of equity possesses no supervisory powers, and cannot assume to act as an appellate court to correct judgments at law, although manifestly erroneous. If the judgment rendered is not inequitable as between the parties, no matter how irregular the proceedings may be, a court of equity will not interfere. 10 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 898. The principle is fundamental that, when a party has had full opportunity to be heard and make any defense he may have before verdict and judgment is rendered against him, equity will not aid him, and grant relief, after such verdict and judgment, unless obtained by fraud, accident, or mistake, unmixed with any fault on his part. A judgment at law ought to be conclusive on the matter in dispute, both as settling the rights of the parties and to put an end to litigation, unless it affirmatively appears that such judgment is wrong, and that it would be against equity and good conscience to have it enforced. It is not enough that the judgment may be wrong, but some equitable consideration also must be shown to exist to warrant the interference of equity. The facts alleged show that the justice's court had jurisdiction; that both parties appeared before it and joined issue; that a trial was had by a jury; and that the verdict and judgment was regularly found and entered. All this tends to show that the judgment was right, and the rights of the parties legally determined. There is no suggestion that the trial was unfair, or that the court erred in the admission or rejection of evidence, or in any of its rulings, or that the verdict or judgment was obtained by fraud, or by any act of the prevailing party, or that the plaintiff was prevented from making any defense to the action, or in any way whatever prevented from fully and fairly presenting his cause to the jury and the court. So far there is nothing to warrant even the inference that there was any failure of justice, or that any injustice had been done by the verdict and judgment. The plaintiff puts himself upon the bare proposition that, having lost the benefit of his appeal by accident, he may properly seek relief in equity, without regard to whether or not the trial already had was fair, or the judgment rendered therein was against equity and good conscience. But accident alone is not sufficient. There must be some failure of justice from the accident—some circumstances of hardship or fraud, as the case may be—to warrant the interference of equity. In Johnson v. Branch, 48 Ark. 536, 3 S. W. Rep. 819, it was shown there was no opportunity afforded the party against whom the judgment was rendered to move for a new trial, because the court adjourned and the term lapsed before the motion could be made and disposed of; and the court say: "This was such an accident as would give jurisdiction to a court of equity to grant relief, provided the party complaining was otherwise entitled to it. The accident alone does not warrant the interference of equity. The judgment must appear to give the winning party the advantage which a court of equity would not permit him to hold, in order to warrant the extraordinary interference with the proceeding at law. It grants relief against judgments in aid of justice, not as a recompense for the accident; and although the law court may have committed error upon the trial, if the judgment is not against conscience, it will not meddle with it. The accident, or some other ground of equitable interposition, and the injustice of the judgment must concur." Again, in Whitehill v. Butler, 51 Ark. 342, 11 S. W. Rep. 477, when there was a loss of remedy at law without any negligence on the part of the complainant, as well as some inaccurate statements of the law in the charge to the jury, coupled with the objection to the admission of certain evidence, but the merits of the controversy were not disclosed, Cockrill, C. J., said: "But it is not enough to warrant the extraordinary interference of equity with a judgment at law that an accident has prevented the losing party from pressing a motion for a new trial based upon technical errors occurring at the trial, even though they may be sufficient to warrant a reversal of the judgment on appeal. A party who has obtained a judgment, after a full investigation of the controversy by a competent tribunal, will not be forced by a court of equity to submit to a new trial, unless justice imperatively demands it. It must clearly appear to the court that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience to allow the judgment to be enforced, else it declines to impose terms upon the prevailing party." Crim v. Handley, 94 U. S. 652; Harkey v. Tillman, 40 Ark. 553. It is thus seen when, by accident from unforeseen circumstances, the term of a court has lapsed, or a special adjourned term was never held, or the adjourned session could not be held, and the term closed by operation of law, so that the judgment became irrevocable at law, and the party lost the benefit of his motion, and was precluded or cut off from his right of appeal, the failure to obtain a new trial or appeal, alone, was not sufficient to warrant the interference of equity with the judgment, nor mere errors or irregularities of the court of law, but injustice or hardship must be made to appear, or some other equitable consideration, so that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience to allow the judgment to be enforced. "A judgment," says Mr. High, "regular on its face, will not be enjoined when it is not shown to be unjust or oppressive, and when it does not appear that the party asking the aid of equity against the enforcement of the judgment has a good defense to the claim upon which it was founded." High, Inj. § 126. The complainant alleges no facts, arising out of or connected with the trial, which show that any injustice has been done, or that the winning party has obtained any improper advantage, or any fraud or mistake, or any failure of justice from the trial by accident, or that he has any defense thereto, other than, if he is granted another opportunity, he will prove that the helper is his property. His reliance for relief rests solely upon the ground that, by accident arising out of the resignation of the justice, he has been cut off or lost his right of appeal, which would have secured a trial de novo, and that he would have been able to prove what, it seems, he failed to establish to the satisfaction of the jury at the first trial. In such case it is plain that the jurisdiction of equity cannot be imperatively demanded; the accident and the injustice of the judgment must concur and appear, or its jurisdiction will be denied. Nor is this all. In the case at bar, the plaintiff was not cut off absolutely, as in the other cases cited, from his right of appeal. He had plenty of time to perfect his appeal, and could have done so easily, if he had so desired, so far as this record discloses. Of the 30 days within which an appeal may be taken, 18 of them were allowed to pass before the signature of the justice was sought to perfect the appeal. While the statute fixes the limit at 30 days within which an appeal may be taken, yet there were 18 days in which the opportunity was present for the plaintiff to exercise his right to appeal and secure a retrial, which was not availed, so that he was not absolutely precluded or cut off from his right of appeal. In view of these considerations, and the general doctrine that an injunction will not lie to restrain a judgment unless it affirmatively appears that the judgment itself was wrong, and that it would be contrary to equity and good conscience to have it enforced, there was no error in dismissing the bill for injunction, and the decree thereof is affirmed.

ABRAHAM V. OWENS.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. April 30, 1891.)

TRESPASS—NOMINAL DAMAGES—RES ADJUDICATA—PLEADING—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. Any invasion of another's rights of property entitles the person whose rights are invaded to at least nominal damages.

2. In an action for trespass upon land, where the defendant pleads liberum tenementum, and there is a judgment for the plaintiff in another action between the same parties, where said judgment is relied upon as an estoppel, it is for the party setting up said estoppel to show by evidence in what part of the close the trespass was committed, and thus apply the issue and judgment to the premises.

3. A permissive occupancy, no difference how long continued, is never adverse.

Appeal from circuit court, Douglas county; R. S. BEAN, Judge.

This controversy rises on the cross-bill filed by the respondent to the appellant's complaint in the original action of Nannie L. Owens v. Sol. Abraham, pending in the circuit court of Douglas county, Or. The cross-bill alleges substantially the following facts: "That this plaintiff is the owner in fee-simple, and in the possession, of the following described tract of land, situated in the county of Douglas and state of Oregon, to-wit: Beginning at the north-east corner of block 33 in the town of Roseburg, on Spruce street; running thence south on the line of said street 160 feet; thence west to the South Umpqua river; thence along the bank of said river down to the line of Washington street; thence on the line of Washington street east to the place of beginning. That the said defendant is the owner in fee-simple, and in the possession, of the following described tract of land, situated in the county of Douglas, state of Oregon, to-wit: A tract of land bounded on the north by what was formerly known as 'Hyman Abraham's Land,' adjoining the city of Roseburg; on the west by the west boundary line of Aaron Rose's donation land claim, being claim No. 60, in township 27 south, range 6 west; on the south by Oak street, in the city of Roseburg, on the extended line of said street; on the east by a line drawn parallel with the west boundary line of said town plat from said north boundary line of Oak street to the land formerly owned by Hyman Abraham. That said land owned by this plaintiff hereinbefore described, and the land owned by the defendant hereinbefore described, lie and are adjacent to each other. That there is between this plaintiff and this defendant a controversy and dispute concerning this boundary and dividing line between their said tracts of land. That this plaintiff claims that a certain fence heretofore constructed by him, and now standing between the tract owned by him and the tract owned by the defendant, is upon and is the true boundary and dividing line between his lands and those of the defendant. That the defendant derived her title to said tract of land owned by her by a deed from Sarah Owens, who was formerly the owner in fee-simple of the same. That on the 21st day of January, 1881, the said Sarah Owens was the owner of the tract aforesaid, and this plaintiff was the owner in fee-simple of the tract hereinbefore described as owned by him. That at said time a controversy existed between this plaintiff and the said Sarah Owens in regard to the true boundary and dividing line between said tracts. That it was then mutually contracted and agreed between this plaintiff and the said Sarah Owens that W. H. Byers, a surveyor, should, on behalf of said parties, run, survey, and establish said boundary line, and that this plaintiff and the said Sarah Owens should and would stand to and abide by the determination of said W. H. Byers in the premises, and that the line that he should run should be forever after taken and held to be the true boundary and dividing line between said tracts." It is then alleged that Byers ran and established the line where the fence now is on the 21st day of January, 1881. The answer denies the material allegations of the complaint and then alleges a further defense, in substance: "That the plaintiff ought not to be admitted to say that the boundary line between the plaintiff's and defendant's land is as claimed by the plaintiff, or that the fence heretofore constructed by him is upon the true boundary and dividing line between his lands and those of the defendant, for the reason that in an action brought by this defendant, who was then plaintiff, and against this plaintiff, who was then defendant, in the circuit court of Douglas county, Or., on the 26th day of August, 1888, which was brought by the plaintiff therein to recover from defendant therein and plaintiff here, and other defendants, damages from trespassing on said premises, and wrongfully taking possession thereof, alleged to have been done by said defendant in the complaint in said cause on the 20th day of December, 1887, which said premises are identical and the same as in dispute here, in which said action, she did in her complaint allege that she was the owner in fee of said strip of land, to which complaint this said plaintiff and defendant therein did file an answer in said court, in which he denied said plaintiff's ownership, in fee or otherwise, to said premises, and did allege that he was the owner thereof, and did set up in said answer, as a further and separate defense, the following matter, to-wit." Then follows substantially the same matter in relation to the Byer's survey that is contained in this complaint. The answer then alleges that Abraham employed the other defendants in that action to remove, and they did remove, said division fence off his land, on the true division line aforesaid, doing no unnecessary damage to the plaintiff's lands, as they might and could lawfully do, which are the acts mentioned and complained of in plaintiff's complaint. It is then alleged that issue was duly taken on each and every material allegation by the reply, and that the plaintiff in that action recovered a judgment for $30 damages. Another separate defense is the statute of limitations. The plaintiff's reply denies the new matter in the answer. The evidence having been taken in writing, the cause was duly tried, and a decree rendered in favor of the plaintiff, from which this appeal was taken.

J. W. Hamilton, for appellant. J. C. Fullerton, for respondent.

STRAHAN, C. J., (after stating the facts as above.) The parcel of land in controversy in this suit consists of about one acre. It was conceded upon the argument here, and the evidence very satisfactorily establishes the fact, that the tract is included within the calls of the plaintiff's deeds, and that he is entitled to the same, unless his right thereto is defeated by one or both of the defenses pleaded in the defendant's answer. It is to the answer, then, and the facts shown in support thereof, that our attention must be directed.

1. The first question demanding our attention is the judgment pleaded in the answer as an estoppel. In the first place, the defendant has failed to put in evidence the judgment roll in the case of Nannie L. Owens v. Sol. Abraham et al., mentioned in the pleadings. It is true, there are several papers, separately certified, each of which would have constituted a part of the judgment roll as defined by section 272, Hill's Code, if any such document exists in the cause accompanying the transcript. But these papers, if competent in the disjointed and disconnected form in which they appear, are not so certified as to entitle them to be read in evidence. The certificate to each paper recites that the copy has been compared by the certifying officer with the original, on file in his office, and that it is a true and complete transcript therefrom. The statute requires the certificate to show, among other things, that the copy is a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole of such original. I advert to this condition of the record, not for the purpose of placing the decision of the case on these points, but for the purpose of correcting, if possible, an abuse too common,—of annexing certificates to every paper used in such case, instead of allowing one certificate to authenticate the entire record. Such a course of practice adds enormously to the expense of litigation, and, where a large number of papers are to be examined, very much to the labors of the court. Does the record, then, preclude all inquiry into the state of the title between these parties? That is the question to be determined. All that part of it relating to the agreement between Abraham and Owens in relation to the Byers survey, and that the line ascertained by him should be forever observed by the parties as the true boundary line between them, must be left out of this inquiry, for the reason that those allegations could not, in a court of law, affect the title, no difference which way the fact might be found. If such an agreement, followed by performance, could have any effect, it could, at most, only create an equity over which a court of law had no jurisdiction in this state at the time of this litigation. It must be further observed that Abraham, by his answer in that action, alleged that after the Byers survey he employed his co-defendants to remove, and they did remove, the division fence off his land on the true division line aforesaid, doing no unnecessary damage, as they could and might lawfully do, which are the acts mentioned and complained of in complaint. This allegation is not denied by the reply. Therefore, upon the face of this record, it stood confessed that Abraham moved the division fence off his land upon the line, and that he did no unnecessary damage. This allegation, properly construed, means that he placed said division fence partially on the lands of Mrs. Owens, and that in doing so he did her some damage, but that the same was necessary. The defendant in that case had no right to place any part of his fence on the lands of Mrs. Owens without her consent, and, if he did so, he was liable to her in damages without any regard whatever to the title to the strip of land now in dispute. In such case it was a violation of her rights of property, and in legal contemplation caused nominal damages, at least.

But, passing this question, we approach the main point upon which the appellant relied upon the appeal, and that is that the plaintiff in this suit is estopped by the record under consideration. In an action to recover damages for a trespass upon lands, and the plea is liberum teneamentum, the party seeking to avail himself of the estoppel must carry his proof further than simply to introduce the record, and rest. As was said in Dunkel v. Wiles, 11 N. Y. 420, per W. F. ALLEN, J.: "The law says that plaintiff in trespass quare clausum fregit can recover upon showing title to any part of the close described in the declaration, if the act complained of was done on that part, and the allegation of title is divisible, and the substance of the issue, no matter how comprehensive the claim may be, is as to the title to the precise spot in which the trespass was committed. It follows, then, that the title to the whole close was not actually or presumptively in issue. No legal presumption can exist that the finding of the jury was beyond or more comprehensive than the issue, and certainly no presumption should be indulged in favor of an estoppel which is designed to conclude a party by excluding evidence of the truth. It was for the defendant to show, by evidence, in what part of the close the trespass was committed, and thus apply the issue and judgment to the premises now in controversy." And the learned judge adds: "If, as I think is clear on principle and authority, the judgment is only evidence that the title to some part of the premises in dispute in the trespass suit is in the defendant, it was for him to locate that part by proof, and show that it embraced the premises in dispute in this action." If this reasoning is sound, and I see no reason to doubt it, inasmuch as no evidence whatever was introduced locating the trespass, we are bound to assume that damages were assessed for the trespass, admitted by the answer, committed in moving the alleged division fence off of plaintiff's land, and that in the doing of that act the plaintiff in that action suffered some damage. This view of the subject disposes of the estoppel.

2. The defense of the statute of limitations must also fail. Mrs. Owens, under whom defendant claims, says she never set up or intended to claim any land not within the calls of her deed; and, further, it very clearly and conclusively appears from the evidence that for a great many years whatever authority she exercised over the premises in dispute was permissive on the part of Mr. Abraham, that she fully recognized his title, and that he agreed with her that he would never disturb her as long as she wished to occupy it. It would be a misnomer and a confusion of all legal distinctions to call such an occupancy adverse, or to suppose that by a continuance for any length of time it might be the source of title by adverse enjoyment. The decree appealed from must therefore be affirmed.

BEAN, J., having presided in the trial of this case in the court below, did not sit here.

PEOPLE V. FLYNN.

(Supreme Court of Utah. July 1, 1891.)

CONVICT—LARCENY—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. A convict who escapes from the penitentiary, and commits a grand larceny, may be convicted and sentenced therefor before he has served out his first sentence.

2. A charge that, "if the defendant was an inmate of the penitentiary at the time of the larceny, serving out a sentence of a competent court, and that he took the horse in question for the purpose of escaping, that would be larceny," is not error, when accompanied by a correct definition of larceny, and an instruction that, in order to convict, the jury "must find beyond reasonable doubt that the defendant feloniously took and rode away the horse in question, with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the ownership and use of the horse, and that there ought to be a union of act and intent in every criminal offense," etc.

3. The affidavits of two jurors, to the effect that they understood the court to have charged that "if the defendant was an inmate of the penitentiary, serving out a sentence, and that he took the horse in question * * * for the purpose of escaping, then he would be guilty, no matter what the intentions were in taking the horse," will not be received to impeach their verdict.

Appeal from district court, third district; T. J. ANDERSON, Justice.

Appeal by John Doe Flynn from a conviction of grand larceny.

H. V. A. Ferguson and Baldwin & Tallock, for appellant. C. S. Varlan, U. S. Atty., for the People.

MINER, J. The defendant in this case was indicted in the third district court, October 4, 1890, charged with the crime of grand larceny in stealing a horse of the value of $50. Several errors are assigned as having occurred at the trial, but, as there is no testimony embraced in the abstract or record, we cannot review them here. The abstract in this case is so imperfect that it is difficult for the court to consider any of the questions presented, especially as there were no sufficient exceptions taken to the charge of the court as would ordinarily justify the court in making any examination into the record, but, inasmuch as this objection was not urged upon the hearing, we content ourselves with what appears from the charge of the court, and from the motion in arrest of judgment, as showing that, at the time the defendant was indicted on this charge, he was serving out a term of imprisonment previously imposed upon him by the court upon a former conviction, whereon he had been sentenced for two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, and from which imprisonment he had escaped, and in making his escape took off the horse he is charged with stealing. He was taken with the horse while endeavoring to make his escape, after which he was tried and convicted for the larceny in question, before the expiration of his first term of imprisonment. In reviewing the proceedings, we find no error in the refusal of the court to charge the jury as requested by the defendant's counsel. On motion for a new trial, and also in arrest of judgment, counsel for defendant urged that the court erred in instructing the jury that, "if the defendant was an inmate of the penitentiary at the time of the larceny, serving out a sentence of a competent court, and that he took the horse in question for the purpose of escaping, that would be larceny." This charge, taken by itself, and disconnected from that which followed, might be subject to the objection made; but we find the court charged the jury correctly in defining larceny; and also charged the jury that, before they could convict, "they must find, beyond reasonable doubt, that the defendant feloniously took and rode away the horse in question, with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the ownership and use of the horse; and that there ought to be a union of act and intent in every criminal offense. * * * That the taking must have been with intent to convert the horse to his own use, and take him away from the possession of the owner, and without any intent of returning the same," etc. Taking the charge as given, as a whole, we find no error in the instructions given.

The next question presented by counsel for the defendant is that the defendant had been attainted of felony, and was serving a two-years sentence in the penitentiary, previously imposed by the court, and that such period had not yet expired when this indictment was found and trial had; and that the court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, or the person of the defendant. Section 4749, Comp. Laws 1888, provides that "A sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary for any term less than life suspends all civil rights of the person so sentenced, and forfeits all public offices, and all private trusts, authority, or power during such imprisonment." In California, under a similar statute, it is held (In re Nerac, 35 Cal. 392) that a creditor whose debtor is imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term less than life may sue and subject the property of such debtor to the satisfaction of his debt during the term of his imprisonment, and that the person so sentenced is not dead in law; that his civil rights in some matters are merely suspended, but that the rights of his creditors to sue and recover judgment against him are not suspended, (Phelps v. Phelps, 7 Paige, 150;) and that the forfeitures and disabilities imposed by the common law upon persons attainted of felony are not known in this country; that no consequences follow a conviction of felony, except those declared by statute. It was early held in England that persons convicted of felony, and thereby attainted, might plead the same in bar to a subsequent prosecution for any other felony, whether committed before or after the first conviction, for the reason that by his first attainr his possessions were forfeited, his blood corrupted, and he became dead in law; therefore any further conviction or attainr would be fruitless. 4 Bl. Comm. 336; 2 Hale, P. C. 250; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 464. This same doctrine was carried out in the case of Crenshaw v. State, 1 Mart. & Y. 122, wherein it is held that a conviction, judgment, and execution upon one indictment for a felony not capital is a bar to all other indictments for felonies not capital, committed previous to such conviction. This doctrine, however, has seldom been followed in the United States, and the above case, though not expressly overruled, seems to be the only adjudication in this country, recognizing this doctrine. Bishop, in his Criminal Law, (volume 1, § 898,) says: "It was a doctrine of the English law, at the time when this country was settled, that, as a general rule, to which there were few exceptions, a person attainted for one felony could not be prosecuted criminally for another. But this doctrine, though recognized in one or two American cases, is not usually followed in this country. In England it was long ago abolished by an act of parliament." In Hawkins v. State, 1 Port. (Ala.) 475, the court holds that neither a conviction nor pardon for any particular offense can, in that state, operate as a bar or discharge of any other distinct offense; and it is now generally conceded throughout the United States that the doctrine that a conviction for another distinct felony, committed either before or after the first conviction, or while the criminal is serving out his sentence thereon, does not prevail in this country, and is as repugnant to the established principle of modern criminal law as it is unsupported by reason. Rex v. Vandercomb, 1 Lead. Crim. Cas. 528; Archb. Crim. Pr. (Pom. Notes,) 350; State v. Commissioners, 2 Murph. 371; State v. McCarty, 1 Bay, 334; 1 Bish. Crim. Law, §§ 731-884, 898, 953. Again, referring to Bishop's Criminal Law, the writer lays down the rule to be that, "when a prisoner, under an unexpired sentence of imprisonment, is convicted of a second offense, or when there are two or more convictions on which sentence remains to be pronounced, the judgment may direct that each succeeding period of imprisonment shall commence on the termination of the period next preceding." 1 Bish. Crim. Law, §§ 731, 884; Comp. Laws Utah, 1888, §§ 4746, 4749, 4750; In re Nerac, 35 Cal. 393; People v. Forbes, 22 Cal. 138; McQuoid v. People, 3 Gilman, 76; Bryan v. Atwater, 5 Amer. Dec. 136, 142; Com. v. Goodenough, Thatcher, Crim. Cas. 132; Kite v. Com., 11 Metc. (Mass.) 581; Reg. v. Bird, 2 Eng. Law & Eq. 439; Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 700, 8 Snp. Ct. Rep. 1204; Ker v. People, 119 U. S. 437, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 225. In the case of People v. Majors, reported in 65 Cal. 138, 3 Pac. Rep. 597, it is held that a person may be tried and convicted for the crime of murder, notwithstanding he is at the time of the trial and sentence serving out a previous sentence of life imprisonment for another murder, committed at the same time, and imposed by another court. So in the case of People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387, it was held that, on a trial for murder, it was competent for the prosecution to show that at the time of the homicide the defendant was a convict in the penitentiary, serving out a life sentence, and that the homicide was committed while so imprisoned; the object being to give the jury to understand that if they found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, with a recommendation to imprisonment for life, and by said verdict fixed the imprisonment for life, the punishment would be no more than the defendant was then undergoing under a former conviction, and that such a verdict would be no punishment whatever, unless the jury made it punishable with death. In this territory there is no statute exempting a convict from punishment for an offense committed by him while serving out his term of imprisonment. Our general penal laws include all persons within their scope. The criminal is protected by the law, and is made amenable to it, while in prison, for any term of imprisonment. The statute of limitations requires prosecution for all felonies, other than for murder, to be commenced within four years after the commission of the offense, (Comp. Laws 1888, § 4830,) and, if not so commenced, the prosecution is barred. It is true an indictment may be found before the expiration of the statutory limit, and the prisoner may be arrested and tried thereon after the expiration of his term of imprisonment; but it is not difficult to discover that this practice, if inaugurated, would not only greatly delay the execution of public justice, but in many instances would prevent a speedy trial that is guaranteed to all accused persons. It would impair the necessary discipline required in public prisons, and, in a measure, become a shield and protection to the criminals therein confined.

On motion for a new trial, counsel for the appellant presented the affidavits of two jurors, who testified, in substance, that they understood the court to have charged the jury that, "if defendant was an inmate of the penitentiary, serving out a sentence, and that he took the horse in question and rode it away for the purpose of escaping, he would be guilty, no matter what the intentions were in taking the horse," and also stated their conclusions drawn from the charge, etc. It does not appear from the abstract whether the court received and acted upon the affidavits or not, but we are clearly satisfied that the affidavits should not have been received by the court nor considered upon this motion. It is well settled that affidavits of jurors will not be received to impeach or question their verdict, nor to show the grounds upon which it was rendered, nor to show their misunderstanding of fact or law, nor that they misunderstood the charge of the court, or the effect of their verdict, nor their opinions, surmises, and processes of reasoning in arriving at a verdict. 2 Thomp. Trials, § 2618; 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. §§ 874, 1270; Woodward v. Leavitt, 107 Mass. 471; Bridge v. Eggleston, 14 Mass. 245; People v. Columbia C. P., 1 Wend. 297; *People v. We discover no error in the record as presented. The motions for new trial and arrest of judgment were properly denied, and the judgment and conviction are affirmed.

ACTION ON INJUNCTION BOND—DAMAGES.

1. In an action upon an injunction bond by a riparian proprietor, who had been enjoined from using the water of a stream adjoining her land for either irrigating or domestic purposes, evidence that the water was needed upon her meadow, that her stock were forced to roam for water, and that she had to carry water half a mile for domestic use, was competent, under a general allegation of damages.

2. Where no estimate of the amount of damages suffered is given in evidence, only nominal damages can be assessed.

Appeal from district court, first district; JAMES A. MINER, Justice.

Action upon an injunction bond by A. C. Rohwer against Abraham Chadwick and another. From a verdict and judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Kimball & Allison, for appellants. Smith & Smith, for respondent.

BLACKBURN, J. This suit is brought on an injunction bond. The injunction was issued and served 23d October, 1889, and dissolved April 6, 1890. Trial before a jury and verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $208. Defendants moved for a new trial, which was overruled, and they excepted, and appealed both from the judgment and the overruling the motion for a new trial, and assigned many errors, but they may all be condensed into two.—that plaintiff was allowed to give evidence of and recover for special damages, when the complaint only alleged general damages; and that the evidence does not support the verdict. The evidence tended to prove that plaintiff lived on Fisher creek; had a farm there; used the water of the same for irrigating purposes on her farm, to irrigate her meadow land and her crops and garden and orchard and shade-trees, also for domestic purposes, and to water her stock; that the water was needed on the meadow during the winter season; that she had no other supply of water for her domestic use; that she had to carry water for her home use a half a mile from October 23, 1889, to April 6, 1890, and go to her neighbors to wash her clothes, because of said injunction; that her trees had to do without water, and her stock to roam for water; that she had chickens and cows and horses and young cattle that had been accustomed to get water from Fisher creek during the winter season, and she had also to haul water on account of the prohibition of said injunction,—to all of which testimony the defendants objected, because it only tended to prove special damages. The objection was overruled, and exception taken. No estimate of the amount of damages was made by the testimony in the case. This testimony was given substantially by several witnesses, and all objected to. The contention of the defendants is: (1) This testimony only tends to show special damages; and, (2) as no estimate of the damages was given by any of the witnesses, the judgment should have been for nominal damages only. The court instructed the jury that they could only render a verdict for general damages, and that general damages were those that naturally resulted from the injury. The first inquiry therefore is, is this evidence admissible?

Sutherland on Damages (volume 2, p. 69) says (on injunction bonds) these damages are ascertained and measured on the principle of giving just and adequate compensation for actual loss which is the natural and proximate result of the injunction. The rule is that, "under a general allegation of damages, the plaintiff may prove and recover those damages which naturally and necessarily result from the act complained of." 1 Suth. Dam. p. 763. This rule seems to be the general rule, and in reference to it there is no conflict of authority. Applying this rule, this testimony was proper, for it tended to show that the trouble and labor of getting water by the plaintiff was the natural and necessary consequence of being deprived by the injunction of using the waters of Fisher creek for the purpose of irrigation and domestic use.

We think the court committed no error in allowing this evidence to go to the jury; but the sole contention of the appellants is that on this evidence the plaintiff was entitled to recover only nominal damages, because the compensation for the injury done was not estimated, and no basis in the evidence was given upon which the jury could estimate such compensation, but it was left entirely to guess at such damages as would compensate the plaintiff. The evidence shows the meadow needed irrigating, but that it was injured without it does not appear. The cattle were deprived of water at home, and had to hunt it; that they were damaged for want of it there is no proof. The trees were without water; that they were injured, or how much, the jury were left wholly in the dark. The proof shows the plaintiff and her family were put to great inconvenience and extra labor to procure water for domestic uses; what would compensate for that inconvenience and extra labor, no basis is furnished the jury by which they could form an estimate. On these questions the evidence is wholly silent, and without such evidence the verdict of the jury should have been for only nominal damages. This suit is not in tort. It is for breach of covenant, and, in such case, the money value of the injury must be proven in order to justify the jury in finding more than nominal damages. They are not left to guess at the damages. We think these views are fully sustained by the authorities. Sutherland on Damages (volume 1, p. 17) says: "The universal and cardinal principle is that the person injured shall receive a compensation commensurate with his loss or injury, and no more." From the evidence in this case it is impossible to tell whether the plaintiff received a verdict for more or less than will compensate her for her loss and injury. The amount of compensation due her should have been shown by the evidence. That was not done. The pecuniary injury, if any, was capable of estimation. The same author says on page 111, same volume: "The cardinal rule in relation to the damages to be compensated, on the breach of a contract, that the plaintiff must establish the quantum of his loss by evidence by which the jury will be able to estimate the extent of his injury, will exclude all such elements of injury as are incapable of being ascertained by the usual rules of evidence to a reasonable degree of certainty." We find no authority for the assumption that the jury may estimate damages not proven, and this is true of the amount of damages. We cite, in support of these views, 1 Suth. Dam. p. 125; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 494; U. S. v. Smith, 94 U. S. 214. We think that the damages in this case were a mere guess, and have no basis of proof; and the court ought to have instructed the jury that the evidence justified nominal damages only. The judgment ought to be reversed, and a new trial awarded. The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

UNITED STATES v. ELLIOT.

(Supreme Court of Utah. July 1, 1891.)

PUBLIC LANDS—SCHOOL LANDS—UNLAWFUL FENCING.

1. Organic Act Utah (Act Cong. Sept. 9, 1850) provides "that, when the lands in said territory shall be surveyed under the direction of the government of the United States, * * * sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said territory shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in said territory," etc. Held, that the grant was absolute, and the lands reserved ceased to be public domain, open to settlement, as soon as surveyed.

2. Act Cong. Feb. 25, 1885, § 1, provides that all inclosures of any public lands in any state or territory of the United States, heretofore or to be hereinafter made * * * by any person not having claim or color of title, etc., are hereby declared unlawful, etc. Section 2 makes it the duty of United States district attorneys to institute suits in the United States territorial district court to have such inclosures destroyed. Held, that the act did not apply to land granted by the organic act of Utah for school purposes after survey had been made.

Appeal from district court, first district; J. W. BLACKBURN, Justice.

Graham F. Putnam and Thurman & King, for appellant. C. S. Varian, U. S. Atty., and George Sutherland, for the United States.

ANDERSON, J. This is an action against the defendant for unlawfully inclosing public lands. The lands in question are what are called "school lands," being a part of section 16, in township 15 S., of range 13 E., of the Salt Lake meridian, and have been surveyed by the government. The defendant owns land on two sides of the section, and in fencing his own land constructed his fence diagonally across the section, inclosing about 400 acres of it. He averred in his answer that he inclosed the land in good faith, intending to acquire the title to it as soon as it came into the market. The cause was tried to the court without a jury, and the court found the inclosure unlawful, and judgment was rendered against the defendant, and the fence was ordered to be destroyed unless the defendant should remove it within five days. There was a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and the defendant brings this appeal from the order overruling this motion and from the judgment. The sole question for our determination is whether sections 16 and 36 in each township, and known as "school lands," after the same have been surveyed by the government, are "public lands," within the meaning of the act of congress of February 25, 1885, (23 St. at Large, 321,) prohibiting the fencing of public lands. By the organic act of Utah territory approved September 9, 1850, it is provided "that, when the lands in said territory shall be surveyed under the direction of the government of the United States, preparatory to bringing the same into market, sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said territory shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in said territory, and in the states and territories hereafter to be erected out of the same." By section 1 of the act of congress approved February 25, 1885, it is provided "that all inclosures of any public lands in any state or territory of the United States, heretofore or to be hereafter made, erected, or constructed by any person, * * * to any of which land included within the inclosure the person * * * making or constructing the inclosure had no claim or color of title made or acquired in good faith, or an asserted right thereto by or under claim, made in good faith, with a view to entry thereof at the proper land-office under the general land laws of the United States at the time any such inclosure was or shall be made, are hereby declared to be unlawful, and the maintenance, erection, construction, or control of any such inclosure is hereby forbidden and prohibited; and the assertion of a right to the exclusive use and occupancy of any part of the public lands of the United States in any of the states or territories of the United States, without claim, color of title, or asserted right, as above specified, as to inclosure, is likewise declared unlawful, and hereby prohibited." Section 2 of this act provides "that it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for the proper district, on affidavit filed with him by any citizen of the United States that section one of this act is being violated, * * * to institute a civil suit in the proper United States district or circuit court or territorial district court, in the name of the United States, and against the parties named or described, who shall be in charge of or controlling the inclosure complained of as defendants. * * * In any case, if the inclosure shall be found unlawful, the court shall make the proper order, judgment, or decree for the destruction of the inclosure, in a summary way, unless the inclosure shall be removed by the defendant within five days after the order of the court."

By the organic act for Utah, sections 16 and 36 in each township were reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in the territory, and they thereby became segregated from the public domain as soon as surveyed, and were no longer open to settlement under the general statutes regulating this subject. It was held in Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet. 498, that, "whensoever a tract of land shall have once been legally appropriated to any purpose, from that moment the land thus appropriated becomes severed from the mass of public lands, and that no subsequent law or proclamation or sale would be construed to embrace it, although no reservation were made of it." This rule was afterwards approved by the same court in University v. Indiana, 14 How. 268. A reservation of lands for school purposes for the use of the people of a territory or state is, in effect, a grant, and the title passes as soon as the lands are surveyed, and patents for school sections are not necessary and are not issued, (Gaines v. Nicholson, 9 How. 361;) and the act reserving them is irrevocable, without the consent of the people of the territory, (Minnesota v. Bachelder, 1 Wall. 109.) In Ferry v. Street, 4 Utah, 521, 7 Pac. Rep. 712, and 11 Pac. Rep. 571, this court, speaking of school lands, said that, by the decisions of the supreme court of the United States, "the various acts of congress mentioned, reserving portions of the public lands of the United States to the territories or states, vest the title to such lands so reserved in the territories or states when the lands are surveyed, or when they are bounded or ascertained. Until such time, the obligation is executory, and the title remains in the federal government." In the case of Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, the supreme court of the United States, by Davis, J., said: "The words 'public lands' are habitually used in our legislation to describe such as are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws." This decision was rendered nearly 10 years before the law under which the present case is brought was passed, and it cannot be presumed that congress was ignorant of it. It is a rule in the construction of statutes that, where the legislative branch of the government has reproduced language in statutory enactments which has been judicially construed, it must be taken as using the words in accordance with the judicial construction previously given them, unless a contrary reason plainly appears from the other language used. The Abbotsford, 98 U. S. 440. But in the present instance no language is used in the statute under which this case is brought indicating that the words "public lands" are used in a different sense from the definition of them given in Newhall v. Sanger, but, on the contrary, the meaning given seems to have been in the minds of those who drafted the law. Section 3 is as follows: "Sec. 3. That no person, by force, threats, intimidation, or by any fencing or inclosing, or by any other unlawful means, shall prevent or obstruct, or shall combine or confederate with others to prevent or obstruct, any person from peaceably entering upon or establishing a settlement or residence on any tract of public land subject to settlement or entry under the public land laws of the United States, or shall prevent or obstruct free passage or transit over or through the public lands: provided, this section shall not be held to affect the right or title of persons who have gone upon, improved, or occupied said lands under the land laws of the United States, claiming title thereto in good faith." It will be observed that, in the foregoing section, congress used the words, "public lands subject to settlement or entry under the public land laws," and the words "public lands," interchangeably, and in the sense given to them by the court in Newhall v. Sanger.

The statute against fencing "public lands" includes by its terms public lands within the states as well as those within the territories, and yet, whatever difference of opinion there may be as to school lands in the territories, it must be conceded that the government does not own the school lands in the states, and congress has no control over them, and can make no law respecting their control or disposition. Our attention has been called to the cases of Barkley v. U. S., 19 Pac. Rep. 37, in the supreme court of Washington Territory, and U. S. v. Blisel, Id. 251, in the supreme court of Montana Territory, in each of which it is held that school lands are public lands, within the meaning of the act of congress of February 25, 1885. We cannot assent to the conclusion reached in those cases, in view of the decisions of the supreme court of the United States, above referred to, and the evident purpose of the statute in question. And, in this connection, it is a fact worthy of note that in 1869 the legislature of the territory of Washington passed an act providing for the leasing of the school lands in that territory, under which a portion of the school lands in Washington Territory were leased to parties who settled on, fenced, and improved them. On the 6th day of August, 1888, more than three years after the fencing law was passed, congress passed an act (25 St. at Large, 358) reciting the fact of these leases having been made, that the lessees had incurred large expense in reducing these lands to cultivation, and that doubts had been raised as to the validity of the leases, and validating the act of the territorial legislature and the leases made under it. The object congress had in view in passing the act in question is well understood. Vast tracts of public lands in the western states and territories had been fenced with barbed wire by wealthy cattle owners, and persons wishing to settle on these lands, and acquire title thereto under the land laws of the United States, were prevented, often by violence, from doing so, and the government was thus prevented from disposing of its lands, and settlers from acquiring homes. But we think the law was not intended to apply to sections 16 and 36 in the several townships, because, as before stated, the school lands in the states were not subject to the control of congress, and those in the territories were reserved to the territories wherein they are situated, and were not open to settlement under the general land laws of the United States, and hence were not included in the term "public lands," as used in the statute. The judgment of the district court is therefore reversed.

ANDERSON v. OGDEN UNION RAILWAY & DEPOT CO.

(Supreme Court of Utah. July 1, 1891.)

COSTS—REPORTER'S FEES.

Under Comp. Laws Utah 1888, p. 213, § 8099, providing that the official reporter shall receive as compensation for taking notes a sum to be fixed by the court, not exceeding $10 per day, and that where more than one case is tried in a day the court shall apportion the per diem among them, an order allowing $20 as reporter's fees in a case called for trial at 11 o'clock A. M. of one day and submitted to the jury at 1:15 P. M. the following day, will not be disturbed, when it is not shown that there was no evening session, and that a case which was before the court on the morning of the first day occupied any considerable length of time.

Appeal from district court, first district; JAMES A. MINER, Justice.

Williams & Van Cott and Marshall & Royle, for appellant. David Evans, for respondent.

ANDERSON, J. This is an appeal from an order of the court refusing to tax costs on appellant's motion. Upon a verdict of the jury in the above-entitled case, the court gave judgment against the defendant for the amount found by the jury, and costs taxed at $83.85. In the memorandum of costs filed and verified by plaintiff's attorney was $20 for reporter's fees.

The defendant moved the court to tax the cost bill, and to disallow all above $10 taxed as reporter's fees. In support of this motion, appellant filed and presented the affidavit of Waldemar Van Cott, one of appellant's attorneys, to the effect that the case was called for trial a little after 11 o'clock February 27, 1891, and the case was submitted to the jury, and the reporter rendered no services in said case after about 1:15 P. M. of February 28, 1891; that another case occupied the attention of the court all the morning of February 27th until this case was called, and the reporter was engaged in reporting the other case, and that no other case was heard February 28th after this one was concluded. Section 3099, p. 213, Comp. Laws 1888, provides that "the official reporter shall receive as compensation for his services in civil actions and proceedings, for taking notes, a sum to be fixed by the court or a judge thereof, not exceeding ten dollars per day: * * * provided, that when said reporter performs services in taking notes in more than one case on the same day the court or judge thereof shall apportion the per diem allowed between the several actions or proceedings in which such notes are taken. * * *". This appeal is based on the claim that there was an abuse of the discretion of the court or judge, as given by the statute, in refusing to tax the costs. But, in order to justify this court in reversing the decision of the lower court, this abuse of discretion must be established in a clear and satisfactory manner, showing not only a violation of the statute, but negating every legal presumption under the law and the ordinary practice of the courts in favor of the action of the court or judge complained of. This has not been done in this case. The usual time for the sessions of the courts of this territory to open each day is at 10 o'clock A. M. Yet it is often later than that; and in this case, the time actually occupied by the reporter in the other case before the trial of the present one began may have been so insignificant that the court might justly consider that no part of the reporter's per diem should be charged to that case. Again, the usual time for closing each day's session is from 5 to 5:30 P. M., and yet evening sessions are sometimes held, but whether there was in this case or not does not appear, but, if there was, it may be that in two days during which the case was on trial, together with an evening session, the reporter may have been compelled to serve as many hours as is usual in a two-days trial when an evening session is not held. Every presumption must be taken in favor of the proper exercise of the discretion of the court, in the absence of a showing to the contrary; and in this case, upon the showing made, we are unable to say there has been such an abuse of the court, or in fact any abuse, which would justify the interference of this court. Affirmed.

Joinder of causes.

1. The proprietors of two different tracts of land, who each own a separate irrigating ditch by means of which the waters of a creek, in different amounts, are conveyed to their land, cannot unite in an action for damages against one who, at a point above their lands, has wrongfully diverted the waters of the stream, as they have no common interest in the damages, and there is no legal basis on which they can be apportioned between them.—*Foreman v. Negligence in constructing retaining wall.

1. Defendant, on constructing a retaining wall on its own land, which materially increases the risk of the adjoining property to land-slides, is bound to exercise its right in a way not to expose the property of the adjoining owner to any risks which might be provided against by the exercise of ordinary diligence; and this rule requires defendant in its construction to take into account or anticipate such storms or rain-falls as might reasonably be expected to occur.—Hummell v. Seventh Street Terrace Co., (Or.) 26 P. 277.

2. No weakness or defect in such wall, caused by the negligence of the defendant, or which the exercise of ordinary care and skill would have avoided in its construction, although combined with the act of God, would excuse liability for damage to the adjoining property.—*Hummell v. Continuity of possession and payment of taxes.

1. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 825, provides that adverse possession is not established unless the land has been occupied and claimed continuously for five years, and the occupants, their predecessors and grantors, have paid the taxes which have been levied on such land. April, 1878, A. entered on land of plaintiff's, fenced it, and occupied it until May, 1884, when he erected a building, and put a tenant in possession, who has since occupied the property. The taxes assessed upon the lot in 1883 were paid by plaintiff. In 1884 the land was assessed to B., mortgagee of A., who paid the taxes that were thereafter assessed for that and three succeeding years. The assessment of 1888 was paid by A. Plaintiff sued in ejectment in 1889. Held, that there had been actual and continuous occupation of the premises and a payment of taxes for five years under adverse claim of right, authorizing a decree quieting A.'s title to the property.—Brown v. Clark, (Cal.) 26 P. 801.

2. Where land is assessed to the mortgagee, and he pays the taxes, it becomes a payment on account of the mortgagor, and is as if made by him, under Const. Cal. art. 13, § 4, providing that the mortgage security shall be assessed as an interest in land to the mortgagee, and either party can pay the tax thereon.—Brown v. Clark, (Cal.) 26 P. 801.

Evidence.

3. In an action of ejectment, the court properly refused to instruct the jury that plaintiff's recovery was barred by the statute of limitations, where there was no evidence before the jury that defendant's possession for the statutory period had been adverse to that of the true owner.—*Howland v. I. APPELLATE JURISDICTION.Who may appeal—Satisfaction of judgment.

1. Where the state and defendant, in an action against a railroad company for taxes, both appeal, the former on the ground that the judgment should have been greater, and the latter on the ground that it should have been less, and the judgment is affirmed on defendant's appeal, and it thereupon pays the amount of the judgment below, it does not estop the state from prosecuting its appeal to recover a larger amount.—State v. Central Pac. R. Co., (Nev.) 26 P. 225.

Appealable judgments and orders.

2. The provision in Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 963, subd. 2, authorizing an appeal to be taken to the supreme court from a superior court "from an order granting or refusing a new trial," embraces such orders made in probate proceedings, as well as those made in civil actions. Affirming 26 P. 173.—In re Bauquier's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 532; In re Moore's Estate, Id. 737.

3. A decree of distribution by the district court in a probate proceeding pending before it is a "final judgment," within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 421, subd. 1, which provides that an appeal from a "final judgment" in an action or proceeding commenced in the court in which it is rendered may be taken within one year from the rendition of the judgment.—In re McFarland's Estate, (Mont.) 26 P. 185.

4. The denial of an application to intervene is a final judgment as to the petitioner, which may be reviewed on writ of error.—Henry v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 318.

5. An order setting aside as premature an order settling the account of a referee in a suit to vacate a fraudulent assignment is not appealable, as it is neither a "final judgment" nor a "special order made after final judgment," within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 939.—Etchebarne v. Roeding, (Cal.) 26 P. 1079.

6. Where, on objections by the legatees to the issue of letters testamentary to the person named as executrix in the will, the court adjudges her incompetent, and denies her application for letters, an order denying her a new trial is appealable.—In re Bauquier's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 173.

7. No appeal from an order of the superior court discharging an attachment lies to the supreme court under Laws Wash. 1889-90, pp. 333, 336, giving the right of such an appeal in "all actions and proceedings," etc., since an attachment is merely an ancillary proceeding.—Windt v. Banniza, (Wash.) 26 P. 189.

— Order of arrest.

8. An order of arrest before final judgment in civil actions is not appealable, under Laws Wash. 1889-90, p. 336, § 1, providing that "an appeal may be taken from the superior courts in all actions and proceedings," except in certain cases, since such order is merely incident to the action. Scott, J., dissenting.—Cline v. Harmon, (Wash.) 26 P. 191; Same v. Burrichter, Id. 192; Same v. Tacoma Stove Co., Id.

9. Under Laws Wash. 1889-90, p. 386, § 1, which provides that "an appeal may be taken from the superior courts in all actions and proceedings" except where the amount involved does not exceed $200, an order of arrest before final judgment in a civil action is appealable. Per Scott, J., dissenting.—Cline v. Harmon, (Wash.) 26 P. 269.

— Orders allowing or refusing injunction.

10. An appeal will not lie from an order overruling a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction, and to vacate an order appointing a receiver, in a suit for the dissolution of a partnership, and for an accounting, under Hill's Code Or. § 535, which provides that "an order or judgment from which an appeal will lie must be one affecting a substantial right, and which, in effect, determines the action or suit, so as to prevent a judgment or decree therein."—Basche v. Pringle, (Or.) 26 P. 868.

11. An order of a district court, or of a judge thereof at chambers, allowing an injunction as a provisional remedy, may be reviewed by the supreme court on appeal before final judgment in the action, under Code Civil Proc. Kan. § 542, subd. 2, allowing such review of an order that "discharges, vacates, or modifies a provisional remedy."—Andrews v. Love, (Kan.) 26 P. 746.

12. Where the court not only refuses a preliminary injunction, but enters a decree settling the rights of the parties, an appeal will lie therefrom.—Helms v. Gilroy, (Or.) 26 P. 851.

— In contempt proceedings.

13. By the provision of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1222, that "the judgment and orders of the court or judge, made in cases of contempt, are final and conclusive," no appeal lies from a judgment of the superior court imposing a fine of more than $300 for contempt. Following Tyler v. Connolly, 65 Cal. 30, 2 P. 414.—In re Vance, (Cal.) 26 P. 101.

— Order directing judgment.

14. A judgment from which an appeal may be taken under Rev. St. Idaho, § 4807, providing that an appeal may be taken "from a final judgment in an action or proceeding" must be the formal judgment itself, and not an order made on the minutes of the court directing such judgment.—Durant v. Comegys, (Idaho) 26 P. 755; Ah Kle v. McLean, Id. 937.

Jurisdictional amount.

15. Under Justice's Code Kan. § 132, providing that no appeal shall be allowed "in jury trials where neither party claims in his bill of particulars a sum exceeding $20," no appeal lies in a replevin case tried by jury, in which the value of the property stated in the affidavit and the damages demanded for its detention do not exceed $20.—Nordmark v. Nystrom, (Kan.) 26 P. 449.

16. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 52, subd. 2, limiting the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court in certain cases to controversies involving not less than $500, does not apply to an appeal from an order of the superior court granting a writ of certiorari to ascertain whether a justice's court had power to make an order annulling a judgment therein. Overruling Blenheim v. Milling Co., 82 Cal. 425, 23 P. 1118. McFarland, J., dissenting.—Heinlen v. Phillips, (Cal.) 26 P. 366.

Appeal from probate court.

17. Prob. Prac. Act Mont. §§ 324, 325, passed by the territorial legislature, which provided for appeals directly from the probate court to the territorial supreme court, are void, as being in conflict with Rev. St. U. S. §§ 1860, 1862, which limited the appellate jurisdiction of the territorial supreme court to appeals from the district court, and which gave the district court jurisdiction of appeals from the probate court; and therefore these two sections of the probate practice act did not become laws of the state by virtue of Const. Schedule, § 1, which adopts, as laws of the state, the laws of the territory "in force" on its admission into the Union.—In re McFarland's Estate, (Mont.) 26 P. 185.

II. REQUISITES.

Payment of docket fees.

18. Laws Colo. 1887, p. 325, providing that a party appealing shall, within 20 days from the approval of his appeal-bond, pay to the clerk of the court to which he takes an appeal fees necessary to have the cause docketed, and that, in case of failure to do so, the cause shall be dismissed on application of appellee, is peremptory, and the cause should be dismissed on failure to comply with the act, though, at the time of the motion to dismiss, the fees may have been paid and the cause docketed.—Busby v. Camp, (Colo.) 26 P. 326.

Time of taking.

19. The provisions of Civil Code Mont. § 421, subd. 2, and section 444, which regulate appeals from judgments of the district court rendered on appeal from inferior courts, and which limit the time of appeal to 90 days, do not now apply to appeals from the district court in probate matters, as Const. Mont. art. 9, § 11, abolished the probate courts, and extended the original jurisdiction of the district court to matters of probate; and appeals from the district court to the Supreme court, in probate matters, are now to be taken under section 421, subd. 1, which regulates appeals from final judgments in actions commenced in the court in which they are rendered, and which limits the time of taking the appeal to one year from the rendition of the judgment.—In re McFarland's Estate, (Mont.) 26 P. 185.

20. An appeal will be dismissed where it is not perfected within the time prescribed by the laws of Washington and the rules of the supreme court, and no reasonable excuse is given for failure to perfect it.—Murphy v. Ross, (Wash.) 26 P. 222.

21. An order made by a trial judge, when without the state, extending the time within which a case for the supreme court could be served, settled, and signed, is a nullity; and, the case not having been served and settled within the time prescribed in the original order, the petition in error must be dismissed.—Dunn v. Travis, (Kan.) 26 P. 247.

Notice.

22. In a suit against several defendants to restrain them from diverting a natural water-course, where the court decrees the rights of defendants, as against each other, in the water-course, as well as the rights of plaintiff, an appeal by one defendant, without notice to his co-defendants, is not properly taken, under Act Wash. March 22, 1890, requiring a party on appealing to serve notice on "the prevailing party."—Jones v. Sander, (Wash.) 26 P. 224.

23. Where an action of ejectment against several defendants is dismissed by plaintiff before defendants are served, or answer, and afterwards two of the named defendants file a cross-complaint seeking affirmative relief, which is dismissed on plaintiff's motion, it is not necessary for the defendants who joined in the cross-complaint to serve the other defendants with notice of appeal from the order dismissing it, as such other defendants are not adverse parties, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 940.—Hinkel v. Donohue, (Cal.) 26 P. 374.

Waiver.

24. The presence of appellee's counsel in the district court at the first term after a case has been appealed thereto from the county court, when he objected to proceeding to trial, and procured a continuance for two terms, during all of which time his name appeared on the docket as attorney in the cause, without objection, constitutes an appearance in the district court, and is a waiver of all objections to appellant's failure to give written notice of the appeal within five days after it was perfected, as required by Sess. Laws Colo. 1885, p. 159, and such waiver will be recognized, though the appearance is shown by extrinsic evidence, and does not affirmatively appear on the record.—Coby v. Halthusen, (Colo.) 26 P. 148.

Bonds.

25. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 946, 965, providing that when appellant is an administrator, acting in another's right, or appeals from a judgment in proceedings had upon the estate, he need file no bond, an administrator who appeals from an order revoking his letters is not relieved from giving an appeal-bond, as such appeal is a personal matter, and not one in which the estate is interested.—Erlanger v. Danielson, (Cal.) 26 P. 505.

26. An undertaking on appeal, which incorrectly recites the date of the order from which the appeal was taken as being December 11th instead of December 8th, is sufficient if it correctly describes the appeal and order in all other respects.—Dyer v. Brady, (Cal.) 26 P. 511; Same v. Martin, Id.

27. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 974, 978, the undertaking on appeal from a justice of the peace must be filed within 30 days from the rendition of judgment in order to give jurisdiction, and, where it is not filed in time, the judgment, on appeal, of the municipal court of appeals of San Francisco, to which it was transferred from the county court, is void.—McKeen v. Naughton, (Cal.) 26 P. 354.

28. Where defendants have filed an undertaking on appeal from the judgment against them and one for stay of execution, in neither of which is made any reference to an appeal from an order denying their motion for new trial, they cannot perfect the latter appeal by filing an undertaking in the supreme court, and claiming the benefit of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 954, for that section refers to defective undertakings, while in this appeal from the denial of a new trial there is no undertaking at all.—Pacific Pav. Co. v. Bolton, (Cal.) 26 P. 650.

III. PRACTICE.

Assignments of error.

29. Unless the overruling of the motion for a new trial is assigned as error, the supreme court cannot consider rulings on the admission of evidence, nor an assignment of error that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence, and is contrary to law.—Struthers v. Fuller, (Kan.) 26 P. 471.

Trial of filing cause.

30. Code Wash. T. 460, which requires causes to be filed on appeal 15 days before the first day of the next succeeding term of the supreme court, is nullified by Const. Wash. art. 4, § 2, which provides that the supreme court shall always be open for the transaction of business, except on non-judicial days; thus abolishing terms.—Skagit Railway & Lumber Co. v. Cole, (Wash.) 26 P. 535.

Record.

31. In California an appeal will be dismissed where there is no certificate to the transcript.—In re Wierbitsky, (Cal.) 26 P. 174.

32. Under Rev. St. Idaho, § 4982, providing that the judge may for good cause extend the time for making the statement on appeal, the record need not recite that the extension was made on good cause shown.—Snyder v. Viola Mining & Smelting Co., (Idaho,) 26 P. 127.

33. Where there is but one notice of appeal, which is taken both from the judgment and the order denying motion for a new trial, and there is appended to the transcript a stipulation that it contains a full and true copy of all papers "necessary and proper to be used on this appeal," and that "the appeal may be heard thereon," the statement of facts on motion for new trial contained in such transcript may be considered without any further identification as having been used at the hearing of the motion.—Moore v. Long Beach Development Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 92.

34. A statement of facts will not be stricken from the files of the supreme court on the ground that it is misleading, if the record shows that it was substituted by order of the court for an original statement which had been lost, and which had been signed by the attorneys for both parties, and certified by the judge.—Squire v. Greer, (Wash.) 26 P. 222.

35. Where amendments were allowed to a statement on motion for a new trial by inserting words and matter at different places, and the same were tacked at the end of the statement with reference to pages and lines, the supreme court will not consider such amendments.—Gallatin Canal Co. v. Lay, (Mont.) 26 P. 1001.

36. Where appellant, in direct violation of rule 4 of the supreme court of Washington, has failed to index and number the pages of a voluminous record, he will be compelled, as a sine qua non of further proceedings, to pay appellee $50 within 12 days, and properly prepare the record within 25 days.—Skagit Railway & Lumber Co. v. Cole, (Wash.) 26 P. 535.

Bill of exceptions.

37. A motion to dismiss an appeal from justice's court, and an exception to its denial, must be preserved by bill of exceptions, and not by transcribing them into the record proper.—Rutter v. Shumway, (Colo.) 26 P. 321.

38. Where, on appeal from an order made after final judgment, directing payment to respondent of a sum of money for the purpose of defraying expense of counsel, the transcript showed that certain affidavits and testimony of witnesses were used at the hearing of the motion, and there is no bill of exceptions, the appeal will be dismissed, under rule 32, supreme court of California, providing in such cases that the papers and evidence used on hearing the motion must be preserved by bill of exceptions.—White v. White, (Cal.) 26 P. 296.

Showing as to evidence.

39. Where the bill of exceptions fails to state that it contains all of the evidence, the court will not review the ruling of the trial court upon a motion for new trial on the ground that the judgment is not sustained by the evidence.—Roy v. Union Mercantile Co., (Wyo.) 26 P. 996.

40. The statement in a bill of exceptions that "the said testimony was all the testimony offered by either party" does not show that all the "evidence" is therein contained, so as to allow a review thereof.—Wheaton v. Rampacker, (Wyo.) 26 P. 912.

41. The sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings cannot be considered unless the record purports to contain all the evidence.—Hoopes v. Buford & George Implement Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 34; Turner v. State, Id. 35.

42. The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict cannot be examined on a case made, which does not show that all the testimony is included in the record; and that fact is not shown by a recital that the case includes the evidence offered by each party before he rested, it appearing that testimony was offered by each in rebuttal; nor is it shown by a certificate of the official stenographer, it not being within his province to determine whether a case made contains all the evidence or not; nor is it shown by a statement in the certificate of the judge who settled the case, improperly included in such certificate.—Ryan v. Madden, (Kan.) 26 P. 679.

43. The sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment cannot be considered, unless the case made purports to contain all the evidence; a statement to that effect in the certificate attached to the case made is not sufficient. Following Eddy v. Weaver, 37 Kan. 540, 15 P. 492.—Glover v. Lawler, (Kan.) 26 P. 7.

Presumption.

44. Rules 6 and 9 of supreme court of Washington provide that the transcript shall be prepared within 30 days after the notice of appeal, and that it shall remain on file in the office of the clerk of the superior court until all the briefs are filed in the supreme court. Held that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that the transcript was prepared within the required time, although the certificate of the clerk of the superior court was not affixed until nearly a month later; there being no rule requiring such certificate to be attached at the time of making the transcript.—Skagit Railway & Lumbar Co. v. Cole, (Wash.) 26 P. 535.

45. To a petition in error was attached a case made, containing what purported to be copies of the pleadings and proceedings in the cause, but not specifically marked and identified; and at the end was a stipulation of both parties as to the time of settling the case, followed by the certificate of the judge. Held, that it would be presumed that the copies of the pleadings and proceedings therein were what they purported to be, and were included in the case made when it was served upon defendants and settled and signed by the judge.—Ryan v. Madden, (Kan.) 26 P. 679; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bank of Glen Elder, Id. 680.

— Impeachment.

46. On motion to dismiss an appeal because the case was not served and settled within due time, a recital in the record that the time had been extended by the trial judge may be impeached by showing want of jurisdiction in the judge to grant the extension.—Dunn v. Travis, (Kan.) 26 P. 247.

Rehearing.

47. A petition for a rehearing, filed by counsel whose names are not on the record, and based upon grounds not presented in the original argument, will not be considered. Affirming 26 P. 615.—City and County of San Francisco v. Pacific Bank, (Cal.) 26 P. 835.

Appeal from inferior courts.

48. Under Justice's Act Kan. § 84, providing that an account duly verified shall be taken as true unless denied under oath, defendant cannot prove payment unless the account has been so denied, and, after a trial has commenced in the district court on appeal, it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to allow defendant to file an affidavit denying the account.—Gray v. Bryant, (Kan.) 26 P. 470.

IV. REVIEW.

In general.

49. On appeal from an order overruling a motion for a new trial, made upon a statement of the case, under Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 298, providing that the statement shall specify the particular errors relied on, and, if no specifications are made, the statement shall be disregarded on hearing of the motion, the supreme court can only consider the specifications of error found in the record.—Carron v. Wood, (Mont.) 26 P. 383.

50. Recitals, in a judgment on the pleadings, of the motion, the grounds thereof, and the ruling thereon, and the entry of judgment as a consequence, though not necessary to the validity of the judgment, are properly there, and, in the absence of a bill of exceptions, are conclusive evidence on appeal of the action of the court.—Derby v. Jackman, (Cal.) 26 P. 610.

51. A demurrer to the evidence not ruled on by the trial court nor otherwise disposed of will not be considered on appeal.—White v. Bird, (Kan.) 26 P. 463.

Necessity of motion for new trial.

52. Where, on a petition in error, the district court reverses the judgment of a justice of the peace, no motion for a new trial is necessary in order that the reversal may be reviewed in the supreme court.—Lyons v. Osborn, (Kan.) 26 P. 31.

53. Where the judgment rendered by a district court is not supported by the pleadings filed in the case, and is contrary to the statutes of the state, the judgment, upon proceedings in error, will be reversed, and no motion for a new trial or exception to the judgment is necessary to bring the case to the supreme court for review.—Co- lumbia Land & Cattle Co. v. Daly, (Kan.) 26 P. 1042; Same v. Murkins, Id.

54. Errors occurring during the trial cannot be considered by the supreme court, unless a motion for a new trial founded upon and including such errors has been made by the complaining party, and acted upon by the trial court, and its ruling excepted to, and afterwards assigned for error in the supreme court.—Duignan v. Claus, (Kan.) 26 P. 699.

55. Where, on an examination of the pleadings with the special findings and general verdict of the jury, a conflict between the special and general findings is apparent, the error may be reviewed in the supreme court, as apparent on the face of the judgment, although no motion for a new trial was made in the court below.—Phelps & Bigelow Windmill Co. v. Buchanan, (Kan.) 26 P. 706.

Waiver of objections.

56. A party who, at the trial, voluntarily assumed the burden of proof, cannot, as plaintiff in error, have a reversal of a judgment against him on the ground that the burden of proof was cast by the pleadings on the opposite party.—Parker v. Richoison, (Kan.) 26 P. 729.

57. A writ of attachment was issued at the commencement of an action, and, the affidavit being traversed, the attachment was sustained in the county court. On appeal to the district court appellant allowed the case to be tried on its merits, without insisting on a disposition of his attachment traverse. Held, that the attachment issue was thereby abandoned.—Collins v. Burns, (Colo.) 26 P. 145.

58. On appeal from the county to the district court, (in which the case might have been begun,) it was too late to object to the jurisdiction, because the record failed to show the taking of the statutory steps on appeal, after the parties appeared without objection and tried the issue by a jury.—Mackey v. Briggs, (Colo.) 26 P. 131.

Issues and objections not raised below.

59. Where a tax is declared void, and no attempt is made in the trial court to have the taxes charged as a lien on the land, the matter cannot be considered on appeal.—Douglass v. Hannon, (Kan.) 26 P. 401.

60. Although an order allowing a statement of the case, on motion for a new trial, to afterwards stand as a bill of exceptions on appeal, is erroneous, exception thereto, when made for the first time in the appellate court, comes too late, and the bill must be regarded as part of the record.—McGrath v. Tallent, (Utah,) 26 P. 574.

61. Where there is a notice of motion for new trial, and an order overruling it, but no motion appears in the record, objection that there is no such motion cannot first be raised in the supreme court.—Needham v. Salt Lake City, (Utah,) 26 P. 920.

62. A bill of exceptions having been certified as correct by the respondent's attorneys, and settled by the judge, and used on the hearing of a motion for a new trial, it is too late to object for the first time in the supreme court that it was not settled in time.—Stufflebeam v. Montgomery, (Idaho,) 26 P. 125.

63. In attachment, where defendant denies the allegations of the affidavit, and has a trial on that issue, he cannot complain for the first time in the supreme court that the verification of the affidavit was defective.—Roy v. Union Mercantile Co., (Wyo.) 26 P. 996.

64. Other grounds for staying execution than the taking of an appeal cannot be raised for the first time on motion in the appellate court.—Swasey v. Adair, (Cal.) 26 P. 83.

Presumption.

65. Where an attachment sued out on the ground of defendant's non-residence is dissolved by the trial court, and the evidence on which its action is based is not all contained in the record on appeal, the supreme court will assume that the trial court acted on sufficient evidence.—Cochrane v. Bussche, (Utah,) 26 P. 294.

66. Where, in ejectment, the court recites that, having heard the proofs of the parties in support of the issues, it finds the facts as alleged in the complaint, and defendant appeals on the judgment roll alone, the judgment will not be reversed because there were no findings on the issues raised by the answer, as, in the absence of a statement or bill of exceptions preserving the evidence, it will not be presumed that evidence was offered in support of the issues upon which there were no findings.—Winslow v. Gohransen, (Cal.) 26 P. 554.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence.

67. A judgment depending upon a finding which is fully sustained by the evidence will not be disturbed.—Moore v. Moody, (Cal.) 26 P. 109.

68. On appeal the court will not interfere with the verdict of the jury, unless it appears that they were actuated by passion or prejudice.—Johnson v. Jones, (Colo.) 26 P. 584.

69. The verdict of a jury, upon conflicting evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.—O'Connor v. Langdon, (Idaho,) 26 P. 659.

70. The court will not disturb a judgment where there is evidence to support it, and no passion or prejudice on the part of the jury is shown.—Mackey v. Briggs, (Colo.) 26 P. 181.

71. A verdict will not be set aside merely because the evidence is conflicting, or because the court, looking at the testimony as written, would have come to a different conclusion than that reached by the jury, who had the witnesses before them.—Pratt v. Clawson, (Utah,) 26 P. 300.

72. Overruling a demurrer to evidence cannot be deemed cause for reversal on appeal, on the ground of the unusual nature of the contract testified to by plaintiff, where it appears to have been reasonable, under the circumstances, and the jury have found specially that such contract was made.—Patmor v. Rombauer, (Kan.) 26 P. 691.

73. The supreme court will not reverse an order setting aside a verdict for plaintiff, and granting a new trial, where the evidence is vague and uncertain, and does not so appear in the record that the court can reach a satisfactory conclusion as to its effect.—Bate v. American Fork City, (Utah,) 26 P. 296.

74. Where there is some evidence to support the special findings and verdict of a jury, and the trial court has sanctioned and approved them, and rendered judgment thereon, the supreme court will not set aside the judgment, although it does not appear from an examination of the evidence how the jury arrived at the verdict.—Hodgden v. Larkin, (Kan.) 26 P. 700.

Findings of court.

75. Where the sole question is one of fact, and the evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the court, the judgment will be affirmed.—Carroll v. Seymour, (Cal.) 26 P. 350; Thornton v. Petersen, Id. 1091.

76. A general finding by the court, on trial of an action of ejectment in which a jury was waived, will not be disturbed on appeal where there is some evidence to sustain such finding.—Culver v. Moeser, (Kan.) 26 P. 709.

77. When a cause is submitted to the court, and there is some evidence to sustain the general findings, the judgment will not be disturbed.—White v. Bird, (Kan.) 26 P. 463; Hurd v. Simpson, Id. 465.

78. Where findings of fact have been waived, and the decision of the trial court is based upon conflicting evidence, the supreme court will not review an order refusing a new trial.—Long v. Sauffey, (Cal.) 26 P. 902.

79. Where, in an action for the balance due on a contract, the court finds from conflicting evidence that no false representations were made as alleged by defendant, its finding will not be disturbed.—Spear v. Lyon, (Cal.) 26 P. 619.

80. Under Code Wash. § 247, a finding by the court stands as a special verdict, and will not be disturbed unless so clearly unfounded that it would be set aside if made by a jury.—Reynolds v. Horton, (Wash.) 26 P. 221.

Time of taking appeal.

81. By the express provisions of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 939, an exception to a decision, on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence, cannot be reviewed, where the appeal is not taken within 60 days after the rendition of judgment.—Curran v. Kennedy, (Cal.) 26 P. 641.

82. A bill of exceptions containing all the evidence, but not specifying any particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision of the court, does not bring up for review the sufficiency of the evidence under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 648, providing that when the exception is to the decision on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it the objection must specify the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient.—City and County of San Francisco v. Pacific Bank, (Cal.) 26 P. 615.

83. 2 Comp. Laws Utah, § 3635, provides that no exception to a decision on the ground that it is not supported by the evidence can be reviewed on appeal unless the appeal is taken within 60 days after rendition of the judgment. Held, that on appeal from an order overruling a motion for new trial, based upon the ground that the evidence did not support the judgment, the supreme court can review the sufficiency of the evidence, although the appeal was taken more than 60 days after judgment.—Needham v. Salt Lake City, (Utah,) 26 P. 920.

Matters not apparent of record.

84. Statement of a fact not in evidence, by counsel in argument to the jury, should not be deemed ground for reversal on appeal, where the argument on both sides is not before the court, and the matter is but trifling.—O'Connor v. Langdon, (Idaho,) 26 P. 659.

85. In replevin of a team of horses from a tax-sale, the abstract on appeal omitted the tax schedule, exemptions of the assessment roll, bill of sale from the treasurer, and the exhibits produced in the trial court. Held, that the record did not set forth sufficient facts to a full understanding of the questions presented for decision, as required by statute.—Haley v. Elliott, (Colo.) 26 P. 559.

86. A party cannot, on appeal, complain that judgment was entered without trial by jury, which was not waived, if the record does not show that a jury was demanded.—Haley v. Eureka County Bank, (Nev.) 26 P. 64.

87. Where in a suit on account defendant objects to evidence of the items of account on the ground that plaintiff failed to furnish a bill of particulars, as required by notice, it must appear by a bill of exceptions whether plaintiff furnished a bill of particulars, or the action of the court in overruling the objection cannot be reviewed, as a bill of particulars is no part of the record, and a paper certified in the transcript to be such bill cannot be noticed.—Fryer v. Breeze, (Colo.) 26 P. 817.

Harmless error.

88. Error in refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction will not justify a reversal of the final judgment, if the record be otherwise free from fault.—Dunne v. Stotesbury, (Colo.) 26 P. 333.

89. The fact that the trial court denied defendant's motion for a new trial during the pendency of his application in the supreme court for leave to prove an exception cannot have prejudiced defendant, where his application was subsequently denied by the supreme court.—McLean v. Crow, (Cal.) 26 P. 596.

Rulings on evidence.

90. Admission of immaterial evidence is not ground of reversal on appeal.—Parker v. Richolson, (Kan.) 26 P. 729.

91. The admission of evidence that an employee of defendant through whose alleged negligence deceased was killed would get intoxicated, though not relevant, as it appeared that at the time of the accident he was not intoxicated, is not ground for reversal, as it could not have influenced the verdict.—Davies v. Oceanic S. S. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 827.

92. Error cannot be predicated on the admission of evidence as to matters which are admitted by the pleadings.—Cowan v. Cowan, (Colo.) 26 P. 934.

93. Error cannot be predicated on the exclusion of testimony, where the witness afterwards gives such testimony in answer to another question.—Cowan v. Cowan, (Colo.) 26 P. 934.

V. EFFECT OF APPEAL.

Stay of proceedings.

94. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 949, providing that upon an appeal the judgment or order appealed from shall be stayed when appellant gives an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $300, as required by section 941, an order requiring an administrator to pay intestate's adopted child a large sum of money as a "family allowance" is stayed by an appeal by other claimants of the estate, who execute the appeal-bond required by section 941.—Pennie v. Superior Court, (Cal.) 26 P. 617.

95. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 943, providing that if the judgment appealed from direct the delivery of personal property, the execution cannot be stayed by appeal unless appellant enters into an undertaking to obey the order of the appellate court, the fact that defendant in replevin has given the redelivery bond described by section 514 does not entitle her to a stay of execution on her appeal from a judgment for plaintiff without giving a stay-bond.—Swasey v. Adair, (Cal.) 26 P. 83.

Affirmance.

96. Where there is no bill of exceptions, and it does not appear which party introduced upon the trial a verbal contract which it is claimed should have been in writing, the judgment will be affirmed.—Dorris v. Sullivan, (Cal.) 26 P. 621.

VI. DECISION.

— Failure to file briefs.

97. Where a motion filed by appellee to affirm a judgment on the ground that appellant has failed to file its brief as soon as the rules of the court require is not called up until a later session, the fact that appellant has not yet filed his brief cannot be urged as an additional reason for granting the motion. The matter must be determined by its status at the time the motion was made.—Skagit Railway & Lumber Co. v. Cole, (Wash.) 26 P. 535.

98. The judgment will not be affirmed on account of appellant's failure to file its brief within the 30 days required by rules 6 and 9 of the supreme court, where such failure is due to a disagreement between him and his attorney, and the refusal of the latter to act.—Skagit Railway & Lumber Co. v. Cole, (Wash.) 26 P. 535.

Dismissal.

99. An appeal will be dismissed if the transcript is not filed within the time prescribed by rule of court.—Judge v. Ohm, (Cal.) 26 P. 649.

100. An appeal will be dismissed where, without satisfactory reason being given, appellant has failed to cause a transcript to be prepared, and to serve and file a brief as required by Sup. Ct. Wash. Rule 4, the appellee having filed a certified copy of the judgment and notice of appeal in accordance with rule 9 of said court.—Higgins v. Burns, (Wash.) 26 P. 755.

101. Where the transcript on appeal was not filed within the time prescribed, but it appears from the affidavits that the attorney of appellant, on the day the notice of appeal was served, was called to a distant state on account of the illness of his mother, and did not return until a few days before the time had expired, and that, owing to a press of business, by inadvertence he overlooked this case for a few days, but that within nine days after the time had expired he presented to the clerk a correct type-written copy of the record to be certified, but before it could be compared and certified the notice to dismiss was served, the motion to dismiss will be overruled.—Chapman v. Bank of California, (Cal.) 26 P. 606.

102. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 950, provides that on appeal from a final judgment the court must be furnished with a copy of the judgment roll; and Id. § 954, provides that, "if the appellant fails to furnish the requisite papers, the appeal may be dismissed." Held that, where the whole judgment roll is not "requisite" to the full determination of the appeal, it will not be dismissed because of the omission of an unessential part.—Faige v. Roeding, (Cal.) 26 P. 787.

103. Under Cal. Sup. Ct. Rule 13, requiring that a notice of motion to dismiss an appeal for failure to file a transcript in accordance with the rules of the court shall specify the objections to the transcript, an appeal will not be dismissed because of appellant's failure to number the folios of the transcript, as required by the rules, if the notice of motion to dismiss does not specify the objection.—Dyer v. Brady, (Cal.) 26 P. 511; Same v. Martin, Id.

104. An appeal by the intervenor from the order of the justice dismissing the petition of intervention, because filed after trial in the main action, should be dismissed, as the intervenors have no standing in court.—Whalen v. McMahon, (Colo.) 26 P. 533.

105. The supreme court will not dismiss an appeal from a judgment of the superior court on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding, if it assumed jurisdiction, and rendered an affirmative judgment.—Smith v. Westerfield, (Cal.) 26 P. 206.

106. A motion to dismiss a writ of error for non-compliance with the rules respecting briefs must be made and insisted on in apt time.—Henry v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 318.

Law of the case.

107. Under a stipulation that the decision of this court in another cause "shall control this case, and that the same judgment may be entered in this case," a reversal having been ordered in the cause referred to, the same judgment will be entered in this case without an examination of the record, but, on a retrial, the opinion filed in that cause will not control, except so far as the facts of the two cases are substantially alike.—Henry v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 321.

VII. LIABILITIES ON APPEAL-BOND.

Recovery of attorney's fees.

108. In a suit on a supersedeas bond given to stay a judgment for possession in a suit for forcible entry and detainer, and conditioned for the payment of all costs and damages that may be awarded against the defendant in case the judgment should be affirmed, the plaintiff cannot recover the value of the services of his attorney, either in the justice's court or in the district court.—Deisher v. Gehre, (Kan.) 26 P. 8.

APPEARANCE.

Judgment entered on unauthorized appearance, see Judgment, 2.

Authority of attorney to enter appearance.

In a suit to foreclose a mortgage, a defective service by publication had been made. The defendant wrote to an attorney to attend to the case. On June 21st, and again on July 18th, the attorney wrote: "If you want me to attend to the matter for you, send me a retainer." Having heard nothing further from the defendant the attorney, on August 4th, had the service set aside, and then entered a general appearance, and obtained time to answer. Afterwards he received a letter from the defendant telling him to "take hold of the case at once, and be sure to stave it off." Held, that the defendant was bound by the general appearance entered by the attorney.—Clark v. Lilliebridge, (Kan.) 26 P. 43.

ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

Effect of agreement to arbitrate.

An agreement to arbitrate all matters in dispute, made by the parties to an action then pending before a justice of the peace, does not of itself operate a discontinuance of the action, where the record fails to show that the agreement was made in the presence of the justice, or that his attention had ever been called to it, or that it was ever made the basis of a motion to dismiss or discontinue the suit, or that any arbitration has ever taken place.—Snively v. Hill, (Kan.) 26 P. 1024.

Arraignment.

ARREST.

Right of appeal in civil action, see Appeal, 8, 9.

In civil action—Affidavit.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 861, 862, which permit the arrest of defendant in an action on contract, express or implied, brought before a justice of the peace, when plaintiff makes an affidavit that defendant is about to depart from the state with intent to defraud creditors, or that he has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, or that he has removed or disposed of his property with intent to defraud creditors, an affidavit for arrest, which shows that an action has been begun for the recovery of an "alleged" indebtedness owing by defendant, but which contains no averment that such indebtedness or cause of action exists, is fatally defective.—In re Vinich, (Cal.) 26 P. 528.

2. The affidavit should also set forth the facts constituting the fraud on defendant's part, and allegations on "information and belief" are not sufficient in an action in justice's court.—In re Vinich, (Cal.) 26 P. 528.

ASSIGNMENT.

See, also, Assignment for Benefit of Creditors.
Of patent, see Patents for Inventions.
What is assignable, see Equity, 1.

Of part of demand.

1. An assignment of a claim to rents in the hands of a receiver is not made an assignment of part of a demand only, by the fact that the receiver holds the money subject to costs.—Garniss v. Superior Court of San Francisco, (Cal.) 26 P. 351.

— Rights of assignee to sue alone.

2. Where the value of property destroyed by fire occasioned by the act of a wrong-doer is in excess of the amount of insurance money paid thereon, and the owner assigns his claim against the wrong-doer, to the extent of the insurance money paid, to the insurer, the latter has only a joint interest with the owner in a single cause of action, and cannot sue at law thereon alone.—State Ins. Co. v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 838.

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

See, also, Insolvency.

Action by assignee, see Fraudulent Conveyances, 9.

Requiring creditor accepting dividend to release assignor, see Constitutional Law, 18.

Construction and effect.

1. Rev. St. Wyo., relating to assignments for benefit of creditors, does not require that the deed of assignment shall provide for the disposition of the dividends of those who refuse to accept them and release the assignor, and a failure to so provide does not convert an assignment under the statute to one at common law.—Downes v. Parshall, (Wyo.) 26 P. 994.

Title of assignee.

2. An assignee for the benefit of creditors takes the property assigned subject to all existing valid liens and charges against it in the hands of the assignor.—Helms v. Gilroy, (Or.) 26 P. 851.

Associations.

ASSUMPSIT.

When lies.

1. A complaint alleged that, plaintiff and defendant differing as to the amount due upon a mortgage, defendant agreed that if plaintiff would pay the amount claimed by defendant to be due, and it afterwards transpired that the amount so paid was in excess of the amount due, defendant would repay to plaintiff such excess; and, further, that the amount so paid was more than was due, but that such excess had not been repaid. Held sufficient to constitute a cause of action.—Rodgers v. Wittenmyer, (Cal.) 26 P. 869.

Evidence.

2. A complaint alleged that, plaintiff and defendant differing as to the amount due upon a mortgage, defendant agreed that if plaintiff would pay the amount claimed by defendant to be due, and it afterwards transpired that the amount so paid was in excess of the amount due, defendant would repay to plaintiff such excess. Held, that the following testimony given by plaintiff was insufficient to prove the agreement to repay: "The day the money was paid, * * * of course I was prepared to pay under protest. I went to [defendant] when I saw the mistake. * * * She agreed to come up here and see about it. * * * I notified her of the mistake, and she told me she would come up here and see" her agent, "and, if I was right, it would be right."—Rodgers v. Wittenmyer, (Cal.) 26 P. 869.

ATTACHMENT.

See, also, Execution; Garnishment.

Right of appeal from order discharging, see Appeal, 7.

Before maturity of debt.

1. Under Sess. Laws Wash. 1888, § 8, providing for an attachment upon causes of action not due, where the defendant has made a fraudulent disposition of his property, the allegation as to such disposition is material, and must be proved, in order to justify the bringing of the action before the claim is due.—Cox v. Dawson, (Wash.) 26 P. 973.

Issuance of writ after verdict and before judgment.

2. Under the statute in Kansas providing that an attachment may issue "at or after the commencement" of an action, the writ may issue after verdict and before final judgment is rendered and recorded.—Davis v. Jenkins, (Kan.) 26 P. 459.

Claims otherwise secured.

8. Where the owner of land contracts to convey it upon the payment of a certain price, for which he accepts notes, but the title is not to pass until the notes are paid, the land is, by express contract, held in pledge for such payment, and the notes and contract are in the nature of a mortgage, and the lien will pass to the assignee of such a note, who, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 538, requiring a plaintiff in attachment to state that his claim is without security, cannot maintain action by attachment therefor. McFarland, J., dissenting.—Gessner v. Palmater, (Cal.) 26 P. 789.

Grounds for issue of writ.

4. The fact that a debtor has sold, transferred, and mortgaged all his property for the purpose of paying bona fide debts, thereby preferring some of his creditors to others, is not of itself ground for the issue of an attachment against him. Following Tootle v. Coldwell, 30 Kan. 125, 1 P. 329.—Abnerthy Furniture Co. v. Armstrong, (Kan.) 26 P. 693; De Wolf v. Armstrong, Id. 1033.

5. The fact that one who has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors retains possession of the property, and uses it in his business as before, without any attempt for nearly a month to carry out the purpose of the assignment, is sufficient evidence of fraud to sustain an attachment.—Roy v. Union Mercantile Co., (Wyo.) 26 P. 996.

Levy on personality.

6. A sheriff, in the execution of a writ of attachment, is not authorized to take personal property into his custody where it is in the possession of a third person. In such case he can only attach the property by leaving a certified copy of the writ, and a notice specifying the property attached, with the person having the possession of the same.—Lewis v. Birdsey, (Or.) 26 P. 623.

Effect of appearance.

7. Where, on attachment, defendant is personally served with summons, and appears to take issue upon the allegations of the affidavit, but makes no defense in the main action, the court acquires complete jurisdiction.—Roy v. Union Mercantile Co., (Wyo.) 26 P. 996.

Intervention after trial of main action.

8. Under Gen. St. Colo. 1883, § 2011, providing that third persons must assert their rights to property seized under attachment issued by a justice of the peace before the trial of the main action, a claimant of a fund garnished under an attachment cannot intervene after the trial of the main action and judgment for plaintiff.—Whalen v. McMahon, (Colo.) 26 P. 583.

Dissolution.

9. Where land has been levied on under an attachment, any person claiming to be the owner thereof may move the court to discharge the attachment though he is not a party to the original action.—Dearborn v. Vaughan, (Kan.) 26 P. 1038.

10. A motion to discharge an attachment on the ground that the affidavit on which it was issued is insufficient on its face must explicitly point out the insufficiency.—Windt v. Banniza, (Wash.) 26 P. 189.

11. An attachment may be discharged on motion and affidavits of only one of several defendants.—Windt v. Banniza, (Wash.) 26 P. 189.

Effect of appeal-bond.

12. An appeal-bond does not operate to release property taken on attachment.—Collins v. Burns, (Colo.) 26 P. 145.

Dissolution—Right to jury trial.

13. Under Laws Wash. 1885-86, p. 45, §§ 31, 32, providing for dismissal of an attachment on motion to the court in which the action is brought, on the ground that it was improperly or irregularly issued, and that, if the motion is made on affidavits on defendant's part, plaintiff may oppose the same by affidavits or other evidence, the questions of fact raised by the motion are to be tried by the court, and, the attachment being merely ancillary to the action, a jury cannot be demanded.—Windt v. Banniza, (Wash.) 26 P. 189.

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

Contempt by attorney. see Contempt, 2, 3.

Privileged communications, see Witness, 2.

Liabilities of attorney—Collection of note.

1. A complaint against an attorney alleged that he had received the full amount of a note left with him by plaintiff for collection, that he had surrendered the note to the maker, and refused to pay over the amount received. The answer denied receiving any money, and alleged that defendant, being a creditor of such maker, had, with the consent of plaintiff, taken an assignment of a contract held by such maker to secure both claims. Upon the trial plaintiff testified that he gave the note to defendant to collect or obtain security, that he pointed out property for the satisfaction of the note, and that the maker offered to give a second mortgage on his property, having a sufficient margin, as defendant knew, and that he understood the contract was assigned to defendant as security. Defendant was allowed to prove that the assignment of the contract was all he could get, and the court charged that, unless the jury found defendant had failed to collect or get good security when he could have so done, and thereby the debt was lost, they should find for the defendant. A verdict was rendered for plaintiff. Held, that the case having been tried and submitted, without objection, on the theory of negligence in collecting the note, defendant received the benefit of a defense that the note could not have been collected, and as that was more favorable than he was entitled to under the issue in the complaint, he cannot complain of the verdict.—Horn v. Hamilton, (Cal.) 26 P. 833.

Compensation of attorney.

2. In an action for attorney's fees, where it is alleged in one count of the complaint that the services were reasonably worth $1,500, of which $500 had been paid, and in another count that they were rendered for the agreed price of $500, and the further sum of $1,000 in case of success, and the answer denies the reasonable worth, and alleges that the agreement was for $500 and no more, evidence as to what would be a reasonable contingent fee in such case is irrelevant. Affirming 24 P. 893. Beatty, C. J., dissenting.—Ellis v. Woodburn, (Cal.) 26 P. 963.

Contracts between—Dismissal of suit by client.

3. An attorney sued to set aside a deed made by his client to defendant. By an agreement duly acknowledged and recorded, the client was to convey to the attorney an undivided half of the land in the event of the success of the suit. Without the consent of the attorney, his client dismissed the suit. This was done under an agreement with defendant, who paid a sum of money and executed to the client a lease of the land for life, and received from him a new deed. Held, in a suit by the attorney for specific performance of the agreement with him, that, assuming that the dismissal was a "dismissal agreed" and conclusive on the parties, the attorney was not a privy, and could not rely on any estoppel thereunder, but he could use the record to show compliance by him with his agreement, and the facts stated made a prima facie case in his favor.—Root v. Topeka Water Supply Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 398; Id. 400.

BANKS AND BANKING.

National banks—Illegal loans.

1. The fact that a note in favor of a national bank was not executed by the real debtor, for the purpose of evading Rev. St. U. S. § 5200, which prohibits national banks from loaning to any one person or corporation an amount in excess of one-tenth of its capital stock, does not prevent the bank from enforcing the note against the maker, since the federal courts, whose decision on the construction of federal statutes is binding on state courts, have decided that a violation of this section by the banks cannot be taken advantage of by the debtors, but only by the government.—Portland Nat. Bank v. Scott, (Or.) 26 P. 276.

—Taxation.

2. Rev. St. U. S. § 5219, provides that shares in a national bank may be included in the valuation of personal property of the owners in assessing taxes imposed by the state in which the bank is located, and the state may determine the manner and place of taxing the shares; but the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the state. Held, that the shares must be assessed to the individual stockholders, and not to the bank itself, in solido, and that the stockholders are entitled to the same deductions as are allowed to other tax-payers owning moneyed capital.—First Nat. Bank v. Fisher, (Kan.) 26 P. 482.

BASTARDY.

Instructions.

An instruction, in a bastardy case, that the interests of the mother of the child and the interests of defendant are not equal; that the mother is a mere witness for the state in a proceeding to compel defendant (the father) to contribute to the support of the child, while defendant has a direct pecuniary interest in the result of the proceeding; and that "defendant, being liable to be charged with such support, is directly interested in the result, while the mother has no such interest,"—is erroneous in stating that the mother of the child has no interest in the proceeding, and also in that it comes too near to telling the jury that defendant is the father of the child.—Reed v. State, (Kan.) 26 P. 956.

Actions on.

In an action on the bond of a county treasurer, which is referred, a finding by the referee that, owing to mistakes made by such treasurer, the county auditor, and the board of county commissioners in the settlement of his accounts, he failed to pay over a part of the money received by him, is sufficient to warrant judgment against him and his sureties for such amount.—Ferry v. King County, (Wash.) 26 P. 537; Id. 539.

BOUNDARIES.

Of counties, see Counties, 3.

Conveyance according to government survey—Established corners.

1. In construing a deed describing land by the government survey the court must ascertain the corners of the survey as actually established, and not as they ought to have been established; but the presumption that the deed was intended to convey according to the established corners may be rebutted by evidence that the parties were mistaken as to the location of the government line, and intended to convey a definite tract.—Squire v. Greer, (Wash.) 26 P. 222.

Establishment by agreement.

2. An instruction that the agreed boundary line claimed by defendant in ejectment must have been "distinctly agreed on" is not misleading, as impliedly excluding evidence to prove the agreed line from the acts, situation, acquiescence, and relation of the parties.—Helm v. Wilson, (Cal.) 26 P. 1103.

Evidence.

3. Plaintiff's deed described the land as "commencing at a point 60 rods west of the north-east corner of section 8, * * * running thence west * * *" The north line of the section did not run due west, as indicated by the true meridian. Held, that the presumption is that the line commenced at a point west of the north-east corner of section 8, according to the true meridian, but may be rebutted by extraneous testimony.—Reed v. Tacoma Bldg. & Sav. Ass'n, (Wash.) 26 P. 252; Clark v. Same, Id. 253.

4. Where the maker and recorder of a survey testifies that interlineations appearing therein were made by him before its execution, the survey is admissible in evidence.—Burdell v. Taylor, (Cal.) 26 P. 1094.

5. The successor of a county surveyor, having charge of the documents in the office, who testifies that he has made frequent examination of documents purporting to be in his predecessor's handwriting, is competent to testify that interlineations appearing in a survey made by his predecessor are in his handwriting.—Burdell v. Taylor, (Cal.) 26 P. 1094.

6. In ejectment to recover land claimed by plaintiff to be included in his surveys of swamp and overflowed land, and by defendant as being included in another survey to him, the county surveyor who made all the original surveys, and his successor, testified that the land was in plaintiff's survey, and there was a natural monument still standing at which the surveys were begun. The surveyor employed by defendant commenced at a stake which defendant told him was the section corner, but about which he knew nothing. Held, that the evidence warranted a finding for plaintiff.—Burdell v. Taylor, (Cal.) 26 P. 1094.

Carriage of goods — Limitation of liability.

1. The receipt given by an express company for a box received by it for transportation contained a stipulation that the company was not to be held liable "for any loss or damage of any box, package, or thing, for over $50, unless the just and true value thereof is herein stated." Held, that the express company, as a common carrier, might limit its liability to an amount stated in a written receipt or special contract, in the event of loss or injury to the goods through ordinary negligence, if such special contract was voluntarily and fairly entered into, and was just and reasonable in its terms; and that the stipulation contained in the receipt was reasonable, and, it appearing to have been freely and fairly entered into, and nothing showing gross negligence, fraud, or intentional wrong on the part of the express company, it was not liable for any loss or damage to the box for more than $50. Injuries to passengers.

2. Where it is conceded that a passenger was injured by a train leaving the track, and that the derailment was caused by a broken rail, it is not error to charge that, if the passenger was free from fault and was injured, then the law presumes negligence on the part of the company.—Southern Kan. Ry. Co. v. Walsh, (Kan.) 26 P. 45.

3. In an action by a passenger against a railroad company for injury received by the falling of a berth, it appeared that the accident happened on a car on which it was understood that the passengers should look after their own berths, and were accordingly charged a low rate of fare. Soon after the accident, plaintiff wrote the company that she was injured by the carelessness of one of its employees. Shortly afterwards, in a letter to the company, she said that it was a newsboy who pushed the berth up. On the trial she testified that she thought it was a brakeman. Held, that there was sufficient evidence that the injury resulted by reason of the negligence of an agent of the company to sustain a verdict for plaintiff. ANDERS, C. J., and STILES, J., dissenting.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hess, (Wash.) 26 P. 886.

4. In an action against a railroad company for injuries received by a passenger on a mixed train through the alleged negligence of the trainmen in coupling the parts of the train, the court instructed, in the language of Civil Code Cal. § 2100, that "a railroad carrying passengers paying fare must use the utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage, and must provide everything necessary for that purpose," but omitted the concluding words of the section, "and must exercise to that end a reasonable degree of skill." Held, that the omission did not injure defendant, as the omitted part simply added to the requirement of diligence, skill in using it, and the instruction as given did not ignore or take from the jury the consideration of any evidence or argument rebutting the presumption of negligence created by plaintiff's evidence.—Fisher v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 894.

Injuries to passengers — Contributory negligence.

5. A passenger on an excursion train, who seats himself on the rear end of an open car, on a railing not exceeding 2½ inches in thickness, with his feet elevated by being placed on the seat directly in front of him, and with no possible opportunity of protecting himself in case of a sudden jolt of the car, when he might have found a safe seat in an adjoining car or stood up in the car in question, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; and, in an action for his death, caused by falling from his seat while the train was in motion, it is error to submit the question of contributory negligence to the jury.—Jackson v. Crilly, (Colo.) 26 P. 831.

6. In an action by a passenger against a railroad company for injury received by the falling of a berth while she was away from her seat and standing by the stove, it is not necessary for her to allege and prove necessity for her absence from her seat; contributory negligence being a matter of defense.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hess, (Wash.) 26 P. 886.

Ejection of passengers.

7. It is the duty of a passenger, if he has not the required ticket or token evidencing his right to travel on that train, to pay his fare or quietly leave the train when requested, and resort to his appropriate remedy for the damages he has sustained; and if he attempts to retain his seat without paying his fare, and is expelled by the conductor, using no more force than is necessary, he can recover no damages for the injury incurred by such expulsion.—Peabody v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 1053.

8. When it is admitted that a railroad company which is sued for the ejection of a passenger from the train is the owner of the railroad on which the train runs, a presumption arises that the same is operated by the company owning it, and the burden of proof is upon such company to show to the satisfaction of the jury that such is not the fact.—Peabody v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 1053.

Personal effects of passengers.

9. The carrier, though without fault, is liable for the destruction of the trunks, where its agent checked them as baggage with full knowledge that they contained, besides personal apparel, stage costumes and properties.—Oakes v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 230.

10. Trunks containing stage properties, costumes, paraphernalia, advertising matter, etc., carried with a theatrical company on its journey, are not "baggage," as they are not articles required for the pleasure, convenience, or necessity of the members of the troupe during their journey; and therefore no liability can arise against the carrier for their loss or destruction, unless accepted as baggage by the carrier.—Oakes v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 230.

CHATTEL MORTGAGES.

Trover by mortgagor, see Trover and Conversion, 1.

Description.

1. In an action by the mortgagee of chattels to recover possession of the same, brought against the mortgagor and one C., who claimed to be the owner of the mortgaged chattels, and to have owned them at the time the mortgage was executed, the mortgagor admitted the validity of the mortgage. Held, that it was immaterial as between plaintiff and C. whether the mortgage correctly described the chattels.—Hamilton v. Miller, (Kan.) 26 P. 1030.

Renewal.

2. Under Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 3905, providing that a chattel mortgage filed as required by statute shall be void "as against the creditors of the person making the same, or against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees in good faith, after the expiration of one year after the filing thereof," unless it be renewed by the filing of an affidavit showing the interest of the mortgagee in the property, and, if the mortgage is to secure the payment of money, the amount yet due and unpaid, a subsequent mortgagee, who becomes such before the expiration of the year from the first filing of the prior chattel mortgage, cannot take advantage of an omission to renew the prior mortgage. Following Howard v. Bank, (Kan.) 24 P. 983.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bank of Glen Elder, (Kan.) 26 P. 680.

Rights and liabilities of mortgagee in possession.

3. The mortgagee in possession after condition broken has a title which falls short of being absolute, to the extent that he is bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence in disposing of the goods, and to account for any surplus after payment of his debt.—First Nat. Bank v. Wilbur, (Colo.) 26 P. 777.

Foreclosure.

4. In an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, in which many other lienholders are made parties, and file answers in the nature of cross-petitions, and distinct issues are made between plaintiffs and such other lienholders, and between such other lienholders as among themselves as to the priority of their several liens, it is error for the trial court to sustain a demurrer to the evidence of plaintiffs, on behalf of some of the lienholders, and dismiss the action as to them, and thus deprive other parties of having issues between them and demurrants heard and determined.—Ott v. Doak, (Kan.) 26 P. 1040.

Action for deficiency.

5. Upon foreclosure of a chattel mortgage for default in the payment of notes secured by it, by notice and sale, as provided by statute, the return of the sheriff showed a deficiency. Held, that the mortgagee could maintain an action for such deficiency, on a complaint setting forth the facts, including the foreclosure, sale, and report of sheriff showing the deficiency. The Idaho statutes providing for a personal judgment against defendant in case of foreclosure of mortgage on real estate do not apply to foreclosure of a chattel mortgage by notice and sale.—*Advantage Thresher Co. v. Legislative powers.

1. Sess. Laws Kan. 1887, c. 236, which authorizes the issue of bonds of the township of Mound City, in Linn county, on a vote of the electors to that effect, to reimburse citizens of the township who had raised money by subscription to build a court-house which they had donated to the county, is not unconstitutional.—Creager v. Snyder, (Kan.) 26 P. 21.

2. In consideration of "$1 and the enhanced value of other lots owned by the grantor," certain lots were conveyed to a township, "its successor or successors," to be used for the erection of a town-hall thereon. The building was erected and paid for by the township. The lots were within a city of the third class, which was then a part of the township, and was subsequently organized as a city of the second class. Parts of the township had been detached and included in other townships. Held that, by operation of law and by the express terms of the conveyance, the city was the owner of the property, and that in Laws Kan. 1889, c. 62, passed while a suit to quiet title was pending, the legislature exceeded its authority in providing for a sale of the property, and a division of its proceeds between the city and the township.—City of Wellington v. Township of Wellington, (Kan.) 26 P. 415.

Delegation to harbor commissioners.

3. Under Pol. Code Cal. §§ 2563, 2569, subd. 6, empowering the board of harbor commissioners of the port of Eureka to make rules and regulations for the protection of navigation in Humboldt bay, and to impose penalties, not exceeding $500 for any one violation, for the violation of such rules, the harbor commissioners cannot impose a penalty, as its imposition is a legislative act, and the legislature cannot delegate such power to any other body.—Board of Harbor Commissioners v. Excelsior Redwood Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 375.

Creation of courts.

4. Senate Bill Colo. No. 96, creating "the court of appeals," is constitutional.—In re Constitutionality of a Court of Appeals, (Colo.) 26 P. 214.

5. Const. Colo. art. 6, § 2, which declares that "the supreme court, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be co-extensive with the state, and shall have a general superintending control over all inferior courts, under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law," does not give the supreme court exclusive appellate jurisdiction, but an intermediate appellate court, whose judgment shall be final in certain cases, is authorized by article 6, § 1, which lodges the judicial power of the state in certain designated courts, and in such other courts as may be established by law.—People v. Richmond, (Colo.) 26 P. 929.

6. The Colorado statute creating a court of review inferior to the supreme court, to be known as the "court of appeals," does not violate Const. Colo. art. 6, § 28, which declares that "all laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state; and the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of all the courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, and the force and effect of the proceedings, judgments, and decrees of such courts severally, shall be uniform," since the court of appeals is not of the same class or grade with any of the trial courts.—People v. Richmond, (Colo.) 26 P. 929.

7. Act 8th Gen. Assem. Colo., which creates an appellate court to be known as the "court of appeals," provides that in causes heard in the trial courts of record, except in the county courts, an appeal lies to, or a writ of error from, the court of appeals, the judgment of which is final where the amount of the judgment appealed from is $2,500 or less, and where the controversy does not relate to a franchise or freehold, or require the construction of a provision of the constitution of the state or of the United States; that in the cases last mentioned, and in criminal cases, the court of appeals has jurisdiction, but its decisions are reviewable by the supreme court. Held, that such statute is valid under Const. Colo. art. 6, § 1, which provides that "the judicial power of the state * * * shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, county courts, justices of the peace, and such other courts as may be provided by law."—People v. Richmond, (Colo.) 26 P. 929.

Submission of proposed legislation to supreme court.

8. Questions submitted by the houses of the legislature to the supreme court under Const. Colo. art. 6, § 3, should be specific, and, when the inquiry concerns the constitutionality of a bill, the provisions of the constitution, supposed to be in conflict with the bill, should be indicated.—In re House Bill No. 165, (Colo.) 26 P. 141.

Local and special laws.

9. Const. Cal. art. 4, § 25, prohibiting the legislature from passing local or special laws in certain cases, does not affect past legislation. SHARPSTEIN, J., dissenting.—Nevada School-Dist. v. Shoecraft, (Cal.) 26 P. 211.

10. Act Cal. March 14, 1891, readjusting the salaries of all county officers of counties of the thirty-fifth class, and reducing the salaries of the sheriffs thereof, is not repugnant to Const. Cal. art. 1, § 11, providing that all "laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," nor to article 4, § 25, prohibiting the passage of any local or special law "affecting the fees or salary of any officer."—Cody v. Murphey, (Cal.) 26 P. 1081.

11. Act Or. Feb. 18, 1889, entitled "An act to appropriate $10,000 to aid Tillamook county in the construction of a wagon-road from the Nebahem river, in the north end of said county, to the Fuqua toll-road, in the south end of the county, and to use $1,000 of said appropriation on a branch road from South Frairie to Netart's bay, and to create a board of commissioners to construct said work," is a special and local law within Const. Or. art. 4, § 23, subd. 7, which forbids the enactment of "special or local laws * * * for laying, opening, and working on highways, and for the election or appointment of supervisors."—Maxwell v. Tillamook County, (Or.) 26 P. 808.

12. Const. Colo. art. 15, § 7, provides that no railroad company in existence at the time of the adoption of the constitution shall have the benefit of any future legislation without first filing with the secretary of state an acceptance of the provisions of the constitution. The C. C. R. Co., incorporated in 1865 under a special charter, which provided that the legislature might, after 25 years, prescribe the rates to be charged for transportation, never accepted the provisions of the constitution. Held, that it is not entitled to protection under the constitutional provision against special legislation, and senate bill No. 69, prescribing freight and passenger rates for the road, is constitutional.—In re Constitutionality of Senate Bill No. 69, (Colo.) 26 P. 157.

Vested rights.

13. The provision in Rev. St. Wyo. § 118, declaring that any creditor accepting a dividend from the property of an assignor shall release him from all further liability on the claim, is not in conflict with Rev. St. U. S. § 1925, providing that the legislature of Wyoming shall not pass any law impairing the rights of private property.—Downes v. Parshall, (Wyo.) 26 P. 994.

Right to hearing in supreme court.

14. The citizen has no natural or inalienable right to a hearing, in the supreme court of Colorado, nor is the right to have each controversy heard in the supreme court given by the bill of rights, (section 6,) which declares "that courts of justice shall be open to every person, and a speedy remedy afforded for every injury to person, property, or character, and that right and justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay."—People v. Richmond, (Colo.) 26 P. 929.

Taxation.

15. A bill providing for public improvements by special taxes levied upon districts having territorial limits different from the municipal corporation levying the tax, and without limiting the rate of taxation or amount of indebtedness for such purposes, is unconstitutional.—In re House Bill No. 165, (Colo.) 26 P. 141.

Constructive Trusts.

CONTEMPT.

Right of appeal, see Appeal, 18.

What constitutes.

1. A defendant who interferes with the possession of plaintiff's tenant by driving his cattle from the land, and offering to lease to another, when a decree prohibits him or his attorneys from entering upon the land, or interfering with plaintiffs or their tenants in the possession, control, or ownership thereof, is guilty of contempt of court.—Ex parte Vance, (Cal.) 26 P. 118; Ex parte Carpenter, Id.

2. An attorney is guilty of contempt who advises his client to drive cattle from certain land in dispute, and to offer to lease the land, when there is a decree prohibiting the client from entering on the land or disturbing those on it in their possession.—Ex parte Vance, (Cal.) 26 P. 118; Ex parte Carpenter, Id.

3. Criticism or contemptuous language in regard to the acts and declarations of the judge of the trial court, embodied in a brief filed in the appellate court, is not in contempt of the trial court.—In re Dalton, (Kan.) 26 P. 673; In re Thompson, Id. 674.

Power to punish.

4. In the absence of direct statutory provisions, the fact that the person in contempt may be proceeded against by indictment does not take away the power of the court to commit for contempt.—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

Power to punish—Punishment of judge.

5. Since a probate judge may purge himself of the contempt by the production of the records, as ordered by the district court which succeeds him under Const. Wyo. art. 5, § 10, the order of the district court that he be imprisoned until he does produce them is not void, as imposing a term of imprisonment without limit; nor is such order affected by Sess. Laws Wyo. 1890, p. 144, § 121, which fixes a definite punishment for witnesses who refuse to be sworn or answer questions, and which expressly provides that "this section shall not prevent summary proceedings for contempt."—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

6. Since the district court is constructively in possession of the records of the territorial probate court, which it succeeds under Const. Wyo. art. 5, § 10, and art. 21, § 17, the territorial probate judge holds them subject to its order; and, on his refusal to produce them when called for, he may be punished for contempt.—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

7. The fact that the district court may compel the production of the records of the territorial probate court by mandamus does not deprive it of the more summary proceedings by contempt against the probate judge.—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

Compelling attorney to apologize.

8. Where the trial court has fined an attorney for contempt in using disrespectful language, it has no authority to further order that he shall purge himself of the contempt by apologizing; and mandamus will lie to compel the vacation of an order denying him the right to practice until he does so apologize, the fine having been duly paid.—State v. Sachs, (Wash.) 26 P. 865.

Procedure.

9. Though Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1991, provides that disobedience of a subpoena may be punished as a contempt, "and if the witness be a party his complaint or answer may be stricken out," it is error to strike out the answer for defendant's disobedience of a subpoena duces tecum, where his counsel admit the contents of the document sought to be produced, so as not to cripple plaintiff's case.—Frazer v. Lynch, (Cal.) 26 P. 344.

10. Where defendant is an illiterate person, and it is not clear that she knew the contents of a subpoena duces tecum, and her counsel knew nothing of the matter, and had given her no advice as to her duty, the court should notify her of the effect of her disobedience, and give her an opportunity to produce the document before striking out her answer.—Frazer v. Lynch, (Cal.) 26 P. 344.

11. It is error to issue an order of arrest for a contempt alleged to have been committed not in the presence of the court, unless an affidavit or information, containing a statement of the facts constituting the alleged contempt, has first been filed with the court.—State v. Henthorn, (Kan.) 26 P. 987; Same v. Vincent. Id. 939.

12. The fact that an order to show cause why defendant should not be punished for contempt was not styled in the name of the state, as required by Const. Wyo. art. 5, § 15, does not render the order of commitment void, where defendant voluntarily submitted to the order to show cause, which was personally served on him, and appeared both in person and by counsel, without raising the question of jurisdiction.—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

13. Where the record of the district court shows that a rule to show cause was personally served on the probate judge; that the latter, with full knowledge of the charge against him, appeared both in person and by counsel, and submitted his case on the evidence; that, on hearing the order to produce the records of the probate court, he declined to make further answer; and that he retained them after repeated requests to turn them over,—an objection to the order of commitment, on the ground that the probate judge was held in contempt in matters which had not occurred when the order was made, and that he had no hearing or opportunity to be heard, is not well taken.—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

14. In a proceeding for contempt of court in publishing in a newspaper an article concerning the action of the court, defendant answered under oath that one H. was the sole editor of the paper in which the article constituting the alleged contempt was published, at the time of its publication, and that defendant had nothing to do with the publication of the article, and had no knowledge thereof until he was arrested. The verified answer of H., who was arrested at the same time with defendant, and on the same process, also stated that he, H., was the sole editor of the paper in which the article complained of appeared, and that he was solely responsible for its publication. Held, that defendant should have been discharged.—State v. Vincent, (Kan.) 26 P. 939.

CONTINUANCE.Surprise.

1. A contractor did certain work for a water-works company under a written contract. He made a claim for extra work, and on a settlement the company agreed to pay him $1,100 therefor. Its president signed and delivered to the contractor a note for $400, and one for $700. The first note only was countersigned by the secretary. In a suit on the notes, the contractor at the trial withdrew the count on the $700 note, and added a count for $700 as a "balance due on settlement" when the amendment was made. Held, that it was not error to refuse a continuance on the ground of surprise.—Parsons Water Co. v. Hill, (Kan.) 26 P. 412.

Absence of witness.

2. On a motion for a continuance on account of the absence of a witness, the affidavit must set forth specific acts of diligence, and it is not enough to state that the party had made diligent inquiry without showing how, when, and of whom inquiry was made.—Struthers v. Fuller, (Kan.) 26 P. 471.

3. Comp. Laws Utah, § 3353, provides that a motion for continuance, on the ground of absence of evidence, may be made upon affidavit showing the materiality of the evidence, and that due diligence has been used to procure it, and that the court may require the moving party to state in the affidavit the facts he expects to prove. Held, that a statement to the effect that defendant is too sick to leave his bed, that his testimony is material, and that his attorney cannot safely go to trial without him, is insufficient to require a continuance, where it is not made under oath, and does not contain a statement of the facts to be proven.—McGrath v. Tallent, (Utah,) 26 P. 574.

Conditions of granting.

4. Civil Code Mont. § 253, authorizes a continuance on account of absence of material testimony, when the adverse party refuses to admit that such testimony would be given; and that "upon terms" the court may, in its discretion, postpone a trial upon other grounds than the absence of evidence. Section 503 authorizes the courts to impose costs as a condition of granting a continuance. Held, that costs may be imposed as a condition of a continuance for absence of evidence.—State v. Second Judicial District Court, (Mont.) 26 P. 182.

Validity—Consideration.

1. The relinquishment of a homestead entry, and the withdrawal of a protest against the final proof of another, is a sufficient consideration for a promise, and the contract is not illegal, though the party making the relinquishment had made no settlement on the land, had not improved it, and had, in fact, no interest in it.—Felham v. Service, (Kan.) 26 P. 29.

Public policy.

2. No rent can be recovered under a written lease, where it is shown by extrinsic evidence that the premises were let to be used as a bawdy-house, and were used for that purpose.—Dougherty v. Seymour, (Colo.) 26 P. 823.

Performance.

3. Where, under a contract providing for the mutual performance of certain obligations, plaintiff undertakes to irrigate the land thoroughly before April 1st, and defendant undertakes to construct an irrigating ditch, such ditch must be constructed before April 1st.—Remy v. Olds, (Cal.) 26 P. 355.

4. Though plaintiff undertakes to build a rabbit-tight fence to protect the vines he is to plant, performance is not due where defendant prevents his planting the vines.—Remy v. Olds, (Cal.) 26 P. 355.

5. Where a school-house, erected on the land of a district, is of real and substantial value for the purposes intended, and the builder has attempted in good faith to comply with his contract, he may recover what the building is reasonably worth, though it does not comply with the contract.—School-Dist. No. 2 in Wabaunsee County v. Boyer, (Kan.) 26 P. 484.

6. On the back of a certificate for stock owned by plaintiff, defendants indorsed an agreement to pay plaintiff therefor a certain amount after three years on the surrender of the certificate. Held that, in the absence of evidence as to the circumstances, a judgment for plaintiff cannot be disturbed on the ground that a tender of the stock, made within a year after the expiration of the three years, was not made within a reasonable time.—Wheaton v. Rampacker, (Wyo.) 26 P. 912.

7. Where in an action for a breach of contract it appeared that defendant verbally accepted plaintiff's written offer to furnish stone for a building defendant had undertaken to build, and that plaintiff was required, as one of the conditions, to execute a bond for the performance of the work and to commence the work as soon as possible, the failure of plaintiff to furnish or tender the bond within eight or nine days precludes his right to recover prospective profits, when nothing has been done under the bid.—Flynn v. Dougherty, (Cal.) 26 P. 831.

Rescission.

8. One who executes a bill of sale, and does not claim that there were misrepresentations in its procurement, cannot contest it, on the ground that she thought she was signing something else.—Gage v. Phillips, (Nev.) 26 P. 60.

Actions on.

9. Where the contract between plaintiff and defendant provides for the former's taking possession of land for three years, and the mutual performance of certain obligations during the whole term, and defendant, within less than a year, notifies plaintiff that he repudiates the contract, and turns him out of possession, plaintiff may sue at once for breach of contract without waiting for the time to perform the other undertakings.—Remy v. Olds, (Cal.) 26 P. 355.

Pleading.

10. A petition stated that defendant sold his ice business to the plaintiff, and assigned to him a contract by which O. had agreed to ship ice to the defendant during the season. It was agreed that the ice should continue to be ordered from O. in the name of the defendant. After the plaintiff had received a car-load from O., the defendant falsely represented that O. owed him the value of that car-load, and that he would settle with him for it. Relying on that representation, the plaintiff paid the price of the ice to the defendant, who promised to settle with O. at once, but he did not do so, on account of which O. canceled the contract, and refused to ship any more ice, to the damage of the plaintiff in the sum of $500. Held, that the petition stated a good cause of action and but one.—Myer v. Moon, (Kan.) 26 P. 40.

11. The stock of a company was owned principally by three persons, D., R., and P., all of whom were anxious to sell. R. procured a purchaser who consented to take two-thirds of the stock, on condition that R. would retain his stock and remain in charge of the company's business; whereupon D. and P. agreed, if R. would make the sale of their stock, and let them have the proceeds, that whenever he could sell his stock, if it did not bring as much as they were getting for theirs, they would make up to him the deficiency, so that he should receive one-third of what the whole sold for, to which R. assented, and made the sale. He afterwards sold his stock for the best price he could get for it, which was less than that received by D. and P. Held that, in an action by R. against P. for the latter's share of the deficiency, the petition need not allege that R.'s stock was not, at any time previous to the sale of it, of greater value than the price received by R., he being simply bound to act in good faith to D. and P. in selling out.—Patmor v. Rombauer, (Kan.) 26 P. 691.

12. On the back of a certificate for stock owned by plaintiff, defendants indorsed an agreement to pay plaintiff therefor a certain amount after three years on the surrender of the certificate. Held that, in an action thereon, it was not necessary to allege a consideration for the promise, but that it was sufficient that plaintiff accepted it, and notified defendants thereof in a reasonable time, and before the offer had been withdrawn.—Wheaton v. Rampacker, (Wyo.) 26 P. 912.

13. In an action on a contract to sell lumber, a breach of the contract is sufficiently averred by stating that the lumber was never delivered, by reason of which the plaintiff was compelled to purchase other lumber at an advance.—Halstead Lumber Co. v. Sutton, (Kan.) 26 P. 444.

14. The petition in an action on a contract did not expressly state that plaintiff had complied with the terms of the contract on his part, but it contained allegations showing that he had done the various things required by him. Held, on demurrer, that this was sufficient.—Patmor v. Rombauer, (Kan.) 26 P. 691.

15. Where a complaint sets up a contract and alleges a breach, a demurrer on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is not well taken, since plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages at least.—Sunny Side Land & Imp. Co. v. Willamette Bridge Ry. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 835.

Evidence.

16. In an action for breach of contract to lease a mine, plaintiff testified that defendant contracted to lease him the mine for five years. The evidence for defendant showed that he was not the owner of the mine, but had a lease thereof for a year, and that he agreed to allow plaintiff to mine coal therein for that period. He denied having made any other agreement, his testimony being supported by other witnesses; and introduced a letter from plaintiff recognizing the agreement under which he was then working, and asked de-feudant to send him a "bogus contract" for a longer time, to be used to induce a railroad to put in a side track for plaintiff, and then to be returned to defendant. Held, that the evidence would not support a verdict for plaintiff.—Caldwell v. Willey, (Colo.) 26 P. 161.

CORPORATIONS.

Officers—Liability to creditors.

1. Gen. St. Colo. § 252, requires every corporation to make an annual report stating the amount of its capital, the proportion thereof actually paid in, and the amount of existing debts; and it provides that a failure to file this report shall render the directors and trustees jointly and severally liable for the debts of the company contracted during the year preceding the time for filing it. Held that, where a report is actually filed, the fact that it is false will not render them liable under this section as upon failure to file any report at all.—Matthews v. Patterson, (Colo.) 26 P. 812.

2. Gen. St. Colo. § 255, provides that all the officers of a corporation, who have signed a false annual report of its financial condition, knowing it to be false, shall be jointly and severally liable for all damages thereon arising. Held that, in an action to enforce this liability, the complaint is demurrable where it fails to state that the officers knew the report was false.—Matthews v. Patterson, (Colo.) 26 P. 812.

Contracts.

3. A purchase of lands from a corporation by one of the directors, at one-tenth of its real value, raises a presumption of fraud against him, and he must show affirmatively that the transaction was perfectly fair.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

Ultra vires.

4. A town company, incorporated "for the purchasing of lands, the surveying and platting of town-sites, and selling town lots and other lands," entered into a contract with the owner of a bank, bar, and restaurant located in another town, that if he would remove them to the company's town-site, the company would convey to him certain lots in its town, and would pay him the sum of $1,000. Held, that the contract was not necessarily ultra vires of the company, as it tended directly to enhance the value of the other property of the company.—Sherman Center Town Co. v. Russell, (Kan.) 26 P. 715.

5. The charter of a town-site company contained a provision that "the indebtedness of the company shall not exceed $500 at any time." Held, that this provision might be regarded as a by-law of the company, directory only, and not such a provision as would annul a contract to pay a greater sum, where the corporation had enjoyed the benefits of such contract.—Sherman Center Town Co. v. Russell, (Kan.) 26 P. 715.

6. A corporation which has enjoyed the benefits of a contract cannot claim that it was ultra vires and void.—Sherman Center Town Co. v. Fletcher, (Kan.) 26 P. 951.

Authority of officers.

7. Where the by-laws of a mining corporation declare it the duty of the general manager to "take charge of the business of selling the ores mined," he has authority to enter into a contract with a smelting company for the sale to it of all the ores to be mined within a given period. ELLIOTT, J., dissenting.—Robert E. Lee Silver Min. Co. v. Omaha & Grant Smelting & Refining Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 326.

Actions against—Pleading.

8. In an action for a penalty against a gold mining company brought under St. Cal. 1880, p. 184, which provides that such corporation shall on the first Monday of each month make and have posted in the office of such company certain reports and accounts current for the previous month, an answer denying the allegation of the complaint that said company had an office for the transaction of business is insufficient to raise a material issue; Civil Code, §§ 290, 821a, contemplating that all corporations shall have a place of business.—Chapman v. Doray, (Cal.) 26 P. 606.

Stock subscription.

9. Defendant and others agreed to organize a hotel company, with a capital of $100,000, and that a meeting of stockholders should be called to organize the corporation and elect directors whenever $70,000 should be subscribed. One of a firm of general agents of a railroad company subscribed in the company's name, without authority, "for the amount of freight on furniture and material" shipped from certain ports, $10,000. He also subscribed in his own name a certain block "for a site for a hotel, if accepted and used for that purpose, $7,500, and in that case, cash $5,000." When $77,200 was subscribed, a meeting was had, and the agent voted those shares. Held, that since the agent's personal subscription was conditional, and the other unauthorized, the shares were illegally voted, and an independent subscriber, who did not take part in the organization, was not liable for his subscription, though the railroad and steam-ship company afterwards ratified the agent's subscriptions.—California Southern Hotel Co. v. Russell, (Cal.) 26 P. 105.

Members and stockholders.

10. Where the bonds of a corporation are secured by deed of trust, and the holder of a majority of the bonds controls the officers of the corporation and the trustee named in the deed of trust, a stockholder of the corporation is entitled to intervene in a foreclosure suit when it is shown that the trustee is not acting in good faith, and that the litigation is being conducted on a false and fraudulent basis.—Henry v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 818.

11. An agreement by a corporation "to refund to J. the sum of $900.80 at one year's notice from the date of such notice," with "what interest it makes in proportion to all the shares in this institution," makes the payee a creditor of the corporation, and not a stockholder, and he can maintain an action against the stockholders under Rev. St. Idaho, § 2609.—Jones v. Woolley, (Idaho,) 26 P. 120.

Rights of minority stockholders.

12. Defendants acquired a large tract of land, agreeing to pay the deferred purchase money in annual instalments, but reserving to themselves the right to pay the whole of it "at any time before maturity." They then organized a corporation, conveyed the land to it, received stock in exchange, and agreed with the corporation to pay the unpaid purchase price of the land "at maturity." To secure the performance of this agreement, 10,000 shares of the stock issued to defendants were placed in escrow, but subsequently the corporation permitted such stock to be delivered to defendants, on condition that it should be sold by them at a specified rate, and that the proceeds, "as received," should be applied by them to the extinguishment of the debt. Defendants sold the stock, and converted the cash proceeds to their own use, and induced the corporation, without consideration, to assume the debt for the deferred purchase money of the land. They then purchased back the stock, which had greatly depreciated in value, and by means of their control over the corporation sold to it the stock at a price greatly exceeding its market value. Held, that the approval of such sale at a stockholders' meeting will not affect the rights of the minority stockholders, who did not consent thereto.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

13. The owners of a majority of the stock of a corporation, who persuade their "implements and representatives" on the board of directors to convey to them the property of the corporation for a grossly inadequate consideration, in fraud of the minority stockholders, must be held to have participated in the fraud of the directors.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

14. Defendants acquired a large tract of land, agreeing to pay the deferred purchase money in annual installments, but reserving to themselves the right to pay the whole of it "at any time before maturity." They then organized a corporation, conveyed the land to it, received stock in exchange, and agreed with the corporation to pay the unpaid purchase price of the land "at maturity." To secure the performance of this agreement, 10,000 shares of the stock issued to defendants were placed in escrow, but subsequently the corporation permitted such stock to be delivered to defendants, on condition that it should be sold by them at a specified rate, and that the proceeds, "as received," should be applied by them to the extinguishment of the debt. Held, that a complaint which alleges that defendants applied the cash proceeds to their own use, in violation of the conditions on which the stock was delivered to them, is not demurrable for its failure to allege that the deferred purchase price of the land had become due, as defendants had it in their power to pay at any time before maturity, and the conditions on which the stock was delivered to them made it their duty to so apply the proceeds "as received" by them.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

15. The allegation in the complaint that defendants applied the cash proceeds of the stock to their own use, and did not pay the debt, is a sufficient showing of the non-performance of their contract, as the court will not presume that some third person paid the debt, or that the corporation was substituted as the debtor on the transfer of the land to it.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

16. The fact that defendants, on the sale of the stock, received only part of the purchase price in cash, and that the complaint contains no allegation that they converted to their own use the notes given for the balance, does not give rise to the presumption that they turned such notes over to the corporation in satisfaction of the agreement, as such agreement provides that the proceeds shall be applied by defendants in extinguishment of the debt to the original owners of the land, and not that they shall be turned over to the corporation.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

17. The complaint is not rendered defective by its failure to allege that the corporation has paid out any money or sustained any damage by defendant's failure to perform their agreement to pay the deferred purchase price of the land, as such payment is essential to the protection of the corporation's right to the property.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

18. In an action by minority stockholders of a corporation for relief against certain transactions by the company with the majority stockholders, where the directors of the corporation were only defendants' "implements and representatives," and it was not shown that they received or had any interest in the fruits of defendants' transactions, it was not necessary to join them as defendants.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

19. A complaint which alleges that plaintiffs and defendants are stockholders in a corporation; that the directors are the "implements and representatives" of defendants, who own a majority of the stock; and that the directors conveyed to defendants land of the corporation at one-tenth of its real value, in fraud of the other stockholders, states facts constituting actual fraud, and is sufficient on demurrer.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

20. The right of minority stockholders to attack transactions between other stockholders and the corporation, as fraudulent, is not affected by the fact that they are completely "executed," where such transactions were not merely beyond the powers of the corporation, but procured by the fraud of defendants, who controlled it; nor need the minority stockholders offer to place defendants in statu quo.—Woodroof v. Howes, (Cal.) 26 P. 111.

COSTS.

Imposition as condition of granting continuance, see Continuance, 4.

Who liable.

1. Where, in a suit to enjoin the infringement of water-rights, the questions of fact submitted to the jury are found in defendants' favor, and the chancellor finds that at no time prior to the trial did defendants interfere with or damage plaintiffs' rights, his judgment against plaintiffs for costs will not be disturbed.—Ratcliffe v. Dakan, (Colo.) 26 P. 841.

2. On appeal from an award of commissioners to condemn a right of way for a railroad, the company offered in writing "to allow judgment to be taken against it for $200.35, with accrued costs." Without withdrawing this offer, it subsequently offered to allow judgment to be taken for a larger sum, with accrued costs. Three successive verdicts for amounts larger than the first offer were set aside. The fourth verdict was for a smaller sum. Civil Code Kan. § 538, provides that "in an action for the recovery of money" the defendant may offer to confess judgment, and, if the plaintiff refuses to accept such confession in full satisfaction of his demand, and does not recover more than was offered, the plaintiff shall pay all costs incurred after the offer. Held that, though the proceeding was not within the letter of the statute, it was within its spirit and intent, and the land-owner must pay all costs incurred by the railroad company after the first offer to confess judgment.—Chicago, I. & K. R. Co. v. Townsden, (Kan.) 26 P. 427.

Security for costs.

3. After plaintiff had given security for costs as required by Civil Code Kan. § 581, he was required by the court to give a further bond, the first bond being insufficient to cover the accumulated costs. Plaintiff then deposited $15 with the clerk under a proviso of section 581, that a resident plaintiff may deposit $15, "which sum shall be in lieu of all security for costs as herein and otherwise provided." Afterwards plaintiff made the affidavit of poverty under another proviso of section 581, which is that in any case where plaintiff, having a just cause of action against defendant, by reason of his poverty is unable to give such security for costs, on affidavit of plaintiff made before the clerk that such is the fact, no bond shall be required. Held, that plaintiff could not be required to give additional security.—Hardesty v. Ball, (Kan.) 26 P. 969.

Taxation.

4. A question as to the proper taxation of costs will not be considered upon an appeal, when no motion was made to retax the costs in the court below.—Appeal of Lowe, (Kan.) 26 P. 749.

5. The allowance of costs is in the discretion of the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed on the ground that items of expense allowed against appellant were incurred by his co-defendant only, unless the record shows that the items were not incurred partly by appellant, or for his benefit.—Barnhart v. Kron, (Cal.) 26 P. 210.

6. Acts Cal. 1865-6, p. 66, § 6, providing that the prevailing party shall be allowed 5 per cent. costs on the amount recovered in litigated cases, not to exceed $100, does not apply to an alternative judgment in replevin for the return of property or for its value.—Wheatland Mill Co. v. Pirrie, (Cal.) 26 P. 964.

7. Under Comp. Laws Utah 1888, p. 213, § 3099, providing that the official reporter shall receive as compensation for taking notes a sum to be fixed by the court, not exceeding $10 per day, and that where more than one case is tried in a day the court shall apportion the per diem among them, an order allowing $30 as reporter's fees in a case called for trial at 11 o'clock A. M. of one day and submitted to the jury at 1:15 P. M. the following day, will not be disturbed, when it is not shown that there was no evening session, and that a case which was before the court on the morning of the first day occupied any considerable length of time.—Andreson v. Ogden Union Railway & Depot Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 1119.

In criminal cases—Constitutional law.

8. Code Crim. Proc. Kan. § 826, which provides: "Whenever it shall appear to the court or jury trying the case that the prosecution has been instituted without probable cause and from malicious motives, the name of the prosecutor shall be ascertained and stated in the finding; and such prosecutor shall be adjudged to pay the costs, and may be committed to the county jail until the same are paid or secured to be paid,"—is not unconstitutional.—Appeal of Lowe, (Kan.) 26 P. 749.

Classification.

1. St. Cal. 1883, p. 299, § 162, divides counties into 48 classes; the thirty-ninth being counties having a population of 5,600 and under 6,000; the fortieth, those having 5,300 and under 5,600; the forty-first, those having 5,000, and under 5,300. By section 163 the salaries of the various officers of the several classes were fixed. By Act March 13, 1885, said section 163 was amended and divided into new sections numbered consecutively from 163 to 210. The salaries of the officers of said three classes were fixed, respectively, by sections 201, 202, and 203. St. 1889, p. 332, amends said original section 162 so as to define class 39 as counties having a population of 5,640 and under 6,000. It added a class,—39½,—defined as counties having a population of 5,000 and under 5,640. In all other respects, including the clauses defining classes 40 and 41, section 162 was re-enacted in precisely its original terms. A new section, numbered 201½, was inserted between sections 201 and 202, by which the salaries of officers of class 39½ were prescribed. Held, that the legislature did not intend to abolish classes 40 and 41, but merely to create a new class, which they intended to describe as embracing counties with a population of 5,600 and under 5,640.—Donlon v. Jewett, (Cal.) 26 P. 370.

Division.

2. Act Idaho, March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to create and organize the counties of Alta and Lincoln, to locate the county-seats of said counties, and to apportion the debt of Lincoln county," divided the territory composing the existing counties of Alturas and Logan so that a large part of the county of Logan was cut off, and attached such part to the county of Alturas, and out of such territory created the county of Alta, and established the county of Lincoln from the residue of the territory theretofore belonging to Logan. Held, that the act violated Const. Idaho, art. 18, § 3, which declares that "no county shall be divided unless a majority of the qualified electors of the territory proposed to be cut off, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such division."—People v. George, (Idaho,) 26 P. 983.

—Boundaries.

3. L. county was created, and the fortieth meridian designated as its western boundary, being also designated as the eastern boundary of H. county. The line was established by the surveyors of both counties, as provided by law, for the guidance of their public officers, and was generally recognized. E. county was afterwards created out of L., to be divided by a line beginning on the north line of L. county, equidistant from its north-east and north-west corners. Held, that E. county was created with reference to the north-west corner of L. county, as then established, though it was afterwards found not to be on the fortieth meridian.—County of Eureka v. County of Lander, (Nev.) 26 P. 63.

County-seat—Removal.

4. A suit to enjoin the removal of a county-seat may be brought by any resident tax-payer of the county who is also an elector.—Doan v. Board of County Com'rs Logan County, (Idaho,) 26 P. 167.

5. When the commissioners of a county threaten unlawfully to remove a county-seat, and it does not appear that they have entered any order therefor from which an appeal could have been taken, the removal will be enjoined.—Doan v. Board of County Com'rs Logan County, (Idaho,) 26 P. 167.

6. In the territorial act creating the county of Logan, and temporarily locating its county-seat, the provision for an election to locate the permanent county-seat is not a provision for the removal of a county-seat within Const. Idaho, art. 18, § 3, providing that "no county-seat shall be removed, unless on petition of a majority of the qualified electors of the county, and unless two-thirds of the qualified electors of the county voting on the proposition at a general election shall vote in favor of such removal."—Doan v. Board of County Com'rs Logan County, (Idaho,) 26 P. 167.

—Permanent location.

7. Under the act creating the county of Logan, and providing that the county commissioners should submit the permanent location of the county-seat at the regular election in 1890, the order submitting the question may be made at a special meeting, though the notice thereof does not state that that subject would be acted on at the meeting.—Doan v. Board of County Com'rs Logan County, (Idaho,) 26 P. 167.

8. The territorial act creating the county of Logan provided that, at the "regular election" to be held in 1890, the county-seat should be permanently located by a vote of the electors. Rev. St. Idaho, §§ 485, 486, then provided for a general election to be held in November, at which territorial and county officers should be elected. The constitution of the state provided that the first general election for state and county officers should be held at a time to be fixed by the governor. This election was held in October, 1890. Held, that the permanent location of the county-seat was properly submitted at that election.—Doan v. Board of County Com'rs Logan County, (Idaho,) 26 P. 167.

County commissioners.

9. Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 1632, provides that no person holding any state, county, township, or city office shall be eligible to the office of county commissioner. The respondent was clerk of a city of the third class when elected, and when he qualified as county commissioner. Held, that he was ineligible as county commissioner.—State v. Flynn, (Kan.) 26 P. 479.

10. The board of county commissioners have authority to employ counsel, other than the district attorney, to collect the money due to the county by the state for the support of indigent persons, and the choice of such counsel is a matter within their discretion, and cannot be reviewed.—Lassen County v. Shinn, (Cal.) 26 P. 365.

11. As the judicial power of the territory of Washington was by its organic act vested in a supreme court, district and probate courts, and justices of the peace, the board of county commissioners has no judicial power, and in settling a county treasurer's accounts it acts in a ministerial capacity, so that its decisions are not binding on the county.—Ferry v. King County, (Wash.) 26 P. 537; Id. 539.

Creation of bonded indebtedness.

12. Under the county government act, (St. Cal. 1883, p. 811, § 37,) providing that when the supervisors wish to create a bonded indebtedness they shall "by order specify the particular purposes for which the indebtedness is to be created, and the amount of bonds which they propose to issue," and shall submit the question of the issue of the bonds to the "qualified electors" of the county, an order and proclamation of election, stating that there is to be submitted the question of the issue of $75,000 of bonds for the construction of "two public wagon roads in said county, —one from Bear Valley to Coulterville, and one from Mariposa to Yosemite," —sufficiently specified the particular purpose for which the indebtedness is to be created.—People v. Counts, (Cal.) 26 P. 612.

13. The fact that the order submits the question to "the people" does not invalidate it where the proclamation states that the question is to be submitted to the "vote of the people of this county," as it means the vote of only those people who are "qualified electors."—People v. Counts, (Cal.) 26 P. 612.

14. The board of supervisors, though required by the county government act to proceed by ordinance for some purposes, can proceed "by order" in such case, as section 37 of that act so provides.—People v. Counts, (Cal.) 26 P. 612.

Funding debts.

15. Act Wash. March 21, 1890, § 1, empowers counties through their commissioners to contract indebtedness for general county purposes in any manner, when they deem it advisable, not exceeding an amount, together with the existing indebtedness, of 1½ per cent. of the taxable property in the county. Section 2 provides that such counties may contract indebtedness in excess of 1½ per cent., but not 5 per cent., on the assent of three-fifths of the voters of the county being given thereto at a general or special election. Section 3, which authorizes the issuance of bonds, concludes: "Then the board of county commissioners of such county is authorized and empowered to issue its negotiable bonds in the name of the county for the purposes for which such election was held." The only election mentioned in said section which in terms is required to authorize the board to issue bonds is where such issue is for the purpose of procuring money (not to fund existing indebtedness) for strictly county purposes. Prior to the passage of the act there was no provision for funding county indebtedness contracted after January 1, 1883, and one of the objects of the statute was to provide for the funding of such indebtedness at a lower rate of interest than was then being paid. Held, that it was the intention to provide for funding existing county indebtedness without the expense and delay of a submission of the question to the vote of the people.—Murry v. Fay, (Wash.) 26 P. 533.

State courts.

1. Where the promoters of a bill that has been presented to the supreme court for its opinion concede that in some important particulars it is unconstitutional, the court will not discuss its terms at length, as it is not the province of the court to indicate whether or not a constitutional measure might be prepared to embody the leading purpose of such bill.—In re House Bill No. 10, (Colo.) 26 P. 824.

2. An intermediate court, having appellate and final jurisdiction, can be constitutionally created in Colorado, but it cannot be given appellate jurisdiction in cases within the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court, unless its judgment in such cases is made subject to review by the supreme court.—In re Constitutionality of a Court of Appeals, (Colo.) 26 P. 214.

3. Where a testator dies domiciled in another state, leaving land in Kansas, but no other property, and there has been no administration in the latter state, the district court has jurisdiction of a suit against the devisee in which the land is attached and sought to be subjected to a demand arising out of a breach of warranty contained in a conveyance made by the testator.—McLean v. Webster, (Kan.) 26 P. 10.

4. Replevin against a sheriff for the wrongful seizure of plaintiff's goods under an attachment against another can be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction, and need not be brought in the court out of which the writ of attachment is sued.—Johnson v. Jones, (Colo.) 26 P. 584.

County courts.

5. The jurisdiction of the county court is not made exclusive by Const. Colo. art. 6, § 23, providing that it shall have "original jurisdiction in all matters of probate, settlement of estates, appointment of guardians, * * * and settlement of their accounts."—People v. Barton, (Colo.) 26 P. 149.

Probate courts.

6. Const. Wyo. art. 5, § 10, confers on the district court, among other things, exclusive original jurisdiction "in all matters of probate;" and article 21, § 17, provides that all records of the territorial probate court shall pass into the possession of the district court, and that the latter court shall have jurisdiction to determine all causes which the probate court would have heard if the constitution had not been adopted. Held, that the territorial probate court and the office of probate judge were abolished on the adoption of the constitution, notwithstanding the fact that the territorial probate judgewas ex officio county treasurer, and that Const. Wyo. art. 21, § 19, continued in office all county officers until the expiration of the terms for which they were elected, and until their successors were qualified, as the two offices of probate judge and county treasurer, though held by the same person, are separate and distinct.—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

Police courts.

7. A recorder's court is a police court, within Pen. Code Cal. § 1446, providing that in justices' and police courts "a judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, in proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine."—Ex parte Soto, (Cal.) 26 P. 530.

8. St. Cal. 1885, p. 213, (Act March 18, 1885,) establishing police courts in cities of the second class, and vesting in them jurisdiction over certain public offenses, applies to the city of Los Angeles, although the precise time at which it became a city of the class does not appear.—Ex parte Halstead, (Cal.) 26 P. 961; In re Montijo, Id.

COVENANTS.

Principal and accessory.

1. Though under Rev. St. Kan. 1874, p. 393, § 374, one who stands by and aids, abets, or assists in a crime is punishable as a principal, it is error to charge that the accused is guilty if he was present and encouraged, aided, advised, "or consented to" the commission of the crime.—State v. Douglass, (Kan.) 26 P. 476.

2. Where, for the purpose of making a case against the accused, a detective employed by a railroad company places an obstruction on its track, not intending to cause any damage to trains, the accused is not guilty though he is present and advises and encourages the act, believing that it is done with a criminal intent.—State v. Douglass, (Kan.) 26 P. 476.

Commitment.

3. A defect in the commitment in describing the offense is immaterial if it is sufficiently described in the order indorsed on the deposition.—Ex parte Estrado, (Cal.) 26 P. 209.

Arraignment.

4. On the arraignment of one informed against for burglary it is not error for the court to ask him whether he had suffered the prior convictions charged against him in the information.—People v. McGregor, (Cal.) 26 P. 97.

5. Where defendant has confessed the former convictions, the presumption is that the clerk, on reading the information to the jury, omitted that part relating to the prior convictions, as he is required to do by Pen. Code Cal. § 1093; and this presumption is not overcome by a statement in the record that the information charging defendant with the "crime" (not crimes) was read, and "plea" (not pleas) of not guilty stated to the jury.—People v. McGregor, (Cal.) 26 P. 97.

Plea of not guilty—Withdrawal.

6. An information charging burglary and prior conviction was assigned by the presiding judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to department 6 for trial, where defendant was arraigned, and pleaded not guilty. The record, without showing objection by defendant, simply shows that the cause was transferred to department 12, where, on arraignment, a plea of guilty of the prior conviction was entered. Held, that defendant will be considered as having pleaded not guilty in department 6 to both the burglary and prior convictions, and, on transfer to department 12, of having withdrawn his former plea as to the former convictions, and pleaded guilty thereto.—People v. Wheatley, (Cal.) 26 P. 95.

Venue.

7. At the trial in G. county, of an information for receiving stolen property, it appeared that the property alleged to have been stolen was in K. county, and that defendant, pursuant to advice of counsel, to aid another in malfeiting his claim to the property, went from G. county to K. county and took possession of it. Held, that his going from G. county to K. county was not such an overt act as, coupled with an evil intent, would constitute an element of the crime, and make it punishable in G. county under Crim. Code Kan. § 23, providing that when an offense "has been committed partly in one county and partly in another, or the act or effects constituting or requisite to the consummation of the offense occur in one or more counties, the jurisdiction is in either county."—State v. Rider, (Kan.) 26 P. 745.

8. On a trial for burglary, alleged in the information to have been committed in the city and county of San Francisco, evidence that the crime was committed in a house on "Grant avenue," which is in fact one of the principal streets of said city, is sufficient proof of the venue, without direct testimony that the avenue is in the city of San Francisco.—People v. McGregor, (Cal.) 26 P. 97.

Change.

9. Under Code Wash. § 1073, which leaves a change of venue in criminal cases in the discretion of the trial court, the denial of such a motion, although supported by numerous affidavits, showing the circulation of some intemperate newspaper articles, and considerable hostility in the community, will not be reviewed, where only 26 jurors were examined, and there was no complaint of misconduct. Scorr, J., dissenting.—Edwards v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 258.

Conduct of trial.

10. Where an election is made by the state at the close of its evidence to stand on certain counts of an information it cannot afterwards change such election when all the evidence is in.—State v. Falk, (Kan.) 26 P. 1023.

11. The fact that defendant's attorney, after repeatedly objecting to the admission of incompetent evidence of certain declarations, persistently sought to be brought out by the state notwithstanding the court ruled it incompetent, consents to the witness' saying what the remark was in reply to inquiry from the jury, is not a waiver of defendant's objection. The evidence being incompetent and prejudicial, the court should not have admitted it, even with consent of counsel, and, having done so, should have stricken it out. Patterson, J., dissenting.—People v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 650.

Reception of evidence.

12. On a trial for murder, defendant's statement, before the trial, that his son had confessed to him the commission of the murder, cannot be contradicted by the prosecution in its evidence in chief. Scorr, J., dissenting.—Rose v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 264.

Presence of defendant.

13. Defendant's affidavit that his trial was continued in his absence, and that he was not present at the trial of his co-defendant, shows no ground for reversal of judgment, under Pen. Code Cal. § 1181, providing that defendant is entitled to a new trial, "when the trial has been had in his absence, if the indictment is for a felony."—People v. O'Brien, (Cal.) 26 P. 363.

14. Under Crim. Code Kan. § 207, providing that one accused of felony must be present throughout the trial, it was error to permit a witness for the state to testify during the absence of defendant from the court-room by permission of the court, when on trial for assault with intent to kill.—State v. Moran, (Kan.) 26 P. 754.

Evidence.

15. The fact that a witness in a criminal case has disobeyed an order of the court to remain outside the court-room while the other witnesses are testifying is no ground for excluding the testimony of such witness, though he may be punished for disobeying the order to remain outside.—State v. Falk, (Kan.) 26 P. 1023.

16. In a prosecution for gambling it is not proper for the defense, on cross-examination of the state's witnesses or otherwise, to introduce evidence tending to prove that the particular act of gambling investigated by the grand jury was different, and occurred on a different day in the same month, in a different place in the same town, from the one then being investigated before the trial jury.—State v. Adams, (Or.) 26 P. 837.

17. Having testified that, while the accused was scuffling with another, the witness saw him hand something to one who is charged as a confederate, it is not competent for the witness to state that he thought the accused took it from the person with whom he was scuffling, his opinion being inadmissible.—Territory v. McKern, (Idaho,) 26 P. 123.

— Confessions.

18. A confession is not incompetent because obtained by a detective who led the accused to believe that he would go on his bond, and told him it was no use to deny the charge.—Territory v. McKern, (Idaho,) 26 P. 123.

— Evidence of co-indictees.

19. Code Wash. § 1092, providing that the court, in a "prosecution" against several, may direct any defendant to be discharged that he may be a witness for the state, allows one indicted with the prisoner, but not on trial with him, to be a witness, while still under indictment. Scott, J., dissenting.—Edwards v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 258.

Instructions.

20. Error in the court's refusal to strike out incompetent evidence of declarations is not cured by a subsequent instruction that defendant is not bound by anything said, not in his hearing or presence, by the person who made the remark, such instruction not being a plain and unequivocal direction to disregard the evidence.—People v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 650.

21. Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1111, providing that an accused cannot be convicted by the evidence of an accomplice, unless corroborated by other evidence "tending to prove" defendant's complicity, an instruction that a conviction for receiving stolen goods cannot be had on the testimony of the thief, unless corroborated by such evidence as tends to impute to defendant knowledge that the goods were stolen, is not erroneous in using the expression "tends to impute," instead of "imputes."—People v. Ribolsi, (Cal.) 26 P. 1082.

22. On a trial for feloniously receiving stolen goods, the court charged that "under our statute the following presumptions are to be regarded as satisfactory, if uncontradicted, but may be controverted, viz.: That an unlawful act was done with unlawful intent, and that a person intends the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act. The effect of these rules is that when the doing of an act is proven which, if there be guilty intent, would be a violation of law, the burden of proving the act to have been without such intent is in most cases upon the accused." Held erroneous, where the defense was confined to the original transaction on which the accusation was founded, and no special defense, as insanity, was interposed.—People v. Ribolsi, (Cal.) 26 P. 1082.

23. Where the undisputed evidences show that defendant committed the burglary in the nighttime, a remark by the judge in charging the jury that the testimony showed the crime to have been committed at 8 or 4 o'clock in the morning could not have prejudiced defendant; and hence the supreme court will not determine whether this language was the mere exercise of the constitutional power of the judge to "state the testimony," or a violation of the mandate that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact." Const. Cal. art. 6, § 19.—People v. McGregor, (Cal.) 26 P. 97.

24. On indictment for murder it is error to charge that the jury must not consider the fact that innocent men have been convicted of crime in determining the guilt or innocence of defendants. GAROUTTE, J., dissenting.—People v. Travers, (Cal.) 26 P. 88.

25. Code Wash. § 221, provides that, in a statement of all matters of law for the information of the jury, only such allusion to the evidence shall be made as is necessary. Upon a murder trial, the evidence for the prosecution was entirely circumstantial. On the part of defendant, it rested upon denial, evidence as to good character, and absence of motive. The court charged: "Now, gentlemen, look at these facts dispassionately, without prejudice, and without thinking, so far as that goes, who this defendant is, or who the man that was killed was;" and, after stating the evidence as to the probable killing of deceased by defendant, by suicide, or by a stranger, said: "From these circumstances, we arrive at the conclusion that the man was shot by some one other than himself;" "the question now is, who did it?" and, following a review of the testimony concerning the movements of defendant from the evening of the killing, inquires, "Do they lie about it?" "Then this story that he tells you about where he went, if it is true, notwithstanding it may seem a little improbable, he was not out here," where certain witnesses "say they saw him." Held, that this was an invasion of the jury's province.—Freidrich v. Territory, (Wash.) 26 P. 976.

26. On indictment for murder the court charged the jury: "During the argument your attention has been called to cases in which it was claimed that juries had improperly convicted the defendants. While it is true that innocent persons have been convicted in the past, there is no proof in this case of any such fact, and you are not justified in considering such matters. * * * The guilt or innocence of this defendant must be determined from the evidence admitted in the case, and not from sympathy or prejudice. If all criminals must go free because there is a possibility of jurors making mistakes, society might as well disband." Held, that the instruction was objectionable because of its apparent hostility to defendant, and because it usurped the functions of the jury as the sole judges of the weight of the evidence. GAROUTTE, J., dissenting.—People v. Travers, (Cal.) 26 P. 88.

— Reasonable doubt.

27. A statement in an instruction that if, on full consideration of all the evidence, you are "fairly and clearly satisfied" of defendant's guilt, is equivalent to saying that the jury must be "entirely satisfied."—People v. Ribolsi, (Cal.) 26 P. 1082.

28. It is error to charge that a reasonable doubt is "such a doubt as would induce a man of reasonable firmness and judgment to act upon it in matters of importance to himself." Following People v. Bemmerly, 25 P. 236.—People v. Wohlfrom, (Cal.) 26 P. 236.

Conduct of jury—Intoxication.

29. A conviction will not be reversed because it appears from affidavits that one of the jurors drank intoxicating liquor during the trial, and that during a recess of court he was intoxicated, when counter-affidavits by the other jurors, and the officer in charge of the jury, show that the juror was rational and sober at all times while hearing the trial and deliberating on the verdict.—People v. Deegan, (Cal.) 26 P. 500.

30. If during the trial a juror appears to be intoxicated in court, defendant should object to his serving before the jury retire. DR HAVEN, J., dissenting.—People v. Deegan, (Cal.) 26 P. 500.

— Separation of jury.

31. Code Wash. § 1089, providing that juries in criminal cases shall not be allowed to separate except by consent of defendant and the prosecuting attorney, only applies to separation during the trial, and does not authorize the jury to deliver to their foreman a sealed verdict, and then separate.—Anderson v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 267.

32. On trial for murder, the separation of the jury before rendering their verdict is reversible error, though defendant's counsel may have consented to a sealed verdict, and the verdict may have been signed, sealed, and delivered to the foreman before separation.—Anderson v. State. (Wash.) 26 P. 267.

83. Permitting a jury in a criminal trial to separate, upon agreeing on their verdict during the night and sealing it, pursuant to instructions given before they retired in the presence of the defendant and counsel on both sides without objection, such sealed verdict being returned by them into court the next morning and opened and read and assented to as their verdict, without objection by defendant or his counsel, is not a material error, if any error at all.—State v. Hodges, (Kan.) 26 P. 676; State v. Emmons, Id. 679.

34. On trial for burglary, the fact that a juror left the others and went to the water-closet for a few minutes in company with the bailiff is no ground for a new trial if it appears that he conversed with no one, and heard nothing about the case, and that there was no discussion about the case in his absence.—People v. Wheatley, (Cal.) 26 P. 95.

Judgment and sentence.

85. Under Pen. Code Cal. § 1446, providing that in justices' and police courts "a judgment that the defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied, in proportion of one day's imprisonment for every dollar of the fine, the court has discretion to direct imprisonment until the fine be satisfied at the rate of one day for two dollars of the fine. DA HAVEN, HARRISON, and GAROUTTE, JJ., dissenting.—Ex parte Soto, (Cal.) 26 P. 530.

86. Since Pen. Code Cal. § 1205, providing for imprisonment in the county jail to enforce a fine, at the rate of one dollar a day, has been amended to provide that such imprisonment must not exceed the time for which defendant might be sentenced to imprisonment for the offense of which he has been convicted, defendant, convicted of simple assault and fined $500, cannot be imprisoned more than three months, which is the term of imprisonment fixed for the offense. Pen. Code Cal. § 241.—Ex parte Erdmann, (Cal.) 26 P. 372.

87. Directing imprisonment until the fine be satisfied, at the rate of one day for two dollars of the fine, does not render the judgment void, and therefore authorize the discharge of the prisoner on habeas corpus. GAROUTTE, J., dissenting.—Ex parte Soto, (Cal.) 26 P. 530.

88. A direction in the judgment that, in addition to being imprisoned, defendant shall pay the district attorney a certain fee, though it is unauthorized, is separable, and may be stricken out without remanding the case.—People v. Fick, (Cal.) 26 P. 759.

89. Pen. Code Cal. § 461, declares that burglary in the second degree is punishable by imprisonment in the state-prison for not more than five years, and section 666 provides, among other things, that one twice convicted of felony may be punished by 10 years' imprisonment therein. Held that, where an indictment charged three former convictions, and these were admitted of record, a judgment reciting a conviction of burglary in the second, and affixing a sentence of 10 years, was valid, without reciting the former convictions.—Ex parte Williams, (Cal.) 26 P. 887.

40. A judgment of conviction of burglary and prior conviction, which recites that defendant, when called for sentence, was informed by the court of the information charging him with the crime of burglary and prior conviction of burglary, of his arraignment and pleas of not guilty as charged in the information, and guilty of the prior conviction, of the trial, and verdict of guilty of burglary, and that he was then asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced, is sufficient under Pen. Code Cal. § 1200, requiring that defendant, before judgment, must be informed of the nature of the charge, and of his plea, and the verdict, and must be asked whether he has any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him; and section 1207, requiring the clerk to enter the judgment on the minutes, stating briefly the offense for which the conviction was had, and the fact of prior conviction, etc.—People v. Wheatley, (Cal.) 26 P. 95.

Cumulative sentence.

41. On an information for embezzlement, containing charges of several distinct offenses in separate counts, the court sentenced the defendant to imprisonment upon each of four separate counts on which he was found guilty, the imprisonment to be cumulative, so that the aggregate time of imprisonment exceeded by one year the time for which the defendant could have been sentenced upon any one count alone. Held, that this was not error, under Crim. Code Kan. § 250, authorizing cumulative sentences.—State v. Hodges, (Kan.) 26 P. 676; State v. Emmons, Id. 679.

New trial.

42. Though one of the jurors answers on his voir dire that he has not, during the past year, served on a jury in a court of record, the accused is not on that account entitled to a new trial in the absence of a showing that the truth was unknown to himself and his counsel before the juror was accepted, and a recital to that effect in the motion for a new trial is not sufficient to establish the fact.—State v. Read, (Kan.) 26 P. 58.

43. The affidavit of defendant's husband that he, and not defendant, killed deceased; that before the trial he told her of it, but refused to allow her to use the communication; and the affidavit of defendant that this fact was communicated to her by her husband, but that he did not give her permission to use it,—are not per se grounds for a new trial.—People v. Merkle, (Cal.) 26 P. 642.

Impeachment of verdict by juror's affidavits.

44. The affidavits of two jurors, to the effect that they understood the court to have charged that "if the defendant was an inmate of the penitentiary, serving out a sentence, and that he took the horse in question * * * for the purpose of escaping, then he would be guilty, no matter what the intentions were in taking the horse," will not be received to impeach their verdict.—People v. Flynn, (Utah.) 26 P. 1114.

Appeal and error.

45. Gen. St. Kan. 1889, § 5454, provides that no appeal shall be granted from a justice's judgment in a criminal case, unless the accused shall enter into a recognizance within 24 hours. A short time before 1 P. M., the attorney for the accused went to the justice's office with a recognizance duly signed. Not finding the justice there, the attorney made no further effort to find him until the 24 hours had expired. Held, that an approval of the recognizance by the justice after that time could not perfect the appeal.—State v. Leigh, (Kan.) 26 P. 59.

46. Comp. St. Mont. div. 3, § 394, provides that "an appeal to the supreme court may be taken by the defendant, as a matter of right, from any judgment against him, and, upon appeal, any decision of the court or intermediate order made in the progress of the case may be reviewed." Held, an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment is appealable.—State v. Kingsly, (Mont.) 26 P. 1066.

47. A person who on conviction of murder gives notice of appeal, and shows that he is absolutely unable to pay for a transcript of the record, is entitled to such transcript at the expense of the public. DUNBAR, J., dissenting.—State v. Fennimore, (Wash.) 26 P. 507.

Record.

48. The trial court can amend its minutes non pro tunc, to show, in accordance with the fact, that, when defendant appeared for judgment, he was asked "if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him."—People v. McNulty, (Cal.) 26 P. 597.

49. Under Laws Wash. 1885-86, p. 70, § 1, subd. 7, providing that the papers used on the hearing of a motion for a new trial, and the evidence reduced before or at the time to writing, shall constitute a bill of exceptions, affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial are part of the record, and need not be otherwise brought up on appeal.—Anderson v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 267.

50. Pen. Code Cal. § 1207, makes the judgment roll which will constitute the record of an action consist of the indictment or information, and a copy of the minutes of the plea or demurrer, "a copy of the minutes of the trial," instructions, and a copy of the judgment. Held, that the return of the sheriff on the venire is not part of the record.—People v. O'Brien, (Cal.) 26 P. 362.

— Review.

51. The court cannot, on appeal, disregard evidence erroneously admitted, and look into the unobjectionable evidence to determine whether it is sufficient to sustain the verdict.—People v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 650.

52. Defendant, in a prosecution for violating the Kansas statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, filed a plea in abatement, which was sustained as to some of the counts of the information, and was overruled as to others. Defendant then pleaded not guilty to the counts as to which the plea in abatement was sustained. Held, that the objection could not be raised on appeal from a judgment of conviction that the information named defendant as R. V., while his true name was R. F.; it appearing that, after the hearing of the plea in abatement, he was proceeded against and convicted by the name of R. F.—State v. Falk, (Kan.) 26 P. 1023.

53. On an application by defendant in an information for embezzlement for a continuance to enable him to inspect certain books and papers in the custody of a receiver of a bank, it appeared that the offenses charged were committed six months previously, and that the prosecution was probably commenced soon afterwards, but that defendant had taken no legal steps to compel the production of such books and papers for his inspection, or to procure copies of them. Held, that a refusal of the application was not error requiring reversal, the matter being largely within the discretion of the trial court.—State v. Hodges, (Kan.) 26 P. 676; State v. Emmons, Id. 679.

54. At the trial of an information for embezzlement charging several distinct offenses in separate counts, the admission of evidence relevant and competent to prove one charge, though not relevant or competent as to the others, and the admission of evidence irrelevant and incompetent to prove any of the charges, but which was afterwards expressly withdrawn by the court from the jury, where it does not appear that defendant's substantial rights were prejudicially affected thereby, are not ground for reversal of a conviction.—State v. Hodges, (Kan.) 26 P. 676; State v. Emmons, Id. 679.

— Presumption.

55. On appeal in a criminal case it will be presumed that before proceeding with the trial the clerk read the information, unless the contrary appears from the record.—People v. Wheatley, (Cal.) 26 P. 95.

56. The presumption is that the oral charge of the court was taken down by the short-hand reporter, as required by Pen. Code Cal. § 1093, unless the record affirmatively shows the contrary.—People v. McGregor, (Cal.) 26 P. 97.

57. Where the oral charge of the court appears in full in the transcript of the record, it will be presumed that it was taken down by the short-hand reporter.—People v. Wheatley, (Cal.) 26 P. 95.

58. An information charging burglary and prior conviction was assigned by the presiding judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco to department 6 for trial, where defendant was arraigned, and pleaded not guilty. The record, without showing objection by defendant, simply shows that the cause was transferred to department 12, where, on arraignment, a plea of guilty of the prior conviction was entered. Afterwards a trial was had in department 12, resulting in a verdict of guilty of burglary. Held, that it will be presumed that the cause was properly transferred by the presiding judge.—People v. Wheatley, (Cal.) 26 P. 95.

Exemplary damages.

1. Whenever fraud, malice, gross negligence, or oppression mingle in the controversy, the law allows the jury to give exemplary damages.—Cady v. Case, (Kan.) 26 P. 448.

2. Where a passenger is injured in a wreck caused by a switch having been left open, and it does not appear by whom this was done, and there is no other evidence of negligence, it is error to submit to the jury the question of exemplary damages.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGinnis, (Kan.) 26 P. 453.

3. Where there is no evidence in an action for personal injuries that the negligence complained of is so gross as to amount to wantonness, and no willful or malicious acts on defendant's part are proven, it is error to instruct the jury that "they are at liberty to award what are termed 'exemplary' or 'punitive' damages; that is, damages which are given, not on account of any special merit in plaintiff's case justifying the same, but as a warning and lesson to the defendant, to teach it greater respect and care for the rights and safety of others." Railroad Co. v. Kier, 41 Kan. 671, 21 P. 770, followed.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. O'Connell, (Kan.) 26 P. 947.

Measure for breach of contract.

4. A town-site company contracted with the owner of an hotel to remove his hotel from another town in which it was situated to the company's town-site, but afterwards failed to perform the contract. Held, that the owner was not entitled to recover as damages the prospective profits which he would possibly have gained if the building had been removed; that it was his duty, on the refusal of the company to remove the building, to have it moved; and that he would recover only the necessary expenses of the removal, if the company had been paid therefor, and avoiding the consequences of the company's wrong.—Sherman Center Town Co. v. Leonard, (Kan.) 26 P. 717.

5. Under Civil Code Cal. § 3300, providing that for breach of contract the measure of damages is that amount which will compensate the party for all detriment proximately caused thereby, a landlord whose premises are abandoned by his tenant, and who thereupon leases the same to another, can recover as damages only the difference between the amount he should have received under the first lease and that which he actually did receive under the second.—Respini v. Porta, (Cal.) 26 P. 967.

6. Civil Code Cal. § 3302, providing that the detriment caused by the breach of an obligation to pay money only is deemed to be the amount due by the obligation, does not apply to an action by a landlord to recover damages for the abandonment of the leased premises by the tenant.—Respini v. Porta, (Cal.) 26 P. 967.

7. Where a retail dealer has contracted to furnish the lumber for a house, and, with notice of the purpose for which it is wanted, a wholesale dealer agrees to supply him with the lumber, which cannot be bought in the market at the place of delivery, the damages for a breach of the contract are not confined to the difference between the agreed price and the market price, but may include the actual loss directly and naturally resulting from a breach of the contract.—Halstead Lumber Co. v. Sutton, (Kan.) 26 P. 444.

8. Civil Code Cal. § 8906, provides that the detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to convey realty is the price paid, and expense of examining title, with interest, and, in case of bad faith, the difference between the price paid and the value of the land at the time of the breach, with expenses in preparing to enter on the land; and where the failure to convey was caused by the refusal of the vendor's wife to join in the deed, the vendor being willing to convey, there is no bad faith, and it is error to allow as damages the increase in the value of the property.—Yates v. James, (Cal.) 26 P. 1073.

Measure for torts.

9. In an action against a railroad company for failing to construct cattle-guards where the road enters an inclosure the land-owner may recover for the damages to his crops by trespassing animals, and also for the services of himself and family in guarding the crops to prevent further damage.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Ricketts, (Kan.) 26 P. 50.

10. In a suit for personal injuries, no damages can be given by reason of peril and fright not accompanied by some actual injury caused thereby and traceable directly thereto.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGinnis, (Kan.) 26 P. 453.

11. In a suit for a personal injury to a married woman who lives with her husband and is engaged in no business for herself, she cannot recover for loss of time and medical attendance, nor for impaired capacity for labor.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGinnis, (Kan.) 26 P. 453.

Excessive verdict.

12. A verdict for $4,995 was not so excessive as to justify reversal, where decedent, at the time of his death, was a strong, healthy man 28 years old, of good habits, and earning $1.75 per day.—Webb v. Denver & R. G. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 981.

13. A passenger was 31 years of age, and earned $2,500 a year as pension examiner. His injuries had caused him great pain and suffering, and were of a permanent character, and greatly impaired his ability to labor. They will subject him to pain and discomfort in the future, and render him less able to resist or recover from other diseases. Held, that a verdict for $5,246 was not excessive.—Southern Kan. Ry. Co. v. Walsh, (Kan.) 26 P. 45.

14. Where it appeared that plaintiff, at the time of the injury, was 23 years old; that he had been confined only about a month thereby; that he was still able to do light work about a farm; that his health was not at all impaired; that he was not educated for a profession; that at the time of the injury he was earning about $75 per month,—a verdict of $12,000, though reduced by permission of plaintiff's counsel to $10,000, for the loss of a hand, is grossly excessive.—Brown v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 579.

15. Though, under the evidence, plaintiff is entitled to $1,500 or nothing, a verdict for $1,000 will not be disturbed on appeal at the instance of defendant, it not appearing that there was any intentional misconduct on the part of the jury.—Gaynor v. Clements, (Colo.) 26 P. 324.

Inadequate damages.

16. In an action for personal injuries, where plaintiff recovered a verdict for $500, it was not an abuse of discretion to grant a new trial, where he was wrongfully assaulted by defendant, was then 46 years old, and in good health, and able to earn $90 per month, and the injury inflicted resulted in the loss of his arm, and the verdict was wholly inadequate to compensate him for the damage sustained.—Townsend v. Briggs, (Cal.) 26 P. 108.

Pleading.

17. An allegation that by reason of defendant's failure to run cars and carry passengers to and from a tract of land owned by plaintiff, in accordance with the terms of a contract between plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $30,000, is a sufficient allegation of general damage.—Sunny Side Land & Imp. Co. v. Willamette Bridge Ry. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 835.

18. An allegation of the complaint that plaintiff had been compelled to expend a certain amount for medical treatment and nursing was sufficient without pleading it as a distinct cause of action.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hess, (Wash.) 26 P. 866.

Evidence.

19. In proving the market value of hops at Independence on a particular day, a witness stated the value at Buena Vista on that day, a town about five miles above Independence, on the Willamette river. Held not error.—Bump v. Cooper, (Or.) 26 P. 848.

20. Where the value of a mare killed by a train was not disputed, and plaintiff and another witness testified that she was worth $150, a verdict in that sum was warranted, although plaintiff gave as a reason for his valuation that he had been offered that sum for her.—Johnson v. Rio Grande W. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 926.

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT.

Measure of damages.

1. Under Comp. Laws Utah 1888, §§ 2902, 3179, giving the personal representative and heirs of one whose death is caused by the wrongful act of another the right to sue for damages for the benefit of his distributees, and providing that such damages may be given as are just, the jury, in an action for the death of a husband and father, may consider the number and ages of his family, his age, his ability to earn wages and provide for his family, and what his expectancy may have been, in order to arrive at the pecuniary loss sustained by his family.—Pool v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 654.

2. In an action against a railroad company for killing plaintiff's child, evidence was introduced, over defendant's objection, as to the grief of the father; and the court charged on the subject of damages that the jury were to consider the comfort the parents might take with the child in bringing it up. Held, that such rulings were not objectionable, as authorizing damages for the father's mental anguish; the instruction being but slightly different, if any, from directing the jury to take into account the loss of the child's society, and the evidence a natural inference, which the jury would draw for themselves; and which, although erroneously admitted, was presumably harmless, since there was no contention of excessive damages.—Hyde v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 979.

DECEIT.

When action lies.

1. Defendant falsely claimed to own the relinquishment of a timber culture claim, and fraudulently misrepresented the location and the quality of the land, which was in fact public land, on which no entry had been made. Plaintiff purchased and paid for the relinquishment, which defendant claimed to have filed in the land-office, and plaintiff then made a timber culture entry on the land. Held, that plaintiff was justified in relying on the representations, and the fact that, in making his entry, plaintiff filed in the land-office an affidavit that the land was prairie and devoid of timber would not defeat a recovery of damages for such fraud.—Davis v. Jenkins, (Kan.) 26 P. 459.

Damages.

2. In an action to recover damages for fraud practiced upon a purchaser of land by the vendor, who claimed to possess the right to a timber culture claim, the non-taxable character of land so entered is a proper consideration for the jury in determining the value of such a claim and right of entry.—Davis v. Jenkins, (Kan.) 26 P. 459.

DEDICATION.

Of highway, see Highways, 1, 2.

Authority to dedicate.

1. Where one holds lands by a deed absolute, and sells part thereof with reference to a recorded plat with streets marked upon it, parol evidence that he took the land subject to a trust, but not showing the nature thereof, is insufficient to rebut the presumption that he had authority to thus dedicate the streets to the public.—Logan v. Rose, (Cal.) 26 P. 103.

What constitutes.

2. A corporation platted an addition to a city. The plat showed on the north side a strip 85 feet wide, marked "North." An agent of the company, who was also a director, sold lots fronting on the strip, and told the purchasers that it was a street. Houses were built on either side, and it was used as a street, the city constructing bridges and sluices thereon. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding that there was a dedication.—Hitchcock v. City of Oberlin, (Kan.) 26 P. 463.

3. Where the owners of a block, by mutual agreement, opened an alley, and the same was recognized as an alley for more than 30 years, such dedication is sufficient to maintain an action to abate a private nuisance in obstructing the same.—Hargro v. Hodgdon, (Cal.) 26 P. 1106.

4. Where a corporation platted an addition to a city, and the issue is whether a certain strip was dedicated as a street, statements to that effect made by a director of the corporation while selling lots as its agent are competent, but not while selling lots of his own.—Hitchcock v. City of Oberlin, (Kan.) 26 P. 463.

Acceptance.

5. The owner of a tract of land platted it and conveyed the lots with reference to the plat. The plat showed that the streets were 80 feet wide, except C. street, which occupied a space 150 feet wide. A part of C. street, comprising a strip 80 feet wide, had been used as a public street for 11 years, when the owner conveyed a portion of said strip. Held, that there had been such an acceptance of the dedication as to the part so used, that it could not be revoked by such conveyance.—Logan v. Rose, (Cal.) 26 P. 103.

Delivery.

1. Delivery of a deed cannot be disproved by the testimony of a third person, with whom the grantor left it, that if he had afterwards called for it he would have given it to him, since it does not tend to show the grantor's intention.—Dean v. Parker, (Cal.) 26 P. 91.

2. In the record of a deed purporting to have been made in 1857 by George H. Case, the acknowledgment was to the effect that the instrument was acknowledged by George H. Crane. The deed was not in the possession nor under the control of the party by whom the record was offered in evidence, and the grantee testified that the grantor, the subscribing witness, and the officers who took the acknowledgment were dead, and that the deed was executed and acknowledged by George H. Case in the presence of the witness. Held, that the parol evidence was competent, and the record admissible, and that it was prima facie evidence of the delivery of the deed.—Heil v. Redden, (Kan.) 26 P. 2.

Recording.

3. In Colorado, the recording of a deed is not essential to its validity, but a deed duly executed and delivered is valid, though unrecorded, as to a subsequent purchaser, with notice of such deed.—Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, (Colo.) 26 P. 814.

Construction and effect.

4. "In consideration of the payment of all back taxes now due on the land herein described, and the redemption of the same from all tax claims, and the clearance of that half of the land not hereby conveyed from all taxes and tax claims," the owner conveyed by warranty deed an undivided one-half of the land to an attorney, the deed further reciting that "the undivided half is hereby conveyed in consideration of clearing the whole of all taxes now due, and tax claims of all kinds." Held, that the deed was absolute, and not on condition precedent or subsequent, and that, though the attorney died insolvent without clearing the land of taxes and tax claims, the deed could not be avoided.—Rugles v. Clare, (Kan.) 26 P. 25.

Of witness residing in state.

2. By Code Colo. 1887, § 346, depositions of witnesses residing in the state, but outside the county where the case is tried, may be taken under a dedimus with interrogatories, without service of an affidavit, and in the same manner as the testimony of a witness residing out of the state.—Mackey v. Briggs, (Colo.) 26 P. 131.

Waiver of objections.

3. Unless objections to depositions are "made and disposed of before the trial," as required by Civil Code Colo. 1887, § 353, they will be deemed to have been waived.—Cowan v. Cowan, (Colo.) 26 P. 934.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

See, also, Executors and Administrators.

Illegitimate children.

1. Act Utah 1853, § 25, permitting illegitimate children to inherit from the father, is valid under Act Cong. Sept. 9, 1850, (9 St. p. 453, § 6,) providing that the legislative power of Utah shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation consistent with the constitution of the United States and the provisions of the act. Following Cope v. Cope, 11 S. Ct. 223.—In re Pratt's Estate, (Utah,) 26 P. 576.

2. The act was not abrogated by Act Cong. July 1, 1862, (13 St. 501,) annulling all acts passed by the legislature of Utah territory, "which establish, support, maintain, shield, or -countenance polygamy," since polygamy is neither established, maintained, nor countenanced by permitting illegitimate children to inherit from the father. Following Cope v. Cope, 11 S. Ct. 223.—In re Pratt's Estate, (Utah,) 26 P. 576.

Children omitted from will.

3. Under Civil Code Cal. § 1806, providing that, where any testator omits to make provision for any of his children, and the will does not show that such omission was intentional, such child succeeds to such portion of the estate as he would have received if the testator had died intestate, the estate descends to him at once, and he becomes vested with such interest, subject only to a sale for the payment of debts; and where a will gives to the testator's wife all his property, with absolute power to sell any and all of it without application to or approval by the court, but omits to make provision for a child, a sale under such power will not convey a valid title, as against the right of the child. Affirming 23 P. 1143.—Smith v. Olmstead, (Cal.) 26 P. 521.

Rights of surviving husband.

4. Though, under the Colorado statutes, the surviving husband inherits half of the estate of his wife, he takes it subject to the payment of her debts, and where the estate is insolvent the purchaser of land belonging thereto under an execution against the husband acquires no title as against a creditor of the wife who purchases at the administrator's sale.—Nichols v. Lee, (Colo.) 26 P. 157.

Remedies of heirs.

5. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 22, 23, providing that an action is an ordinary proceeding for the enforcement or protection of a right, or the redress or prevention of a wrong, and every other remedy is a special proceeding, the determination of the heirship of claimants to an estate by the superior court is a special proceeding, and under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1664, conferring jurisdiction, and providing that any person claiming to be an heir to deceased, or entitled to distribution, may, "after the expiration of one year" from the issuing of letters of administration, petition the court to determine the rights of persons to the estate, and to whom distribution shall be made, the court acquires no jurisdiction where the petition is filed within a year from the issuing of letters of administration.—*Smith v. DIVORCE.

Grounds.

1. Where in a divorce suit the evidence shows that defendant left plaintiff after the first night and never afterwards lived with him, that she induced the marriage by false representations made to secure money from plaintiff, plaintiff is entitled to a divorce and to a decree for the money advanced by him to defendant before marriage.—Munroe v. Munroe, (Or.) 26 P. 833.

2. In an action for divorce for abandonment, where a cross-complaint was filed alleging a subsequent abandonment of defendant, and the court refused to consider the same except by way of answer, it was error without injury, where the findings show that defendant abandoned plaintiff at the time alleged, and lives apart from him against his will and without his consent.—Blakely v. Blakely, (Cal.) 26 P. 1073.

Service by publication.

3. Code Civil Proc. Kan. § 640, provides that when, in a suit for divorce, service is made by publication, a copy of the petition with a copy of the notice attached shall be mailed to the defendant within three days after the first publication, unless the plaintiff shall make and file an affidavit that the defendant's residence is unknown and cannot be ascertained. Held, that the affidavit need not be filed within three days after the first publication.—Ensign v. Ensign, (Kan.) 26 P. 7.

Evidence.

4. In an action for divorce on the ground of adultery, it is not error to refuse evidence of the good reputation for chastity of the person with whom defendant is alleged to have committed the adultery, when the general reputation of such person has not been put in issue, and she is neither a party to nor a witness in the case.—Cowan v. Cowan, (Colo.) 26 P. 934.

5. In a suit for divorce for adultery, where no marriage is shown between plaintiff and defendant, evidence of defendant's marriage to the woman with whom he is charged in the bill as having committed adultery is properly excluded as immaterial.—Kilburn v. Kilburn, (Cal.) 26 P. 686.

Alimony.

6. In an action for divorce brought by the wife, an allowance to her of $16,800 out of the husband's estate for counsel fees and permanent alimony is excessive, where it appears that the husband's estate did not exceed $24,000, and that he was afflicted with a disease which in a great measure incapacitated him for business.—Cowan v. Cowan, (Colo.) 26 P. 934.

7. Comp. Laws Utah 1888, §§ 3424, 4135, provide that when a judgment has been rendered against a decedent in his life-time no execution shall issue after his death, except only where the judgment is for the recovery of real or personal property, or the enforcement of a lien thereon. Held, that a money judgment rendered as alimony to the widow of decedent during his life-time was not within the above exception.—Weaver v. Weaver, (Utah,) 26 P. 581.

8. Under such circumstances, where plaintiff's right to enforce her judgment by execution has been extinguished by the death of the judgment debtor, she cannot have such process against a garnishee.—Weaver v. Weaver, (Utah,) 26 P. 581.

Disposition of property.

9. Under Hill's Code Or. § 499, which provides that the party at whose prayer a decree of divorce shall be made shall be entitled to a third of the real estate owned by the other at the time of such decree, and that "it shall be the duty of the court in all such cases to enter a decree in accordance with this provision," a party in whose favor a decree of divorce has been rendered does not acquire any right in the property of the adverse party, where neither the complaint nor the decree mentions or adjudicates any right or interest therein. Bamford v. Bamford, 4 Or. 30; Wetmore v. Wetmore, 5 Or. 469; and Hall v. Hall, 9 Or. 452,—followed; and Weiss v. Bethel, 8 Or. 523, overruled.—Ross v. Ross, (Or.) 26 P. 1007.

Disposition of separate property.

10. Under Code Wash. § 2007, providing that, "in granting a divorce, the court shall also make such disposition of the property of the parties as shall appear just and equitable, having regard to the merits of the parties, their condition after divorce, and to the party through whom the property was acquired," the court has power to dispose of the separate, as well as the joint, property of husband and wife.—Webster v. Webster, (Wash.) 26 P. 864.

DURESS.

What constitutes.

In an action to cancel a mortgage it appeared that defendant's officers obtained the signature of plaintiff by representing that the debt sought to be secured, for which plaintiff was a surety, was for money which had been fraudulently obtained; that plaintiff was liable to arrest; and that defendant would have him arrested unless he signed the paper. He was detained several hours in room with defendant's officers, was not allowed to consult a lawyer, and was only allowed to go when he had signed the paper. Held, that such signature was procured by duress.—Winfield Nat. Bank v. Croco, (Kan.) 26 P. 939.

EASEMENTS.

Creation.

1. Where a person opens a way for the use of his own premises, and another uses it without causing damage, the presumption is that his use was permissive, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, he does not acquire a right of way by prescription.—Harkness v. Woodmansee, (Utah,) 26 P. 291.

2. 2 Comp. Laws Utah 1888, §§ 3182, 3183, 3187, require that a person defending an action against one holding adversely must have been in possession within seven years before commencement of the action, and provide that possession will be deemed adverse only where the land has been protected by a substantial inclosure, or where it has been cultivated, or the expense of irrigation paid, and that in all cases the taxes must have been paid by the adverse claimant. Held, that one who merely uses part of an adjoining lot as a means of exit to the street for the statutory period does not acquire a right of way by adverse possession.—Harkness v. Woodmansee, (Utah,) 26 P. 291.

Bona fide purchaser of servient tenement.

3. When B. paid to F. a valuable consideration for the right to dig a ditch across F.'s land so as to flow water into Baldock slough, for purposes of irrigation, and B. takes possession thereof and cuts the ditch, and causes the water to flow through the same for many years, the contract is executed, and a purchaser from F. takes with notice of B.'s interest, which is such that a court of equity will protect it.—Baldock v. Atwood, (Or.) 26 P. 1058.

Ejection.

Of passengers, see Carriers, 7, 8.

EJECTMENT.

See, also, Adverse Possession.

Title to support.

1. One claiming through a mortgagor who has placed his mortgagee in possession cannot maintain ejectment against the mortgagee while the mortgage debt remains unsatisfied, even though an action thereon by the mortgagee is barred by the statute of limitations.—Spect v. Spect, (Cal.) 26 P. 203.

2. One who takes a conveyance, before expiration of the time for redemption, from the purchaser at a sale under execution, and afterwards receives a deed from the sheriff, acquires a perfect title.—Leonard v. Flynn, (Cal.) 26 P. 1097.

3. Prior possession of plaintiff, or parties through whom he claims for many years, is sufficient evidence of title to support ejectment.—Leonard v. Flynn, (Cal.) 26 P. 1099.

4. The holder under the pre-emption laws of the United States of a cash entry receipt, while it is uncanceled, may maintain ejectment. Dunbar, J., dissenting.—Pierce v. Frace, (Wash.) 26 P. 192; Orchard v. Alexander, Id. 196.

5. Code Civil Proc. Neb. § 411, which provides that "the usual duplicate receipt of the receiver of any land-office * * * is proof of the title equivalent to a patent against all but the holder of an actual patent," does not authorize a recovery in ejectment on such duplicate receipt.—Adams v. Couch, (Okla.) 26 P. 1009.

6. Plaintiff in ejectment claimed, under a deed from a railroad company, part of a section designated by an odd number, lying within 3 miles of its line of road; and, to show title in his grantor, relied upon an act of congress granting thereto such of the sections indicated by odd numbers, within 20 miles of said railroad, as were not mineral lands, and such as had not been sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of, and to which pre-emption or homestead claims had not attached. Defendant denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and the evidence showed that he was in possession when suit was instituted. Held, in the absence of proof that the disputed tract was not within any of the above exceptions, direction of a verdict for plaintiff was erroneous.—McGrath v. Tallent, (Utah,) 26 P. 574.

Defenses.

7. In ejectment, plaintiff claimed under one M. The answer alleged a prior purchase from M. by a verbal contract under which defendant took possession, and made lasting and valuable improvements, and that within the time fixed by the contract he tendered the purchase money. Held, that a good defense was stated.—Chandler v. Neil, (Kan.) 26 P. 470.

8. Defendants, who were in possession of land under a contract to purchase, assigned the contract as security for a debt. The assignee assigned to plaintiff, who, with full knowledge of defendants' right, made payment to the vendor of the full purchase money, surrendered the contract, and received a deed for the land. He then brought ejectment. There was no evidence that defendants were in default under the contract. Held, that their equitable title should prevail over plaintiff's legal title, and he cannot recover.—Hyde v. Mangan, (Cal.) 26 P. 180.

Pleading.

9. Comp. Laws Utah 1888, §§ 3126, 3219, provide but one form of civil action, and that the complaint must contain a statement of the facts constituting a cause of action in ordinary and concise language. Section 3133 provides, in actions to recover real property, the right of possession is presumed to accompany ownership, and the possession is presumed subordinate to the legal title. Held, that a complaint in ejectment, alleging that "plaintiff is, and at all times therein mentioned was, the owner of, and seised in fee of, * * * and that the defendant is in possession thereof, and unlawfully withholds the same from the plaintiff, to her damage," is sufficient.—Jones v. Mommott, (Utah,) 26 P. 925.

10. In ejectment, a complaint alleging that plaintiff is seised in fee of the realty, and defendant is in possession, and against plaintiff's will detains and withholds the possession thereof, is sufficient on demurrer.—Hihn v. Mangenberg, (Cal.) 26 P. 908.

11. Where, in ejectment, the land is described as being in S. township, S. C. county, California, and bounded on the north-east by Bay avenue, on the S. E. by the land of M. E. Land, and on the S. W. and N. W. by S. creek, the description is sufficient on special demurrer.—Hihn v. Mangenberg, (Cal.) 26 P. 968.

12. Where an answer in ejectment pleads the evidence instead of the ultimate facts, the objection cannot be first raised on appeal.—Hemenway v. Francis, (Or.) 26 P. 301.

13. In ejectment, an answer is sufficient after verdict which defends for a part of the piece which is described thus: "About 120 acres of said land,—the farming land on the north side of the county road,—with the buildings thereon."—Hemenway v. Francis, (Or.) 26 P. 301.

Evidence.

14. In ejectment, where the defense is that plaintiffs' ancestor conveyed the premises to defendants' grantor by a deed which plaintiffs claim was forged, it is error to instruct that a forged deed is void, and confers no rights, "except, if duly recorded, it is constructive notice of that fact."—Haight v. Vallet, (Cal.) 26 P. 897.

15. In determining whether plaintiffs' ancestor executed a deed claimed to have been forged, the jury may properly consider the subsequent conduct of the ancestor, and whether he ever made any claim to the property, or its possession, paid taxes and assessments, or made any other assertion of ownership.—Haight v. Vallet, (Cal.) 26 P. 897.

Instructions.

16. In ejectment, where defendant claims by virtue of the statute of limitations, and also by reason of an alleged settlement of the line between him and plaintiff by their respective grantors, failing which defenses there is no question of plaintiff's right to the land, it is not error to instruct that plaintiff is entitled to recover, unless defendant shows title in one of the ways pleaded, and that the fact that he has in good faith made improvements on the land in controversy cannot affect the verdict.—Helm v. Wilson, (Cal.) 26 P. 1103.

17. An instruction in an action of ejectment that "a grantee cannot be put in a better condition than his grantor was at the time of executing the grant" was properly refused as an erroneous statement of a proposition of law.—Rowland v. McCown, (Or.) 26 P. 853.

Judgment.

18. Where, in ejectment, it appeared that the land had been the community property of the plaintiffs' father and mother; that the father died, and plaintiffs inherited one-half of the land, and their mother the other half; that the mother subsequently married the defendant, and afterwards died, whereupon plaintiffs inherited from her two-thirds of her half, and the defendant the other third,—a judgment that plaintiffs recover an undivided five-sixths of the land, instead of merely that plaintiffs were tenants in common of an undivided five-sixths of the land with the defendant, and should be let into possession thereof as such, is error, as being against evidence.—Burgel v. Frisser, (Cal.) 26 P. 787.

19. If, pending an action of ejectment, a new or distinct title or interest in the land is acquired by the defendant, either in equity or in law, if such title or interest is not asserted in the action before judgment, the judgment for plaintiff is conclusive against such title or interest, under the provisions of the Kansas Civil Code by which such an action settles the title between the parties in favor of the one recovering the judgment.—Hentig v. Redden, (Kan.) 26 P. 701.

ELECTIONS AND VOTERS.

Mandamus to election officers, see Mandamus, 6, 7.

Qualifications of voters.

1. Residents of Kansas filed homestead claims in Oklahoma territory, and made settlement and improvements thereon during and after April, 1889, intending to make such homestead claims their homes. They afterwards returned, for temporary purposes, to their former residences in Kansas, and while there, intending to return to Oklahoma, voted at the election on November 5, 1889, and afterwards went to their homes in Oklahoma, where they continued to reside. Held, that the votes so cast by them were illegal.—State v. Deniston, (Kan.) 26 P. 742.

2. In quo warranto proceedings, brought to determine the result of an election held in Kansas on November 5, 1889, at which a vote was cast by C., a witness, who had been a resident of another state for a long time and until September, 1889, when he removed to Kansas, testified that C. had been for five years a resident of such other state; that when the witness removed therefrom he left C. there; and that he first saw C. in Kansas in October, 1889. Held, that a residence in the township of 35 days before the election being required as a qualification to vote thereat, C.'s vote was illegal.—State v. Deniston, (Kan.) 26 P. 742.

Registration.

3. Act Cal. March 18, 1878, (St. 1877-78, p. 299,) requires (section 6) the board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco to pass on cases of alleged illegal registration on the precinct registers, brought before it by the register of voters, and (section 29) on the action of the registrar in canceling names upon, or adding names to, the register, and is authorized to "appoint clerks or other assistants to the registrar," to enable him to ascertain the correctness of the registers. Section 12 authorizes the board to select all election officers "provided for by law." Held, that the board cannot appoint persons to advise or assist the board in the selection and appointment of officers of election, or, independently of the registrar, to scrutinize the roll and detect fraud in registration.—Falk v. Reis, (Cal.) 26 P. 359.

4. Nor is such authority given the board by section 38, providing that all provisions for carrying out the registration and election laws shall be made by the board.—Falk v. Reis, (Cal.) 26 P. 359.

Election officers.

5. Sess. Laws Utah 1890, art. 15, §§ 102, 163, providing that 15 days before an election for school trustees for levying taxes, for voting on the issue of bonds, or for any other purpose named in the article, the city councils of the several cities shall appoint three judges of election from each ward, etc., are, in so far as they relate to elections on the issue of bonds, and no further, repealed by sections 122-125 of the same act, relating exclusively to elections on the issue of bonds, and specifically providing another mode of conducting them by the board of education.—People v. Godfrey, (Utah,) 26 P. 577.

6. Act Cong. March 23, 1882, (the Edmunds Law,) declaring vacant all registration and election offices in the territory of Utah, and providing that all duties relating to registration and elections should, until provision should be made by the legislature therein provided for, be performed under existing laws, by a board of five persons to be appointed by the president, who should continue in office until the legislature should make provision for filling the offices made vacant by the act, only vacated the offices then in existence, and did not prevent a legislature selected at an election, conducted by persons appointed by the board, from making laws by which such vacant offices might be filled; and the board of education of Salt Lake City, appointed by Act Utah March 13, 1890, to establish and maintain schools, and to conduct elections to determine whether school bonds shall be issued, have the right to conduct such elections.—People v. Godfrey, (Utah,) 26 P. 577.

Contest.

7. Comp. Laws Utah, § 8751, relating to contested elections, provides that no irregularity or improper conduct in the proceedings of the judges is such as avoids an election, unless it procures the person whose right to the office is contested to be declared elected when he has not received the highest number of legal votes. Section 3768 provides that when any election held for a county office is contested on account of misconduct of the judges of any precinct it can only be annulled when the rejection of the vote of such precinct would change the result in the remaining vote of the county. Held, in a contest for a county office, that where qualified voters, after their names have been illegally stricken from the lists, tender their votes, with affidavits of their qualification, and the same are rejected, they cannot then be counted or made available in such a contest; the power of the court being restricted to the rejection of fraudulent votes actually cast, or to the rejection of the vote of a precinct, where it appears that such vote would change the result in the remaining vote of the county.—Ferguson v. Allen, (Utah,) 26 P. 570.

8. The supreme and district courts of Utah have jurisdiction conferred upon them in contested elections by Comp. Laws, §§ 3757, 3765, which provide that, after the filing of the grounds of contest, the district court shall proceed to hear and determine the same; and that, if either party is aggrieved by the judgment, he may appeal therefrom to the supreme court, as in other cases.—Ferguson v. Allen, (Utah,) 26 P. 570.

9. In a contested election case, where an order is made, on motion of respondent, to require relator to furnish a list of the names of persons alleged to have voted illegally, he may give names of persons, legally registered, whose ballots were cast by others whose identity cannot be shown.—Londoner v. People, (Colo.) 26 P. 135.

10. Testimony that the witnesses received money from a candidate at an election, under circumstances indicating that it was paid to induce them to vote for him, is not enough to show that illegal votes were cast, where they do not testify directly that they did vote for such candidate, and the fact is left to inference.—State v. Deniston, (Kan.) 26 P. 742.

11. In quo warranto proceedings, brought to determine the result of an election, there was evidence that 10 men, who were not legal voters in the state, agreed to vote at a certain precinct, and all vote for a certain candidate. The poll-books showed that they all voted, and voted together. It was shown that the tickets were prepared by one of them by changing defendant's name thereon to the name of relator; his handwriting in the change of the tickets was proved, and nine tickets were in evidence which had been so changed. Held, that nine votes for defendants and one for relator must be declared illegal.—State v. Deniston, (Kan.) 26 P. 742.

Effect of casting fraudulent votes.

12. Where the judges of election fraudulently admit illegal and exclude legal votes to an extent that cannot be shown with reasonable certainty, the entire return will be rejected.—Londoner v. People, (Colo.) 26 P. 135.

13. The fact that fraudulent ballots are cast by persons who are not qualified electors is no ground for rejecting the entire vote of a precinct, where there are means of purging the poll, and ascertaining the actual legal vote.—Ferguson v. Allen, (Utah,) 26 P. 570.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

The power.

1. Comp. Laws Utah 1888, § 3841 et seq., provide that the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of "steam and horse railroads," and that all rights of way for such purposes may be crossed or intersected by any other right of way or improvement, and may be subject to a limited use in common with the owner, when necessary for the public benefit. Held, that such right may be exercised in behalf of electrical street railroads.—Ogden City Ry. Co. v. Ogden City, (Utah,) 26 P. 238.

2. The irrigation of agricultural lands is a matter of public concern, and a joint-stock company of land-owners may be authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain for the condemnation of a right of way for ditches and canals.—Oury v. Goodwin, (Ariz.) 26 P. 376.

3. Under the organic act of Arizona, providing that "the legislative power of this territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States," the territory may provide for the exercise of the power of eminent domain.—Oury v. Goodwin, (Ariz.) 26 P. 376.

Procedure.

4. When, on appeal in condemnation proceedings, the land-owner files a petition, the first count of which contains no claim for damages, it is error to overrule a demurrer to that count interposed on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.—Leavenworth, N. & S. Ry. Co. v. Wilkins, (Kan.) 26 P. 16.

5. Though, in condemnation proceedings, the award made by the district court requires the railroad company to pay the money in 60 days, proceedings in error may be taken by the railroad company, and, if there is error in the proceedings, the award will be reversed, though the time fixed for the payment of the money has long since passed.—Leavenworth, N. & S. Ry. Co. v. Herley, (Kan.) 26 P. 28.

6. In condemnation proceedings, where the damages awarded are so excessive as to show that the verdict was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice, the award should be set aside, and a new trial given, and the court should not substitute its own judgment for that of a jury by reducing the amount of the verdict.—Parsons & P. R. Co. v. Montgomery, (Kan.) 26 P. 403.

Compensation.

7. In proceedings for condemnation of land for the right of way of a railroad, a certain sum was awarded as damages for injuries to the land to one party, and a nominal sum to another party as damages for injuries to the same land, from which award the latter appealed to the district court. Held, that he could not recover damages without showing by competent proof that he had an interest in the land that was subject to injury.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Easley, (Kan.) 26 P. 731.

8. On appeal from proceedings to appropriate a right of way though land owned by a husband and wife, they cannot unite with a claim for damages to that land a demand for damages to other lands owned by the husband only.—Leavenworth, N. & S. Ry. Co. v. Wilkins, (Kan.) 26 P. 16.

9. A railroad company authorized contractors, employed by it to construct its railroad, to procure for it at their own expense the right of way. The contractors, through their agent, in the name of the company, procured a right of way through plaintiff's premises by contract. Afterwards, by reason of such contract, and without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, they procured the assessment of nominal damages only for such right of way by the condemnation commissioners. The railroad was constructed by the contractors, and afterwards operated by the railroad company, but the company failed to perform the contract with plaintiff. Held, that plaintiff might recover substantial damages from the railroad company, if it elected to retain the right of way.—Leroy & C. V. A. L. R. Co. v. Small, (Kan.) 26 P. 695.

10. The city council having authorized the location of a railroad in a street, the owner of an abutting lot cannot recover damages therefor unless the road is so located as virtually to deprive him of ingress and egress to and from his lot.—Kansas, N. & D. Ry. Co. v. Mahler, (Kan.) 26 P. 22.

11. The city council having authorized the location of a railroad in a street, the owner of an abutting lot cannot recover damages therefor unless the railroad is so located as virtually to deprive him of ingress and egress to and from his lot. Railway Co. v. Mahler, 26 P. 22, followed.—Herndon v. Kansas, N. & D. Ry. Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 959.

12. In condemnation proceedings the land-owner cannot recover for independent trespasses by the railroad company and its servants outside of the land sought to be appropriated.—Leavenworth, N. & S. Ry. Co. v. Herley, (Kan.) 26 P. 23.

13. The appropriation of a right of way for a railroad separated the land-owner's house from the highway. In a special finding the jury returned an award of $60 for the owner's inconvenience in having to leave his team to open and shut gates. The court had charged that nothing could be allowed on that account. They also awarded $743 by reason of the railroad running between the house and the highway. Held, that the improper allowance of $60 must have been included in that of $743, and should be deducted therefrom, and $120 from the total award.—Florence, E. & W. V. R. Co. v. Pember, (Kan.) 26 P. 1.

14. In a proceeding to condemn a right of way through a farm, the owner of which has outlying lands which corner with his home farm and are used as pastures in connection with it, no damages can be awarded on account of such outlying lands.—Leavenworth, N. & S. Ry. Co. v. Wilkins, (Kan.) 26 P. 16.

Compensation—Benefits.

15. The eminent domain act of Colorado (Code Civil Proc. § 254) provides that the verdict of the jury awarding damages shall state a description of the land taken, with its value; the damages, if any, to the residue; and the amount and value of the benefit. Held, that where the court refuses to instruct that the verdict must be in the language and form of the statute, and the verdict fails to show any finding as to the benefit, the judgment will be reversed.—Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Stark, (Colo.) 26 P. 779.

16. A court need not make separate findings of damages and benefits, when there is no evidence of benefits in any sum whatever.—Gallatin Canal Co. v. Lay, (Mont.) 26 P. 1001.

17. In proceedings to condemn a right of way for a railroad, it is error to withdraw from the jury evidence as to benefits to the property from the proposed railroad, as Civil Code Colo. § 253, expressly provides that the value of benefits shall be deducted from the amount of the damages.—Colorado Cent. R. Co. v. Humphreys (Colo.) 26 P. 165.

18. In the condemnation of a right of way for a railroad, under a constitutional provision requiring full compensation to be made without regard to benefits, the damages to the part of the land not taken cannot be diminished on account of benefits.—Interstate Consolidated Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. Simpson, (Kan.) 26 P. 893.

— Evidence.

19. In actions for damages, where land was taken for canal purposes, the testimony of a witness as to damages may be considered, although he does not testify as to benefits.—Gallatin Canal Co. v. Lay, (Mont.) 26 P. 1001.

20. In condemnation proceedings evidence is not competent that teams used in cultivating the land near the railroad are liable to be frightened, and that, in crossing the railroad, the owner has to leave his team while opening and shutting gates.—Florence, E. & W. V. R. Co. v. Pember, (Kan.) 26 P. 1.

21. In an action to determine the value of certain town lots condemned for the right of way of a railroad, the opinions of witnesses, as to the value of the lots at the time they were condemned, will not be deemed conclusive, but the jury may consider such opinions in connection with all the other testimony in the case, and then, for itself, determine from all the testimony the value of such lots.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Drake, (Kan.) 26 P. 1039.

22. On a trial in condemnation proceedings, when the word "worth" has been used by all parties as equivalent to "market value," a witness may be asked "what the land, as a whole tract, was worth just after the line was taken by the railroad," and the witness may be allowed to answer, though he says that he can only put his own estimate on it.—Florence, E. & W. V. R. Co. v. Pember, (Kan.) 26 P. 1.

23. In proceedings to condemn a right of way, it is not competent to ask a witness how much less the farm was worth after the railroad had established its track through it, taking into consideration the damage, loss, and inconvenience, present and prospective, which may reasonably be expected to result from permanently maintaining the railroad.—Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Neiman, (Kan.) 26 P. 22.

24. Upon the question of the damages to a farm of 160 acres from the construction of a railroad, a witness testified that he could not set a value on 80 acres of the land, and did not know the market value of the other 80, but that, in his judgment, it was worth $20 per acre. Held, that it was error to permit him, over the objection of the adverse party, to state how much less the whole farm was worth immediately after the appropriation of the right of way across it by the railroad company than it was immediately before such right of way was appropriated.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Easley, (Kan.) 26 P. 781.

25. In appeals from awards of commissioners in condemnation proceedings, opinions of witnesses as to the value of property should be confined to the property in question, unless on cross-examination, for the purpose of testing the knowledge and competency of the witness, the value of adjoining property is inquired of. Following Railway Co. v. Splitlog, (Kan.) 26 P. 202.—Kansas City & T. Ry. Co. v. Vickroy, (Kan.) 26 P. 698.

Remedies of land-owners.

26. Though the charter of the city of Spokane Falls (Sess. Laws Wash. 1885-86, p. 304, § 11) adopts expressly the provisions of Code Wash. §§ 2473-2476, which allow actions for damages to abutting property from building railroads in streets to be recovered before a justice of the peace, the charter is to this extent repealed by Act Wash. Feb. 1, 1888, which provides a remedy by proceedings in the district court, and declares it exclusive of all others.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Haas, (Wash.) 26 P. 869.

Concurrent jurisdiction of law and equity, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

Jurisdiction.

1. A contractor to do work on the streets of a city may assign his right to receive the warrants for such work, and such assignment creates an equitable interest in such expectancy, which a court of equity will protect by decreeing the delivery of the warrants when issued.—Stott v. Franey, (Or.) 26 P. 271.

— Reformation of contracts.

2. Where, in an action to reform a lease for a mistake, the complaint alleged the weakness of plaintiff's mind, and inadequacy of consideration, it was only necessary to show the mistake of plaintiff, and that defendant knew of it, since Civil Code Cal. § 3399, provides for reformation of a contract made through the mistake of one party, which the other party at the time of execution knew or suspected.—Wilson v. Moriarity, (Cal.) 26 P. 85.

8. Under such section a suit to reform a contract cannot be defended on the ground that the mistaken party was negligent in not reading the contract, if it appears that the other party at the time of its execution knew of the mistake.—Wilson v. Moriarity, (Cal.) 26 P. 85.

4. In an action by the lessor to reform a lease for 10 years the evidence showed that plaintiff was unable to read or write, while defendant was a shrewd business man, on terms of friendship with plaintiff and her husband; that defendant drew the lease himself, but did not read it to plaintiff, though it was read to her by the notary before acknowledgment. Several witnesses testified that defendant has sent them to plaintiff to negotiate the lease, but she refused to make it for more than five years. Defendant testified, but was contradicted by plaintiff's husband, that he drew the lease under an agreement with him, and that he promised to notify plaintiff. Plaintiff testified that she intended to make a lease for five years only, and had refused to make it for a longer time. Held, that the lease should be reformed so as to run for five years.—Wilson v. Moriarity, (Cal.) 26 P. 85.

5. In an action by a landlord to reform a lease, the court's action, after reforming the lease, in dismissing the complaint in so far as it asked additional rent on account of improvements under an agreement subsequent to the lease, is not reversible error.—Wilson v. Moriarity, (Cal.) 26 P. 85.

— Cancellation of contracts.

6. In an action to cancel a mortgage, it appeared that defendant obtained the signatures of plaintiffs (husband and wife) to the mortgage to secure a debt for which the husband was a surety, by representations that the instrument was not a mortgage, but simply a paper to protect the husband from arrest and imprisonment for an offense committed, and it appeared that they were old people, whose eye-sight was so impaired that they could not read the writing in the mortgage presented to them for signing. Held, that such mortgage would be canceled as procured by fraud.—Winfield Nat. Bank v. Croco, (Kan.) 26 P. 939.

7. In an action to avoid a deed on the ground of minority alone, there being evidence that plaintiff induced his mother to deed to him in trust for defendant, his brother, on his parol promise to convey it to him; that at the time he did not intend to keep his promise; that he afterwards conveyed it, with the secret intention of thereafter avoiding it on the ground of infancy,—it is error to admit evidence that the conveyance to defendant was induced by duress.—Nordholt v. Nordholt, (Cal.) 26 P. 599.

8. In a suit to set aside a deed as obtained by fraud it was shown that the grantor, an old man of weak mind, was falsely advised by his attending physician, the grantee's father-in-law, that he was about to die, and that, in order not to delay certain transactions in connection with the land, he had better convey his interest therein to the grantee; but the instrument was to contain a clause by which it should not go into effect unless he died of that illness. The deed was drawn without any such clause, however, and the grantee got possession thereof without the consent of the grantor, had it placed on record, and thereafter claimed title under it. Held, that the evidence warranted a judgment setting aside the deed.—Klose v. Hillenbrand, (Cal.) 26 P. 852.

Laches.

9. When the equitable owner of corporate shares is in control of the organization and property of the corporation, and in the exercise of all the rights of the owner of the stock, his delay in bringing suit against the holder of the certificate to obtain title to the stock, and his failure to interplead in another state in a suit between the holder of the certificate and the corporation, will not be imputed to him as laches.—Dunne v. Stotesbury, (Colo.) 26 P. 883.

10. Where a beneficiary did not commence suit to enforce a trust for 2 years after her trustee's death, 8 years after marriage, 16 years after attaining her majority, and 19 years after the execution of a deed conveying the land in dispute to the trustee, the delay will not be considered laches, when it appears that she lived with her trustee most of the time, and that the defendants have expended nothing upon the lands.—Butler v. Hyland, (Cal.) 26 P. 1108.

Pleading.

11. In an action for an accounting, it is not an abuse of discretion to permit defendant to file an amended answer denying certain averments as to taxes paid after the evidence was closed.—Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Jones, (Cal.) 26 P. 1089.

Practice—Verdict of jury.

12. The verdict of a jury on a feigned issue out of chancery is not binding on the chancellor, and he may disregard it, and decide the cause according to his own judgment.—McDonald v. Thompson, (Colo.) 26 P. 146.

Findings of fact and law.

13. While findings of fact and law are necessary in an action at law tried by the court without a jury, they are not essential to the validity of a judgment in a suit in equity.—Kilroy v. Mitchell, (Wash.) 26 P. 865.

ERROR, WRIT OF.

See, also, Appeal; Exceptions, Bill of; New Trial.

Legislative control.

Under Const. Colo. art. 6, § 28, which provides that writs of error shall lie to review all final judgments of the county court, writs of error are subject to legislative control, and may be abolished, except to review judgments of the county courts, in which case the right is inviolate.—People v. Richmond, (Colo.) 26 P. 929.

ESCROW.

Redelivery of deed to grantor.

After a deed had been duly executed and placed in escrow by the grantor, to be delivered to the grantee upon the payment of the purchase price, the deed was redelivered by the depositary to the grantor. There was no evidence that the grantee consented to such redelivery, or that he had failed to comply with the conditions. Held, that the redelivery must be deemed unauthorized.—Grove v. Jennings, (Kan.) 26 P. 733.

By deed.

1. A patent to a Shawnee Indian woman provided that the land should never be conveyed without the approval of the secretary of the interior. The Indian woman was married to a white man, who survived her, and conveyed a part of the land to M. The latter subsequently obtained a conveyance of all the land from the chiefs of the Shawnee Indians, which was approved by the secretary of the interior. Held that, the deed of the surviving husband to M. being void because not approved by the secretary of the interior, M. was not estopped by its recitals from denying the husband's title.—O'Brien v. Bugbee, (Kan.) 26 P. 428.

By record.

2. In an action for trespass upon land, where the defendant pleads liberum tenementum, and there is a judgment for the plaintiff in another action between the same parties, which judgment is relied upon as an estoppel, it is for the party setting up said estoppel to show by evidence in what part of the close the trespass was committed, and thus apply the issue and judgment to the premises.—Abraham v. Owens, (Or.) 26 P. 1112.

8. The statement "that this cause came on regularly to be heard" * * * on defendant's motion for a new trial, "in plaintiff's bill of exceptions, precludes him from setting up that defendant never made or filed a motion for new trial.—Cunningham v. Quirk, (Mont.) 26 P. 184.

In pais.

4. One who calls a physician to attend a person whom he represents to be his wife is estopped to deny that fact in an action for services rendered on the faith of such representation.—Gerlach v. Turner, (Cal.) 26 P. 870.

5. The statement by the husband in his petition for letters of administration on his deceased wife's estate, that certain land was her separate estate, does not estop the grantee of the husband from claiming that it was community property, in an action against the purchaser thereof as part of the wife's estate.—Dean v. Parker, (Cal.) 26 P. 91.

6. Plaintiff held a mortgage on crops to secure his rent, and defendants, with full knowledge of his lien, sold goods to the tenant, and took hay, covered by the mortgage, in payment. At plaintiff's request the bank holding the note for the rent wrote defendants that the mortgage existed, and that for their own protection they should satisfy themselves that it had been paid. Plaintiff also wrote to his tenant that the sale to defendants was a good one, and advised the tenant to hold them to it. Held, that these letters did not estop plaintiff to require defendants to account to him for the value of the hay received.—Chittenden v. Pratt, (Cal.) 26 P. 626; Same v. McRae, Id.

7. The fact that before the purchaser at a sheriff's sale, or his grantees, has received a deed from the sheriff, a person claiming title through a conveyance from the judgment debtor has entered into possession and made valuable improvements, without objection by the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, or his grantees, is not sufficient to constitute an equitable estoppel against the latter.—Leonard v. Flynn, (Cal.) 26 P. 1097.

8. A land-owner signed, circulated, and presented a petition to the board of county commissioners under Laws Kan. 1887, c. 214, for the improvement of a county road contiguous to his land, and continued to live in the immediate vicinity of the improvement during the time it was in progress, and was present on the work at different times. He knew that the petition was insufficient under the statute. It appeared that the improvement greatly enhanced the value of his property, much in excess of the tax or special assessment attempted to be imposed therefor. Held, that he was estopped from prosecuting an action to restrain the collection of such tax or special assessment.—Stewart v. Hovey, (Kan.) 26 P. 683.

9. Plaintiff is not estopped to maintain replevin for certain cattle taken from his possession under an attachment against G. by representations to the attachment creditor that he had traded the cattle to G., and that they belonged to the latter, where he also said that G. had not performed his part of the contract, and that for that reason he was retaining possession.—Lewis v. Birdsey, (Or.) 26 P. 625.

Judicial notice.

1. The supreme court of Kansas will take judicial notice that on January 17, 1861, the region of country known as "Pike's Peak" was within the territory of Kansas.—Carey v. Reeves, (Kan.) 26 P. 951.

Best and secondary evidence.

2. In an action against a railroad company for the loss of goods shipped over its line, the issue was whether plaintiff had executed a writing releasing defendant from its strict liability as common carrier. The release was not produced at the trial, but defendant's station agent testified that he had been informed that a search had been made in the office of the traffic manager at Chicago, where such papers were usually kept, and that the release had not been found. Held, not a sufficient showing of proper diligence on defendant's part, as required by Hill's Code Or. § 691, to render admissible secondary evidence of the contents of the release, and that it was defendant's duty to produce the testimony of the traffic manager, or of some person in his office having the custody of such papers, to show that a search had been made, and that it was ineffectual.—Wiseman v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 272.

3. Since the defense was founded on the alleged release, and plaintiff denied both its execution and contents, a mere showing that the alleged release was in the hands of the traffic manager, without the state, is not sufficient to render admissible secondary evidence of its contents, in the absence of a proper effort to obtain the original.—Wiseman v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 272.

4. Under Code Civil Proc. Kan. §§ 372, 387a, making the record of deeds duly recorded admissible in evidence when the originals are not in the possession or under the control of the party desiring to use the same, the record is admissible without proof that the originals are not in the possession of the party by whom it is offered, when the originals were made to persons claiming adversely to him, and he is not entitled to their custody.—McLean v. Webster, (Kan.) 26 P. 10.

5. If it were necessary for a patentee to prove the loss of the original patent before introducing a certified copy in evidence, his testimony that he never received the original, and did not know what had become of it, would be sufficient.—Eltzroth v. Ryan, (Cal.) 26 P. 647.

6. Under Hill's Code Or. § 691, which provides that "there shall be no evidence of the contents of a writing other than the writing itself, except * * * when the original cannot be produced by the party by whom the evidence is offered, in a reasonable time, with proper diligence," it was error to admit evidence of the contents of the records of a private corporation in London without showing that due diligence had been used without success to obtain the original.—Bowick v. Miller, (Or.) 26 P. 861.

7. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1919, provides that a public record of a private writing may be proved by a certified copy, and section 1951 provides that the certified copy of the record of a conveyance may be read in evidence with like effect as the original, on proof by affidavit or otherwise that the original is not in possession or under control of the party producing the copy. Held, that it is not necessary to prove the loss of an original patent before introducing a certified copy thereof in evidence.—Eltzroth v. Ryan, (Cal.) 26 P. 647.

Declarations and admissions.

8. In an action against an officer for the value of property wrongfully levied on, in which plaintiff claims title by purchase from the execution debtor, evidence that the execution debtor, who was a witness for plaintiff, before the trial made statements consistent with his testimony, is not admissible either in rebuttal of proof of inconsistent statements, or of evidence of his bad reputation for veracity.—Mason v. Vestal, (Cal.) 26 P. 213.

9. In trover for wood, a conversation in which plaintiff demanded of one of defendants $74 for the wood, adding that if such sum was not paid he would sue, is admissible in evidence, where there is nothing to show that the conversation took place while negotiating for a peaceful settlement, or with a view to compromise.—Swenson v. Kleinschmidt, (Mont.) 26 P. 198.

Opinion evidence.

10. In an action against a city for personal injuries to plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by a defective sidewalk, defendant offered to prove by its street commissioner the customary price in the city of putting down a certain kind of sidewalk, and how much a good workman could put down. Held, that the evidence was properly excluded, as no knowledge of the witness on the subject was shown.—City of Ft. Scott v. Canfield, (Kan.) 26 P. 697.

Documents.

11. The affidavits and declaratory statements of persons who have entered on public lands under the pre-emption laws of the United States, filed in the proper land-office, are conclusive evidence of the existence of all facts necessary to give the right of pre-emption, and under Gen. St. Nev. § 3618, such papers may be proved by copies certified by the register of the land-office.—Peers v. Deluchi, (Nev.) 26 P. 228.

12. In an action of ejectment, a map or diagram of the premises in controversy, made by a competent surveyor who has surveyed the premises, is admissible in evidence as explanatory of the survey.—Rowland v. McCown, (Or.) 26 P. 858.

Parol evidence.

13. Where the contract for the sale of coal is in writing, and mentions the quality of coal sold by name, but nothing therein indicates that a sample was used or referred to, parol evidence is not admissible to show a sale by sample.—Harrison v. McCormick, (Cal.) 26 P. 830.

14. Where in an action on a note it appeared that said note was given in consideration of the balance due upon a prior note, such prior note being collateral to and described in a written agreement on the part of plaintiff to sell defendant certain property therein, and compliance therewith to be deemed full consideration for the note therein set out, oral evidence is inadmissible to show that certain land-warrants, not specified in said agreement, formed part of the consideration of the note in suit. McFarland, J., dissenting.—Langan v. Langan, (Cal.) 26 P. 764.

15. In the absence of fraud or mistake, parol proof of the contents of letters is inadmissible to vary the terms and effect of a mortgage subsequently executed between the parties.—Gage v. Phillips, (Nev.) 26 P. 60.

16. In an action on a promissory note, defendant answered that the note was given as a part of the purchase price of a flock of sheep, and alleged an express warranty of the soundness of the sheep purchased, and set up a counter-claim for damages on account of the breach of the warranty. It appeared that negotiations had been pending for some time between plaintiff and defendant for the purchase of the sheep. The sale was consummated on September 2, 1885, and the notes and a chattel mortgage were executed, but the cash payment of $1,500 was not made until September 14th, when a bill of sale was given which contained no warranty. Held, that it was error to permit defendant to show by oral evidence the representations and statements made previous to the execution of such bill of sale, the presumption of law being that the written instrument contained the whole contract, and it should govern, unless fraud had been alleged and proved.—Willard v. Ostrander, (Kan.) 26 P. 1017.

17. Though the written contract on which plaintiff sues may be lost or otherwise inaccessible to him, so that parol evidence is necessary to prove its contents, evidence of conversations between the parties pending the negotiations which resulted in the contract, which conversations were had before its execution, is incompetent.—Nicholson v. Tarpey, (Cal.) 26 P. 1101.

18. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that one of the parties to a deed, which did not refer to any particular survey, and was unambiguous in its terms, understood its descriptive words to refer to a particular private survey.—Rowland v. McCown, (Or.) 26 P. 853.

Ambiguities.

19. In an action on a promissory note given in settlement of a contract for building a house, a witness for defendant, testifying in explanation of the plans and specifications for the erection of the house under the contract, admitted that he could not tell from them how many gables were contemplated thereby. Held, that the plans and specifications being thus shown to be ambiguous, testimony on the part of the plaintiff explanatory of them, and not by way of contradiction of anything in them, was also admissible.—Coates v. Sulau, (Kan.) 26 P. 726.

Records.

20. Under Hill's Code Or. § 730, which provides that "a judicial record of this state * * * may be proved by production of the original, or by a copy thereof certified by the clerk or other person having legal custody thereof," it is error to admit parol evidence of the existence of a domestic judgment on execution.—Bowick v. Miller, (Or.) 26 P. 861.

Testimony at former trial.

21. The testimony of a witness, since deceased, given at the coroner's inquest, is not admissible in favor of defendant on a trial for an alleged negligent killing, unless it appears that plaintiff had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness; and a recital in the offer of evidence that the respective counsel in this case were present at the inquest is not sufficient to prove that plaintiff had such opportunity, in the absence of a showing in whose behalf, in what capacity, or for what purpose the respective counsel were present.—Jackson v. Crilly, (Colo.) 26 P. 831.

Competency and relevancy.

22. Where, in an action to recover the value of hops sold in November, 1888, there is no issue in the pleadings as to who was the real party in interest, evidence that in December of the same year plaintiff made a bill of sale of the hops to another is irrelevant.—Bump v. Cooper, (Or.) 26 P. 848.

23. Where, in an action to recover a gift as obtained from one non compos mentis, defendant seeks to show that the gift was made by her father because her brother-in-law had previously stolen a large sum of money from him, evidence that a large sum was carried to her father's house is inadmissible without proof of the time it was taken there.—Ellen v. Lewison, (Cal.) 26 P. 109.

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF.

See, also, Appeal; Error, Writ of; New Trial.

Signing, settlement, and filing.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 650, providing that the exceptions taken at the trial, if the action were tried without a jury, must be settled, by the party desiring a bill of exceptions, within 10 days after receiving notice of the entry of judgment, and section 1010, providing that "notices must be in writing," a copy of the findings and judgment, served on the attorneys of the unsuccessful party by the attorneys of the prevailing party, is sufficient notice of the entry of judgment; and a bill of exceptions must be settled within 10 days after the service of such copy, unless the time is extended by order of court. Distinguishing Biagi v. Howes, 66 Cal. 469, 6 P. 100.—Kelleher v. Creciat, (Cal.) 26 P. 619.

2. Where a motion to set aside a verdict and judgment is overruled, and defendant waits for over a month before presenting his bill of exceptions, without asking an extension of time, the judge may refuse to sign the same, since Comp. Laws Utah 1888, § 8395, requires the bill, within 10 days after notice of entry of the judgment, or within such further time as the court may allow, to be presented to the adverse party, who shall have 10 days to propose amendments, 10 days after which it shall be presented to the court for allowance.—Willard City v. Woodland, (Utah,) 26 P. 284.

3. In Colorado, where a trial is had at one term, and final judgment is not entered until a subsequent term, an order fixing the time within which a bill of exceptions may be filed, made at the time of the entry of judgment, is sufficient authority for including in the record the prior proceedings, though the bill of exceptions was not presented at the term at which the trial was had, or any order made at that term extending the time within which it might be presented.—Cowan v. Cowan, (Colo.) 26 P. 984.

4. A trial judge may amend a proposed bill of exceptions to conform to the facts, although the opposite party does not propose amendments.—Hyde v. Boyle, (Cal.) 26 P. 1092.

Signing, settlement, and filing—Power of supreme court.

5. Where the bill of exceptions was allowed after the term, and the record fails to show that time was given under the Wyoming statute providing that time may be given for that purpose, the supreme court cannot review the ruling of the trial court on a motion for new trial.—Roy v. Union Mercantile Co., (Wyo.) 26 P. 996.

6. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 649, which provides that a bill containing the exceptions to any decision may be presented to the court or judge for settlement, and, after having been settled, shall be signed by the judge, and filed with the clerk, the supreme court has no power to strike out part of the bill settled and certified by the trial court.—Hyde v. Boyle, (Cal.) 26 P. 1092.

Excessive Verdict.

EXCHANGE.

Parol evidence.

M., the owner of a tract of land, and C., the owner of a horse, exchanged the one for the other, M. executing to C. a warranty deed for the land, and C. executing to M. an absolute bill of sale for the horse, whereby he agreed to deliver the horse to M. at any time. M. afterwards obtained possession of the horse. Held, that C. could not maintain replevin for the horse on parol evidence that the contract was that he should retain possession of the horse until M. should furnish him an abstract of title for the land.—Cunningham v. Martin, (Kan.) 26 P. 696.

EXECUTION.

See, also, Attachment; Garnishment; Judicial Sales.

Levy.

1. Where an execution is held by the sheriff until after the return-day, and after his term of office has expired, without making a levy thereunder, the writ is functus officio, and an attempted levy and sale afterwards made by virtue of it are nullities.—Faull v. Cooke, (Or.) 26 P. 662.

Claims of third persons.

2. In an action against an officer for the value of property wrongfully levied on, in which plaintiff claims title by purchase from the execution debtor, defendant may show that the alleged sale was fraudulent, without having alleged fraud in his answer.—Mason v. Vestal, (Cal.) 26 P. 213.

Sale.

3. Although an execution, regular upon its face, emanating from a court of competent jurisdiction, will protect an officer who obeys it, a purchaser claiming title under an execution sale must prove the judgment upon which the writ issued.—Faull v. Cooke, (Or.) 26 P. 662.

Sheriff's deed.

4. In Oregon, the sheriff in office at the time a certificate of a sale on execution is produced and a deed demanded thereon is the proper officer to make the deed; not the sheriff who made the sale, and whose term of office has expired.—Faull v. Cooke, (Or.) 26 P. 662.

Relief against injunction.

5. Where defendants consent to waive all defenses, and confess judgment on the strength of a verbal agreement that plaintiffs will stay execution for a year, they cannot enjoin a sale under the execution which plaintiffs levied before the end of the year, being guilty of laches in standing by and permitting the execution to be levied without moving the court to recall it. Affirming Moulton v. Knapp, 85 Cal. 385, 24 P. 803.—Moulton v. Knapp, (Cal.) 26 P. 210.

Appointment.

1. The fact that an executrix claims property as her own, which the other legatees insist belongs to the estate, does not, of itself, show a want of integrity, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1850, providing that no person is competent to serve as an executor who is wanting in integrity.—In re Bauquier's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 178.

2. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1349, provides that the court admitting a will to probate must issue letters thereon to the persons named therein as executors, who are competent, who must appear and qualify, unless objection is made under section 1351, which provides that any person interested may file objections to granting letters testamentary to the persons named as executors, and the objections must be determined by the court. Held, that the objections must show that the applicant for letters is incompetent upon some ground specified in section 1350, which provides that no person is competent to serve as executor who is under the age of majority, convicted of an infamous crime, or adjudged by the court incompetent to execute the duties of the trust by reason of drunkenness, improvidence, or want of understanding or integrity.—In re Bauquier's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 178.

3. The fact that a brother is prejudiced against his sister does not disqualify him to act as administrator of his father's estate.—In re Bauquier's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 873.

4. A husband, who is the sole distributee of his wife, under Civil Code Cal. § 1386, is not disqualified to act as her administrator because he claims the whole estate as a gift from his wife.

under section 1369, providing that no person shall be competent to serve as administrator who shall be adjudged incompetent for want of integrity.—In re Carmody's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 878.

5. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1365, providing that the relatives of a decedent can administer only when they are entitled to succeed to the personal estate or some part of it, and section 1366, subd. 5, providing that the whole estate shall go to the surviving husband or wife if decedent leave neither issue, father, mother, brother, nor sister, letters of administration should not be granted to a wife's nephew when she leaves a husband surviving, but no issue, father, etc.—In re Carmody's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 878.

6. Where legatees file written opposition to the issue of letters testamentary to the person named as executrix in a will, setting forth therein certain facts, which they allege render her incompetent to receive the appointment, and she files a written answer denying such facts, and on the issues thus presented an extended trial is had, in which many witnesses are called, the weight and credibility of whose testimony the court is called upon to determine, this presents issues of fact, which the court, after deciding, is authorized to re-examine on a motion for a new trial, with a right of appeal from its order thereon. Affirming 26 P. 178.—In re Bauquier's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 582; In re Moore's Estate, Id. 787.

Powers.

7. In California an agreement by an executor or administrator to receive in full satisfaction of a judgment in favor of the estate an amount less than that due thereon is void, and hence the debtor's note executed and delivered to him pursuant to such agreement is without consideration.—Siddall v. Clark, (Cal.) 26 P. 829.

Allowance of claims.

8. A claim against an estate stated that the deceased owed the claimant a stated sum for commissions paid on the sale of machines for which uncollectible notes had been taken. Attached to the claim was a contract by which the deceased was to refund commissions paid on uncollectible notes. Held, that the claim was sufficient to invoke the consideration of the probate court, and it was error to sustain a demurrer thereto.—Hayner v. Trot, (Kan.) 26 P. 415.

9. Under Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 2878, providing that "the probate court shall hear and determine all claims in a summary way, without the form of pleading," it is not a proper practice to interpose a demurrer to a claim filed in that court.—Hayner v. Trot, (Kan.) 26 P. 415.

10. Where, after the commencement of an action, defendant died, and his executors being substituted in his place, the supplemental complaint averred that the claim, duly verified, had been presented, the affirmative averment of the answer that the claim was not verified or presented as required by the statute is a sufficient denial.—Derby v. Jackman, (Cal.) 26 P. 610.

11. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1502, providing that, if an action is pending against one at the time of his death, the plaintiff must present his claim to the executor or administrators for allowance or rejection, authenticated as required in other cases, and no recovery shall be had in the action unless proof be made of the presentation required, there cannot be judgment for plaintiff on the pleadings, but the presentation must be proven.—Derby v. Jackman, (Cal.) 26 P. 610.

12. Whether or not physicians' services were rendered during the last sickness of deceased, and so entitled to a preference, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1646, is an immaterial issue in an action brought in the superior court by the physicians against the administrator for such services, as a judgment against the administrator can only have the effect of a claim duly allowed against the estate, and its order of payment must be determined on the marshaling of the assets in the probate court, where all the creditors may be heard.—McLean v. Crow, (Cal.) 26 P. 596.

Settlement and accounting.

13. In an action against the executors of intestate's administrator for his failure to account for a sum received from a certain insurance company on a policy on intestate's life, a finding that he, in his capacity as administrator of intestate's estate, and for the use of the estate, received $2,672.25, the proceeds of said policy, and failed to account with the estate for $2,642.25, a portion of said proceeds, is sufficient.—Curran v. Kennedy, (Cal.) 26 P. 641.

14. In an action against the executors of intestate's administrator for his failure to account for a sum received from a certain insurance company on a policy on intestate's life, conceding that it is a material issue whether the company was ever incorporated or had an existence, a finding that intestate had insured with said company, "a corporation formed by special act of congress of said United States," is sufficient.—Curran v. Kennedy, (Cal.) 26 P. 641.

15. Where a wife, because of separation from her husband, and not of the value of his estate, has been adjudged not entitled to an allowance for her support, she cannot sue to set aside a decree of final distribution discharging the executors, on the ground that property belonging to the estate was fraudulently excluded from the inventory and appraisement, since she is not affected by the decree.—In re Noah's Estate, (Cal.) 26 P. 381.

16. Under Hill's Code Or. §§ 1178, 1180, allowing an executor reasonable attorney's fees in any necessary litigation or matter requiring legal advice, an executor who employs an attorney at $5,000 a year to look after an immense estate greatly involved in litigation, and considered insolvent, should be allowed that sum for attorney's fees, especially where it is shown that the business of the estate occupied nearly the entire time of the attorney while he was employed.—Steel v. Holladay, (Or.) 26 P. 562.

Commissions.

17. Under Hill's Code Or. §§ 1178, 1180, allowing an executor a commission on the whole estate accounted for by him, an executor who, though he is in possession of the estate as receiver at the time of testator's death, never receives it as executor, and never accounts for it as such, is entitled to no commissions.—Steel v. Holladay, (Or.) 26 P. 562.

18. Under Hill's Code Or. §§ 1178, 1180, giving an executor further compensation besides his commission for extraordinary and unusual services, an executor who, as such, neither receives nor accounts for any estate, is not entitled to an allowance for extraordinary services, upon his own testimony that he devoted a great deal of time to the estate, and that his time was worth what he claims.—Steel v. Holladay, (Or.) 26 P. 562.

Sales under order of court.

19. Gen. St. Colo. 1883, § 3577, provides that "whenever, after inventory and appraisement, * * * it shall appear that the personal estate of any decedent is insufficient to discharge his debts, * * * resort may be had to the real estate." Held, that inventory and appraisement are not conditions precedent to the resort to the real estate.—Nichols v. Lee, (Colo.) 26 P. 157.

20. Where the only personal estate left by a wife is $100 in money, appraisement thereof, as required by the laws of Colorado, is not essential to the validity of proceedings to sell her land for the payment of debts.—Nichols v. Lee, (Colo.) 26 P. 157.

21. The purchaser of land inherited by a husband from his wife, under execution against the husband, is not a necessary party to proceedings to sell the land for the payment of the wife's debts.—Nichols v. Lee, (Colo.) 26 P. 157.

Petition.

22. Under Comp. Laws Utah 1876, pp. 265-269, providing that lands of decedents may be sold to pay debts when the personality is insufficient, a petition for sale which merely asks a sale "in order to settle up the business of the estate, to pay certain debts and demands due and owing by said estate," without alleging that the personality is insufficient, does not confer jurisdiction upon the court, and an order of sale based thereon is void.—Needham v. Salt Lake City, (Utah,) 26 P. 920.

Actions by and against.

23. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 1589, 1590, which direct the administrator, on the application of creditors of the decedent, to sue for the purpose of setting aside fraudulent conveyances made by the decedent in his life-time, only such creditors whose claims have been allowed by the administrator, or who have established them by judgment, can compel the administrator to bring the action.—Ohm v. Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, (Cal.) 26 P. 244.

24. In Oregon, in an action against an administrator, a denial of "any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief" as to certain material facts alleged is a good denial, and creates an issue to be tried.—Colburn v. Barrett, (Or.) 26 P. 1008.

25. A finding that on a certain day letters of administration of intestate's estate were issued by a certain court to "plaintiff herein, that said letters have not since been revoked," is sufficient on the issue that an order of said court was duly given, made, and entered, appointing plaintiff administrator of said estate.—Curran v. Kennedy, (Cal.) 26 P. 641.

Action by creditor in name of administrator.

26. A creditor of an estate may bring an action in his own name to set aside a conveyance made by the decedent in his life-time in fraud of creditors, or the administrator may be compelled to bring the action in a proper case; and an order of the superior court, directing a creditor to commence and prosecute the action in the name of the administrator, will be annulled on a writ of review brought for that purpose.—Ohm v. Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, (Cal.) 26 P. 244.

Foreign executors.

27. The fact that an executor was appointed in a foreign jurisdiction does not affect his relation to the estate as trustee; for though he could not by virtue of such appointment enforce the collection, in another jurisdiction, of the assets belonging to it, yet, where they come into his hands by voluntary payment, they are received in his capacity as trustee, and that relationship is not altered by his giving his own note and mortgage for the amount. Affirming 24 P. 855.—Fox v. Tay, (Cal.) 26 P. 897.

— Actions by.

28. Co-executors appointed in a foreign jurisdiction, to whom a note and mortgage were given as trustees, by an executor who had received the assets of the estate, can prosecute an action in that capacity to foreclose the mortgage without taking out ancillary letters of administration. Affirming 24 P. 855.—Fox v. Tay, (Cal.) 26 P. 897.

Exemplary Damages.

See Damages, 1-3.

EXEMPTIONS.

What is exempt.

1. After an assignment by a debtor, whose principal business had been that of a hardware and agricultural implement dealer, and who was not at that time a practical tinner, he used tinner's tools which had belonged to his previous business in carrying on the trade of a tinner, which thereafter was his sole work, and the proceeds thereof were his sole means of support. Held, that he was entitled to hold such tinner's tools and materials necessary to carry on the trade, as exempt from execution, under the Kansas exemption law, § 3, subd. 8.—Miller v. Weeks, (Kan.) 26 P. 694.

Amount of exemptions.

2. A debtor earned $3 a day during the month of March, of which he deposited in bank $75. On April 16th, the bank was garnished, and there was then to his credit $48.41, a balance of the $75 deposited. Held, that the debtor was entitled to $45 of this balance earned during the last 15 days of March as exempt under Sess. Laws Colo. p. 262, providing that "there shall be exempt from levy * * * the wages and earnings of any debtor to an amount not exceeding $100 during the 30 days next proceeding such levy.—Rutten v. Shumway, (Colo.) 26 P. 321.

Express Trusts.

See Trusts, 1.

EXTRADITION.

Interstate—Affidavit.

An affidavit accompanying a requisition, which merely states that affiant "has reason to believe and does believe" that petitioner embezzled or fraudulently converted to his own use the property mentioned, is insufficient for the governor's warrant of arrest as a fugitive from justice, in that it is not positive in its charge. PATERSON, J., dissenting.—Ex parte Spears, (Cal.) 26 P. 608.

FACTORS AND BROKERS.

See, also, Principal and Agent.

Right to commissions.

1. Where the owner enters into a contract authorizing a real-estate agent to sell his land on commission, within a certain time, he cannot revoke the authority, and escape liability to the agent, if he secures a purchaser before the time limited, as the result of efforts commenced before such revocation. Reversing 25 P. 181. McFARLAND, PATERSON, and SHARPSTEIN, JJ., dissenting.—Blumenthal v. Goodall, (Cal.) 26 P. 906.

2. The owner of land agreed that, if a real-estate agent would sell it for him, he would pay $250 for the agent's services in making the sale. A purchaser was found, and the agent prepared a written contract, which was signed by the owner, but, by an oversight, the purchaser did not sign it. Five hundred dollars was paid and accepted by the owner, and, when the abstract was delivered, the purchaser refused to complete the purchase, because he was not satisfied with the title. Held, that the agent was entitled to his commission.—Kyle v. Rippey, (Or.) 26 P. 306.

3. An agent to sell land found a purchaser who contracted with the owner that, in case the purchaser failed to make any payment as specified, the owner could declare the contract forfeited and retain any purchase money already paid. Default was made in the second payment, and the owner declared a forfeiture. Held that, if the purchaser was solvent and able to pay, the agent was entitled to his commission.—Betz v. Williams & White Land & Loan Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 456.

Lien for advances—Pledge by factor.

4. A factor or commission merchant, who receives goods to be sold upon commission, has no authority to pledge them; but, where he has advanced money upon the goods, he thereby acquires a lien upon and special property in them to the amount of such advances, which he may pledge for his own use.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Pope, (Or.) 26 P. 622.

FALSE PRETENSES.

See, also, Decett; Fraudulent Conveyances.

What constitutes offense.

The accused borrowed $5,600, giving a note with two indorsers, and a chattel mortgage on cattle, part of which he did not own. He owed one of the indorsers $3,100, which was paid out of the money borrowed. The lender sold the cattle owned by the accused, and this left a balance unpaid on the loan of $1,891. The indorsers were solvent. Held that, though the accused had falsely represented that he owned all the cattle, the evidence did not justify a conviction for obtaining money under false pretenses.—State v. Clark, (Kan.) 26 P. 491.

FINES.Imprisonment in default of payment.

Pen. Code Cal. § 1446, providing for imprisonment in default of payment of a fine, does not conflict with the act of March 18, 1885, establishing police courts, and a person convicted in such courts may be committed to the city jail in default of such payment.—Ex parte Halstead, (Cal.) 26 P. 961; In re Montijo, Id.

Fires.

Set by locomotive, see Railroad Companies, 21, 22.

FIXTURES.As between mortgagor and mortgagee.

As between mortgagor and mortgagee, machinery necessary for, and used in the operation of, a sash and door and planing mill, when affixed to the building by screws, bolts, pulleys, and bands, is a part of the realty, and subject to the mortgage lien.—Helms v. Gilroy, (Or.) 26 P. 851.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.Pleading—Variance.

Where the petition in forcible entry and detainer asks the recovery of possession of a whole quarter section, and the proof shows plaintiff to be in possession of a very small part of it, the variance is immaterial.—Seeley v. Adamson, (Okla.) 26 P. 1069.

Foreclosure.

FORGERY.What constitutes offense.

Where one presents a pretended claim against a county, and, with intent to defraud, procures its officers to issue to him a county warrant, he is not guilty of an offense under Crimes Act Kan. § 115, declaring it forgery to falsely make, alter, or forge, or to cause to be falsely made, altered, or forged, any county warrants.—State v. Corfield, (Kan.) 26 P. 498.

Fraud.

See Decett; False Pretenses; Fraudulent Conveyances.

As ground for attachment, see Attachment, 5.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.Promise to answer for debt of another.

1. Plaintiffs having a claim against C., under an agreement for their services in selling lands, the greater part of which had been rendered, defendant orally promised them to pay the debt; but they did not discharge C. therefrom, and sued him, and attempted to attach funds in bank which they supposed belonged to him, and did not attempt to enforce defendant's promise until their proceedings against C. had failed. There was no antecedent obligation on the part of defendant, and no special benefit to him as a new consideration. Held, that his promise was merely collateral, and not binding, under the statute of frauds.—Brant v. Johnson, (Kan.) 26 P. 735.

2. M. wanted to buy on credit from the plaintiff, and asked the defendant if he would become responsible for some goods for him. The defendant said he would. The plaintiff then asked if he should let M. have $50 worth. The defendant said: "Yes; but I want some time on it, until the money will be coming to M. from me." The defendant said he wanted 90 days, and the goods were delivered and charged to M. Held, that it was for the jury to say whether the defendant's promise was original or collateral.—Calahan v. Ward, (Kan.) 26 P. 53.

3. Where a purchaser of land accepts a conveyance reciting that there is a mortgage on the land which he assumes, his promise to pay the debt is not a special promise to answer for the debt of another.—Neiswanger v. McClellan, (Kan.) 26 P. 18.

4. A letter of instructions written by agents of defendant to a bank, also acting as agent for him, authorizing the bank to pay a certain claim, the debt of another, which defendant had promised to pay, is not a sufficient promise in writing to pay such debt to satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds.—Brant v. Johnson, (Kan.) 26 P. 735.

Agreements relating to land.

5. A verbal contract by an agent for the sale of lands whenever the owner shall perfect his title thereto is invalid under the statute of frauds. Civil Code Cal. § 1624.—Hall v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 860.

6. A contract for the sale of lands, made by an agent having no authority in writing, is invalid under the statute of frauds. Id. § 1624, subd. 5.—Hall v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 860.

7. Where plaintiff had the right to flow water into Baldock slough, and defendants, wishing to fill up a part of said slough, agreed with him that if he would abandon said slough and the right to flow water therein the defendants would give him the right of way on a section line through their land, and the defendants then caused said line to be surveyed and the line of said ditch marked with stakes, and the plaintiff accepted said offer, and dug his ditch on the line marked by the defendants for that purpose, and abandoned the slough, which is filled up by the defendants, and the plaintiff continuously uses said new ditch for many years, the same amounts to an exchange of the plaintiff's rights to flow water through the slough for the right of way on the section line, and said contract, though existing in parol, being executed by both parties, is taken out of the operation of the statute of frauds.—Baldock v. Atwood, (Or.) 26 P. 1053.

8. Where one orally agreed to convey property, and made a deed, which was not delivered, such deed cannot be treated as a memorandum of the agreement, in the absence of evidence showing that it contained the terms thereof.—Swain v. Burnette, (Cal.) 26 P. 1093.

Sufficiency of memorandum.

9. A written memorandum of a contract, whereby defendant agrees to sell plaintiff certain real and personal property, which names the parties and price, and gives a complete description of the property, and is signed by the defendant, who is the party to be charged, is not insufficient because it is not also signed by the plaintiff.—Cavanaugh v. Casselman, (Cal.) 26 P. 515.

10. Nor will the fact that the instrument is expressed on its face to be inter partes, and yet is only signed by the party to be charged, render it insufficient as being merely an inchoate agreement, incapable of enforcement, in the absence of any showing that it was to be signed by the other party before it became operative.—Cavanaugh v. Casselman, (Cal.) 26 P. 515.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

What constitutes.

1. A conveyance of land by an insolvent debtor to his attorney to pay for services to be rendered for him and for other persons with whom he has business relations, for two years in the future, and with the provision that any fees allowed to the attorney by the courts in such future litigation should be returned, is fraudulent as against existing creditors.—Winfield Nat. Bank v. Croco, (Kan.) 26 P. 942; Fuller v. Same, Id. 944.

—Preferring creditors.

2. In Washington, a debtor, though in failing circumstances, may in good faith mortgage all of his property to secure one or more of his creditors, leaving other debts unsatisfied.—Turner v. Iowa Nat. Bank, (Wash.) 26 P. 256.

3. A transfer of property at its fair price by an insolvent debtor to his wife in payment of a bona fide debt to her is valid, since a debtor may lawfully prefer one creditor to another.—Winfield Nat. Bank v. Croco, (Kan.) 26 P. 942; Fuller v. Same, Id. 944.

4. A chattel mortgage duly executed by the individuals composing a partnership to the wife of one of the copartners, to secure a bona fide existing indebtedness from them to her, they having a legal right to prefer her as a creditor, may be valid as against their other creditors, notwithstanding they have been sued, and creditors are about to levy upon the firm property.—Berkley v. Tootle, (Kan.) 26 P. 730.

—Confidential relations.

5. In replevin against a sheriff for goods taken by him under execution, claimed by plaintiffs by virtue of a chattel mortgage to them by the execution debtors, it appeared that the mortgagors were brothers-in-law of one of the mortgagees, who were partners; that other mortgages between the same parties were also executed to secure the same indebtedness; that a mortgage by the same mortgagors to secure the mortgagee, who was their brother-in-law, as a surety, had been paid, but not released; and that the mortgagees had traded off the goods mortgaged for a farm worth about $4,000; but it also appeared that the chattel mortgage in question was given to secure payment of a bona fide indebtedness; that all the mortgages given to secure that indebtedness were not excessive in value, and that the amount of the indebtedness was not exaggerated. Held, that as the debtors, although insolvent at the time of the execution of the mortgage, had the right to prefer the mortgagees as creditors, if this was done in good faith, the chattel mortgage could not be defeated or set aside, no bad faith in the transactions being shown by the evidence.—Bliss v. Couch, (Kan.) 26 P. 706.

6. A conveyance of real estate by a father to a minor son, for the son's services during his minority, is a voluntary conveyance, without legal consideration, and therefore void as to the creditors of the parent, if made when the latter had no other property subject to execution.—Stumbaugh v. Anderson, (Kan.) 26 P. 1045.

What constitutes—Change of possession.

7. Though Civil Code Cal. § 3440, declares that transfers of personal property are conclusively presumed to be fraudulent where they are "not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred," it is a question for the court what constitutes immediate delivery and continued change of possession, and its finding thereon, upon conflicting evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.—Claudius v. Aguirre, (Cal.) 26 P. 1077.

—Knowledge of grantee.

8. It is proper to refuse to instruct the jury that, from the fact of the intimacy of an insolvent debtor and his preferred creditor, they may infer that the creditor knew of the debtor's condition.—Johnson v. Jones, (Colo.) 26 P. 584.

Actions to set aside.

9. Where an assignee for the benefit of creditors fails for nearly 10 years to attack a conveyance made by the assignor just prior to the assignment, during which time there was litigation concerning the land conveyed between an attaching creditor of the assignor and his grantee, which finally resulted in the attaching creditor's securing by compromise the title of the grantee, the claim of the assignee is stale, and the conveyance by the assignor will not be set aside as fraudulent.—Neppach v. Jones, (Or.) 26 P. 569; Id. 849.

Pleading.

10. In an action by an administrator under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1589, to recover property fraudulently conveyed by his intestate in his life-time, the fraudulent intent of the grantor must be alleged in the complaint, and it will not be inferred from the facts set out therein that the conveyance was voluntary, and that intestate was insolvent. BEATTY, C. J., dissenting.—Threlkel v. Scott, (Cal.) 26 P. 879.

11. In an action against an officer for goods seized under an attachment against a third person, where the answer alleges that the goods were the property of such third person, and had been fraudulently transferred to plaintiff in order to hinder and cheat his creditors, and that the transfer was fraudulent and simulated, such answer, being replied to, is sufficient to put the fraud in issue, and evidence tending to prove it is admissible.—Solomon v. Smith, (Colo.) 26 P. 811; Id. 812.

Evidence.

12. Where a chattel mortgagee promised the mortgagor that he would not disclose the existence of the mortgage to other creditors who were demanding payment or security for their claims, and failed to have the mortgage recorded for 43 days, or to disclose its existence to other creditors when the financial condition of the mortgagor was being discussed, it is evidence of a fraudulent intent to hinder and delay creditors.—Wafer v. Harvey County Bank, (Kan.) 26 P. 1082.

13. In an action by creditors to set aside fraudulent conveyances it appeared that when M.'s creditors were pressing her, her husband brought one S., to whom M. transferred all her property, reciting a consideration of $38,000, but the consideration claimed to have been paid by S. was his debt, $30,000, and other debts of M. to third persons, and $10,000 cash, actually paid, amounting together to $39,000. The property was worth $20,000 more. Shortly before the transfer S. had represented to some of M.'s creditors that she was perfectly solvent. After the transfer M.'s husband remained in possession, ostensibly as S.'s agent, and continued to dispose of the stock on hand, allowing some of M.'s creditors to purchase on their debts against her; and it was not shown that he accounted to S. Afterwards M. took possession. Only one of the new books alleged to have been opened after the transfer was produced, and it seemed to have been gotten up as an after-thought. The other books were claimed to have been lost. S. was a business man of large interests, and required his other agents to keep books. Held, that the transfer was fraudulent and void.—Banner v. May, (Wash.) 26 P. 248.

Findings.

14. Civil Code Cal. § 3439, provides that "every transfer of property * * * made * * * with intent to delay or defraud any creditor * * * is void." Section 3443 provides that in all cases arising under this section "the question of fraudulent intent is one of fact and not of law," and that no transfer shall be adjudged fraudulent solely on the ground that it was not made for a valuable consideration. Held that, in an action to set aside a conveyance, although a court has found that it was made without consideration by an insolvent debtor, and that his creditor was thereby defrauded, a failure to also find a fraudulent "intent" is fatal.—Bull v. Bray, (Cal.) 26 P. 873.

GAMING.

What constitutes offense.

1. A person who bets money at a game of faro dealt by another, "plays" faro within the meaning of Hill's Code Or. § 3526, providing a punishment for each person who shall "deal, play, or carry on" a faro game.—State v. McDaniel, (Or.) 26 P. 837.

Gambling contracts.

2. Const. Cal. art. 4, § 26, providing that "all contracts for the sale of shares of the capital stock of any corporation or association, on margin or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void, and any money paid on such contracts may be recovered," applies to a transaction wherein a broker purchases stock for a customer with his own money, charging only commissions and interest thereon, and retaining the stock as security until its sale, the customer putting up only a certain margin, and receiving the profit or paying the loss.—Cashman v. Root, (Cal.) 26 P. 883.

GARNISHMENT.

Persons and property subject to.

1. Though money belonging to an estate in bankruptcy, in the hands of the clerk of the court as a master in chancery, to be held pending the settlement of the respective rights of the creditors by litigation, is in the custody of the court, and cannot be reached by garnishment, yet, where an order of distribution has been made, the rights of the respective creditors become in effect a debt due to each of them by the clerk, and a creditor of one of the creditors may levy upon it by garnishment.—Dunsmoor v. Furstenfeldt, (Cal.) 26 P. 518.

2. Under Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 189, providing that all persons having possession or control of credits or property of defendant, or owing him, shall be liable as garnishees, etc., and Gen. Laws Mont. § 202, providing that the word "person" may extend to bodies politic and corporate, a county may be garnished for debts owed by it to one of its officers.—Waterbury v. Board Com'rs Deer Lodge County, (Mont.) 26 P. 1002.

3. Such construction of the statutes is not contrary to public policy, as tending to impede the exercise of its functions, and to impair the usefulness of its servants.—Waterbury v. Board Com'rs Deer Lodge County, (Mont.) 26 P. 1002.

Service of process.

4. Service on a garnishee of a copy of the writ of attachment and notice not to pay over any money in his hands to defendant was attacked by defendant, and was by the trial court held sufficient to require the garnishee to answer, and the garnishee answered under the order of the court. Held, that such service, not being void, could not be attacked in a collateral proceeding. Explaining 26 P. 582.—Axman v. Dueker, (Kan.) 26 P. 946.

Claims of third persons.

5. Where an intervenor claims the garnished fund by assignment from the debtor, and it appears by the assignment that it was not absolute, but only as security for what indebtedness the assignor might incur to the assignee, judgment should be given for the intervenor for only so much of the fund as is necessary to satisfy his debt, and for plaintiff for the balance.—Whalen v. McMahon, (Colo.) 26 P. 583.

GRAND JURY.

Challenges calling defendant before grand jury.

1. Rev. St. Idaho, § 7730, provides that the indictment must be set aside (clause 3) "where the defendant had not been held to answer before indictment, on any ground which would have been good ground for challenge either to the array or to any individual grand juror;" and (clause 4) "if any person is permitted to be present during the sessions of the grand jury and when the charge embraced in the indictment is under consideration," except the prosecuting attorney, the witnesses under examination, and an interpreter when necessary. In a case where the defendant had not been held to answer, it appeared that there was good ground for challenge against three of the grand jurors who were present when the witnesses were examined, but it was not shown that they were present during the deliberations, nor when the vote was taken. Held, that there was no evidence of any violation of the statute to which the accused could object, and that clause 4 has no reference to members of the grand jury, and when a challenge to a grand jury is allowed he is liable for contempt if present during the consideration of the charge as to which he was challenged, but the indictment will not be set aside for that cause.—Territory v. Staples, (Idaho,) 26 P. 166.

2. A discharged grand jury cannot be summoned into court on trial of an indictment, and challenged and examined on their voir dire, on the ground that defendant was not called to answer before them when the indictment was found, and given an opportunity to challenge them.—People v. Travers, (Cal.) 26 P. 88.

3. Where defendant is not called to answer before a grand jury when the indictment is found, he has a remedy under Pen. Code Cal. § 996, which provides that an indictment may be set aside, when defendant was not called to answer when it was found, "on any ground which would have been good ground for challenge;" but the fact that he had ground for challenge must be shown either by examination of the jurors as witnesses or by other competent evidence.—People v. Travers, (Cal.) 26 P. 88.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Issuance.

1. Under Rev. St. Wyo. § 1269, which provides that the court may refuse to issue the writ of habeas corpus if, from the showing of the petitioner, he is not entitled to any relief, the writ will not issue in the first instance as of course, but the petitioner must make out a prima facie case for its issuance.—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

Hearing and determination.

2. In proceedings upon habeas corpus, the court will not determine that the document under which the petitioner is detained, and which is certified by the clerk to be a true and correct copy of the judgment "entered" on the minutes of the court, is to be disregarded on the production of another document, certified by the same officer to be a correct copy of the entry of judgment "filed" in the clerk's office.—Ex parte Williams, (Cal.) 26 P. 887.

3. In habeas corpus, where the evidence certified by the committing magistrate fails to show the venue, the commitment is fatally defective; and where the application is to the supreme court, and the expense of supplying such evidence there-in would be burdensome to the parties, the prisoner will be discharged. GROESBECK, C. J., dissenting.—Ex parte Brenner, (Wyo.) 26 P. 993.

4. On petition for habeas corpus by one convicted of a felony, for the purpose of ordering that he be admitted to bail, the supreme court will pass on the merits of the petition irrespective of an inflexible rule not to admit any person convicted of a felony to bail, adopted by the trial court, in whose discretion the allowance of bail is placed by Pen. Code Cal. § 1272.—Ex parte Smith, (Cal.) 26 P. 688.

5. On such petition the supreme court will not pass on errors of law committed on trial in which conviction was had.—Ex parte Smith, (Cal.) 26 P. 688.

Impeachment of record.

6. The record in a contempt proceeding imports absolute verity, and cannot be questioned on habeas corpus to release the prisoner.—Ex parte Bergman, (Wyo.) 26 P. 914.

HIGHWAYS

Construction, special legislation, see Constitutional Law, 11.

Establishment, rights of railroad companies, see Railroad Companies, 1, 2.

Dedication.

1. A dedication to the county by the land-owners on each side of land sufficient for the purposes of a road, and an acceptance thereof by the board of county commissioners, accompanied by their declaration that the land dedicated shall constitute a county road, is in disregard of the proceedings prescribed by statute concerning roads and highways, and does not make the strip of land dedicated a county road, or a regularly laid out road. Oliphant v. Commissioners, 18 Kan. 886, cited and followed.—Barker v. Hovey, (Kan.) 26 P. 585; Id. 591.

2. A street railroad company opened up and graded a right of way through private property within the limits of a city. The property on either side was then platted as additions to the city and dedication made of sufficient ground on either side of the right of way to make a road-way 80 feet wide almost continuously. The railroad company, and all the property owners acquiesced in its use and occupation by the city as a street. The city built sidewalks and extended its water-mains, and all parties stood by without objection while the city curbed and paved the road-way. Held, that a special assessment for its paving could not be resisted on the ground that the road-way was not a street.—Hammerslough v. City of Kansas City, (Kan.) 26 P. 496.

Establishment by statutory proceedings.

3. The board of county commissioners having appointed viewers, approved their report locating a road, and ordered it opened on a petition purporting to have been signed by more than 12 householders, the proceedings are valid, though the board made no express finding that the petitioners were householders.—Schade v. Theel, (Kan.) 26 P. 88.

Proceedings for improvement.

4. Under Laws Kan. 1887, c. 214, for the improvement of county roads, requiring the petition for such an improvement to be signed by a majority of the resident land-holders within the termini mentioned, a land-holder who signs such a petition is not estopped thereby from asserting a jurisdictional defect for lack of sufficient signatures.—Stewart v. Hovey, (Kan.) 26 P. 683.

5. A tax-payer is not estopped from asserting a jurisdictional defect in proceedings for the improvement of a highway when he had no knowledge of the defect at the time the proceedings were instituted, nor until after the improvement had been completed.—Barker v. Hovey, (Kan.) 23 P. 585; Id. 591; Hovey v. Barker, Id. 595.

Power of county commissioners.

6. The board of county commissioners have no power to declare by resolution a strip of ground laid out and intended for a street or road through land platted into blocks and lots to be a county road.—Barker v. Hovey, (Kan.) 26 P. 585; Id. 591.

7. Under Laws Kan. 1887, c. 214, entitled "An act providing for the improvement of county roads," and which provides in its first section for the improvement of "any regularly laid out road," the county board have no power to order the improvement of a strip of ground laid out and intended as a street through land platted into blocks and lots, that had never been used or traveled as a road, and that never had been regularly laid out as a road in accordance with the provisions of the general road law.—Barker v. Hovey, (Kan.) 26 P. 585; Id. 591.

8. Under Laws Kan. 1887, c. 214, entitled "An act providing for the improvement of county roads," the county board have no power to order a regularly laid out road to be improved to a greater width than that established by the proceedings under the general road law, by which the road in question was laid out and opened.—Barker v. Hovey, (Kan.) 26 P. 585; Id. 591.

9. Under such act, the board of county commissioners have no power to order or contract for sidewalks 14 feet wide on each side to be built along a regularly laid out county road.—Barker v. Hovey, (Kan.) 26 P. 585; Id. 591.

10. Under Laws Kan. 1887, c. 214, entitled "An act providing for the improvement of county roads," and providing that, whenever a majority of the resident land-holders within one-half mile on either side along the line of any regularly laid-out road within the terminal points mentioned in the petition shall petition the board of county commissioners to improve any road as located, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause the same to be improved, the commissioners have no jurisdiction to order such an improvement unless the petition therefor is signed by a majority of the resident land-holders.—Hovey v. Barker, (Kan.) 26 P. 591; Id. 595.

Abandonment.

11. Under Pol. Code Cal. § 2643, subd. 3, providing that the board or supervisors must, "by proper ordinance," abolish such roads as are not necessary, and sections 2619, 2621, providing that roads may be abandoned by "order" of the board, a road may be abandoned by order, as the words "proper ordinance" require nothing more than a proper order.—Keena v. Board Sup'rs of Placer County, (Cal.) 26 P. 615.

Obstruction.

12. In establishing highways, the jurisdiction of the county court is special and limited, and, if the jurisdictional facts do not appear on its face, the record is not admissible in a prosecution against the owner of the adjoining land for obstructing the highway; and, on appeal, a finding of the trial court that the highway was duly laid out and established, will be disregarded, the evidence having been preserved, and an exception taken to the finding, on the ground that there was no evidence to sustain it.—State v. Myer, (Or.) 26 P. 307.

HOMESTEAD.

Nature and extent of right.

1. Ditches dug mainly through a homestead, and used to irrigate the land, without which the land would be of but little value, and could probably never have been used as a homestead, must be treated, with the water in them, as a part of the land, and not severable from the homestead, and therefore are not liable to be sold for debts contracted before the issue of the patent for such homestead.—Faull v. Cooke, (Or.) 26 P. 663.

Rights of widow.

2. Gen. St. Kan. 1889, § 2593, provides that the homestead occupied by the intestate and his family, "and continued to be so occupied by his widow and children after his death," shall be wholly exempt from distribution, and from the payment of debts, and shall be the absolute property of the widow and children. Section 2596 provides that, if the widow again marry, the homestead shall be divided one-half in value to the widow and one-half to the children. Held, that, if the widow remarries and continues to reside on the homestead, it remains exempt from the payment of debts, and the exemption continues after a partition between the widow and children.—Brady v. Banta, (Kan.) 26 P. 441.

HOMICIDE.Murder.

1. On a trial for murder, the principal witness was an accomplice, who had told a number of conflicting stories, sometimes taking the murder entirely upon himself, and at other times charging it upon others. He admitted numerous falsehoods, and testified that defendant committed the murder, and that he himself had no previous knowledge that murder was intended. The only corroborating evidence was that defendant, when intoxicated, had mentioned "that poor woman," and had called her name, and said that he "might kill a man, but couldn't kill a woman," with other kindred expressions. Held, that a conviction could not be sustained. Scott, J., dissenting.—Edwards v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 253.

2. On a trial for murder, the principal witness was an accomplice, who had told a number of conflicting stories, sometimes taking the murder entirely upon himself, and sometimes charging it upon others. He admitted numerous falsehoods, and testified that defendant, who was his father, had participated in the murder; and that he himself had no previous knowledge that murder was intended. In corroboration it was shown that defendant, when solicited, had indignantly refused to subscribe money to investigate the murder, saying that he was blamed for it; that he was much agitated by the arrest of his son; that he told him not to talk to any one, but when the case came to trial to tell the truth about how the man and woman went out in a boat, and were drowned; and he gave as a reason for so much shooting that his son had been hunting, but that he did not want anything said about it. Defendant testified that he said the latter incident occurred months before the murder, and was corroborated in this by his son. Several testified that defendant was at home sick on the day of the murder. Held not sufficient to sustain a conviction. Scott, J., dissenting.—Rose v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 261.

3. An instruction that if defendant killed deceased in resisting an attempt on the part of deceased to "murder" defendant, or an attempt to do defendant great bodily harm, then the killing was justifiable, is not fatally erroneous, as it does not tend to lead the jury to understand that an attempt to kill defendant not constituting murder would not justify the killing by defendant.—People v. Brugg, (Cal.) 26 P. 756.

4. An instruction that if defendant drew his pistol with a deliberate intent to kill deceased, and that deceased saw the pistol, and, believing himself in danger of defendant, ran away, and that defendant, with intent to willfully and deliberately kill deceased, followed for the purpose of overtaking or meeting and killing him, and did meet him, unarmed, and showing no disposition to kill defendant, and defendant then and there, without believing himself in danger of losing his own life, fired, and killed deceased, then the evidence showed no self-defense, cannot be objected to on the ground that it omits the hypothesis of defendant's being in danger, or believing himself in danger, of receiving great bodily harm. PATTERSON, J., dissenting.—People v. Brugg, (Cal.) 26 P. 756.

Assault with intent to kill.

5. When a defendant was charged with an assault with a deadly weapon (a pistol) with intent to kill, under Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 2159, it was error to instruct the jury that he might be convicted of an assault with intent to commit manslaughter, when the evidence tended to show that he shot the pistol into the ground with no intent to harm any one, no one in fact being hurt or harmed.—State v. Moran, (Kan.) 26 P. 554.

6. On a trial for assault with a deadly weapon, an instruction that if the jury find that defendant did make an assault with a knife, which was a deadly weapon, and not in necessary self-defense, it is their duty to find him guilty, but if they find that he made the assault in necessary self-defense, in order to prevent D. O. from committing a violent assault upon him, then he is not guilty, does not exclude the consideration of apparent necessity.—People v. Dollar, (Cal.) 26 P. 1086.

Indictment and information.

7. Under Hill's Code Or. § 1740, making it a felony to "assault another with intent to kill," the intent may be charged by averring that the assault was made "with intent him, the said B., then and there to kill and murder."—State v. Lynch, (Or.) 26 P. 219.

8. An information charging that defendant did kill and murder "one James Collins" sufficiently charges that defendant murdered a human being.—People v. McNulty, (Cal.) 26 P. 597.

Insanity as a defense.

9. Insanity, as a defense to a charge of murder, must be established by a preponderance of evidence. Following People v. Travers, (Cal.) 26 P. 88.—People v. McNulty, (Cal.) 26 P. 597.

10. On indictment for murder the burden of showing insanity, relied on as a defense, is on defendant.—People v. Travers, (Cal.) 26 P. 88.

11. To constitute insanity caused by intoxication a defense to an indictment for murder, it must be settled insanity, and not a mere temporary mental condition.—People v. Travers, (Cal.) 26 P. 88.

Evidence.

12. On indictment of an employe in a low theater, resorted to by immoral women, for murder, the admission of evidence that defendant had solicited a woman inmate to live with him is prejudicial error.—People v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 650.

13. On an indictment for assault with a deadly weapon, while it is competent, as showing the present relation between the parties, to show by the prosecuting witness that he has since the assault instituted proceedings against defendant for a breach of the peace, it is error to allow him to testify further that these proceedings were based on an unprovoked attack on him by plaintiff since the original assault.—People v. Webster, (Cal.) 26 P. 1080.

14. On indictment for murder, a witness can not testify that when the shot was fired, killing deceased, a third person, shown to have shortly before conversed with defendant, exclaimed that he would bet defendant killed deceased; nor can he testify to the fact that a remark was made without giving its substance,—the evidence being mere hearsay.—People v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 650.

Instructions.

15. On trial for assault with intent to murder it is error for the court to charge: "Upon a trial for an assault to commit murder, the assault and the intent being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse therefor devolves upon accused, unless the proof upon the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounted to an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict * * * bodily injury, * * * or that defendant was justified or excused," as such instruction is contradictory and meaningless.—People v. Gordon, (Cal.) 26 P. 502.

16. Where, on a trial for assault with intent to kill, there is a conflict in the evidence as to how the difficulty started, it is error for the court to charge that the prosecuting witness testified, in substance, "that defendant came up and addressed him in a sharp tone, and immediately made a demonstration to draw a pistol on him. * * * Other witnesses corroborated in whole or in part that portion of the prosecutor's statement of the transaction after the conflict had commenced,"—since such charge is one as to matters of fact, which is prohibited by the constitution of the state.—People v. Gordon, (Cal.) 26 P. 502.

Judgment.

17. A judgment stating that defendant has been convicted of the "murder" of deceased is sufficient, though it does not show that it was murder in the first degree.—People v. McNulty, (Cal.) 26 P. 597.

Appeal.

18. On appeal from a sentence of death, the supreme court will consider questions raised for the first time in a petition for rehearing.—People v. Bruggy, (Cal.) 26 P. 965.

HORSE AND STREET RAILROADS.

Power of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain, 1-8.

Power of city to grant franchise.

1. Act Cong. July 30, 1886, providing that territorial legislatures shall not pass local or special laws in certain cases, among them, "granting to any corporation, association, or individual the right to lay down railroad tracks," and "granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise," does not prevent a city from granting to a corporation, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, the right to lay down railway tracks in its streets, under general laws of the territorial legislature.—Henderson v. Ogden City Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 286.

2. Such privilege may be granted to individuals as well as to corporations.—Henderson v. Ogden City Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 286.

3. A grant to a street-railway company of the exclusive right to use the streets of a city is ultra vires, and cannot prevent the city authorities, in the exercise of the police power, when the public interest demands it, from granting another corporation or individual the right to use the same streets for a similar purpose.—Henderson v. Ogden City Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 286.

Conflicting rights of companies.

4. A city granted plaintiff railway company the right to lay a double track in a street, and afterwards granted defendants the right to lay a double track electric railway in the same street. Before defendants commenced work, plaintiff sued to enjoin them from laying their tracks, and to have the ordinance giving them a right of way declared void, alleging that it (plaintiff) had constructed a single track, and that, if it were to lay down its other track, and defendants their two tracks, other modes of public travel would be obstructed, and also that defendants' poles and wires would interfere with plaintiff's rights as the owner of property abutting on the street. Held, that a demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained.—Ogden City Ry. Co. v. Ogden City, (Utah,) 26 P. 288.

Liability for changing grade of street.

5. A city established the grade of a street, and authorized a street railway company to construct its road thereon. In bringing the street to grade the company made a deep cut in front of plaintiff's property. Under Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 563, a city may establish the grade of its streets, and it is only when an established grade is changed that damages can be allowed to property owners. Held, that the company was not liable for damages resulting from the change of grade, nor for the failure of the city to bring to grade that part of the street not occupied by the company.—Interstate Consolidated Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. Early, (Kan.) 26 P. 432.

Property rights and liabilities.

1. In an action against a wife for the price of lumber alleged to have been furnished her through her husband as agent, the evidence showed that the husband had for a number of years lived on his wife's land, using it in his own business, and for his own profit; and that the lumber was purchased by him with his wife's knowledge, and used in erecting buildings on the land for use in his business. There was some circumstantial evidence tending to show precedent authorization of the husband to act in his wife's name in erecting the buildings, but the evidence was conflicting. Held, that an order setting aside a verdict for plaintiff and granting a new trial will not be disturbed.—Puget Sound Lumber Co. v. Krug, (Cal.) 26 P. 903.

Conveyances between.

2. In an action by a married woman against the purchaser of premises conveyed by her to her husband, to set aside the conveyance under which defendant purchased, and to recover possession of the premises conveyed, it appeared that plaintiff executed the deed under a threat of the husband to institute a certain suit against her, but that she had received from him a release of a mortgage and quitclaim deed to certain lots as a consideration for her deed to him, and that she had a secret bidder at the sale at which defendant bought, and afterwards offered to buy the premises from defendant at their full value; and that 18 months after execution of the deed complained of she had reacknowledged the same. Held, that the court below properly refused to set aside the deed.—Hensill v. Spillman, (Or.) 26 P. 850.

Community property.

3. Code Wash. 1881, § 2411, giving each spouse, without restriction, the power to devise one-half of the community property, and section 2406, providing that neither spouse shall be liable for the separate debts of the other, do not withdraw the community property of a deceased spouse from liability for his or her separate debts. The sections requiring the personal representative to take possession of the deceased's "estate," and pay the debts of the "estate," apply to community as well as separate property and debts.—Columbia Nat. Bank v. Embree, (Wash.) 26 P. 957.

4. Where a note, payable to a married woman or order, is indorsed for value before maturity to one who supposes her to be married, but has no notice that the note is community property, a valid title passes, and the indorsee can recover against the maker, although the husband intervenes to disaffirm the indorsement.—Caster v. Peterson, (Wash.) 26 P. 223.

INCEST.

Evidence.

1. Under Hill's Code Or. § 1878, providing that "if any person, being within the degrees of consanguinity, * * * shall commit adultery or fornication with each other, such persons, or either of them, shall be punished," the crime of rape by forcible ravishment and incest cannot be committed by the same act; and where a daughter testifies to carnal intercourse with her father under such circumstances that, if she was not a consenting party, the father was guilty of rape, he cannot be convicted of incest without corroborating testimony connecting him with the offense.—State v. Jarvis, (Or.) 26 P. 802.

2. On the trial of a father for incest with a daughter, commencing when she was 16 years old, it is not competent for the state to show that, soon after the intercourse commenced, the daughter consulted a physician, who found her suffering from some irritation of the vagina, resulting from recent violence.—State v. Jarvis, (Or.) 26 P. 802.

INDIANS.

Title to land.

1. Under the treaty of May 10, 1854, with the Shawnee Indians, the land in controversy was patented to a Shawnee Indian woman, the patent providing that the land should never be conveyed by the grantee or her heirs without the approval of the secretary of the interior. The Indian woman was then the wife of a white man, and she died in 1860, leaving her husband and a daughter surviving her. The husband lived on the land until 1879, when he died. The plaintiff claims under his devise. The daughter married, and died without issue in 1874, and her surviving husband conveyed an undivided one-half of the land. The defendant, U., claims under this conveyance. In 1883, the chiefs of the Shawnee Indians conveyed the land to M., under whom the defendants B. and C. claim title. The conveyance to M. was the only one approved by the secretary of the interior. The defendants B. and C. had been in possession for four years, when ejectment was brought against them. Held, that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant U. could recover without proving that, at the death of the Indian woman in 1860, the laws and decisions of the Shawnee Indians were such that the title descended to her husband and daughter, and, in the absence of such proof, judgment should be for the defendants B. and C.—O'Brien v. Bugbee, (Kan.) 26 P. 428.

2. A patent to a Shawnee Indian woman provided that the land should never be conveyed by the grantee or her heirs without the approval of the secretary of the interior. The Indian woman was married to a white man, who survived her. Held, that the restriction on alienation prevented him from acquiring title by adverse possession as against those to whom the land descended under the laws and decisions of the Shawnee Indians.—O'Brien v. Bugbee, (Kan.) 26 P. 428.

Prosecution by information.

Const. Mont. art. 8, § 8, provides that "all criminal actions in the district court * * * shall be prosecuted by information after examination and commitment." Held, that one charged with grand larceny, committed before the state constitution took effect, could not be convicted under an information.—State v. Kingsly, (Mont.) 26 P. 1066.

Names.

2. On indictment for kidnapping it is a question for the jury whether "Choy Fong," the name of the prosecutrix, as alleged in the indictment, is idem sonans with "Toy Fong," which the evidence shows to be her true name.—People v. Fick, (Cal.) 26 P. 759.

Duplicity.

3. An information charged in one count an actual embezzlement, and also charged that defendant made way with the same property and secreted it with intent to embezzle and convert it to his own use. Held, that the information was not bad for duplicity as the charge of embezzlement included all that was material in the other charges.—State v. Hodges, (Kan.) 26 P. 676; State v. Emmons, Id. 679.

Joinder of offenses.

4. Several separate and distinct felonies may be charged in separate counts of the same information, where all the offenses charged are of the same general character, requiring the same mode of trial, the same kind of evidence, and the same kind of punishment; and the trial of the defendant upon all the several counts at one time is within the discretion of the trial court.—State v. Hodges, (Kan.) 26 P. 676; State v. Emmons, Id. 679.

Rights enforced and wrongs prevented.

1. An investment company was organized to purchase land. By the fraud of its president and secretary, plaintiffs were induced to take shares, paying part cash, and giving their notes for the balance. The president and secretary were also the officers of the bank to which they sold the notes. In a suit to set aside the purchase and to cancel the notes, the plaintiffs alleged that the bank had notice of the fraud, and they prayed an injunction against the prosecution of suits on the notes. Held that, as the petition disclosed a good defense to suits on the notes, plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction. — Hardy v. First Nat. Bank, (Kan.) 26 P. 423.

2. The apprehended fouling or pollution of a stream of water in the future by the sewerage of a part of a city from sewers, which have been legally, scientifically, and properly constructed, but which has not yet taken place, and of which there is no immediate or imminent danger, and which depends upon a contingency that may not happen, does not present a case for an injunction. — City of Hutchinson v. Delano, (Kan.) 26 P. 740.

3. Under 2 Comp. Laws Utah 1888, § 3800, providing that an injunction may be granted when it appears by the complaint that plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded, which consists in restraining the "commission or continuance" of the act complained of, the court may grant a mandatory, as well as a preventive, writ to a street-railroad company against a defendant who has piled obstructions on its road-bed. — Henderson v. Ogden City Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 286.

4. A tax-payer may maintain an action to enjoin the board of education of the city and county of San Francisco, under the authority given it by Act Cal. April 1, 1872, to employ teachers, from drawing drafts on the school fund in favor of inspecting teachers, whose appointment is not authorized by the act, without showing that he will sustain any special injury different from that of the public at large. — Barry v. Goad, (Cal.) 26 P. 785.

5. A sheriff's sale of land to enforce a judgment subjecting it to a mechanic's lien will not be enjoined at the suit of the owner, who did not contract for the erection of the building, and who was not made a party to the mechanic's lien proceeding, as the purchaser at the sale will acquire no title as against him. — McCormick v. Riddle, (Mont.) 26 P. 202.

6. A land-owner may have an injunction against a stranger, who, under claim of right, is taking water from his canal by means of a ditch across his land, even though the amount of water taken is inappreciable, since its continued use would ripen into an easement in the land. — Walker v. Emerson, (Cal.) 26 P. 968.

Parties.

7. Where, in a suit to enjoin the construction of a wharf, it appears that the owners of the land in front of which the wharf is to be built are not parties to the suit, it will be dismissed for want of parties. — Beasley v. Shively, (Or.) 26 P. 846.

Fleading.

8. In a suit to enjoin a sheriff's sale of land, an allegation in the complaint that the sale will result in great and irreparable injury and damage to the owner is not admitted by demurrer, as such allegation is a conclusion of law, and not the statement of a fact. — McCormick v. Riddle, (Mont.) 26 P. 202.

9. While denials upon information and belief, authorized by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 487, are sufficient to raise an issue, they are not such denials as will justify the dissolution of a temporary injunction on the ground that the bill is fully denied by the answer. — Porter v. Jennings, (Cal.) 26 P. 965.

Verification of petition.

10. Where a copy of the petition is attached to an application for an injunction, which is verified by an affidavit that the application and the exhibit are true, the petition itself need not be verified. — State v. Loomis, (Kan.) 26 P. 472.

Dissolution.

11. In an action to restrain the sale of land under execution against plaintiff's grantor the court should continue the restraining order pending final determination, and it is an abuse of discretion to dissolve it upon the filing of an answer denying the allegations of the bill. — Porter v. Jennings, (Cal.) 26 P. 965.

12. Where a temporary injunction is granted on a petition which does not state a cause of action, the injunction may be dissolved, because of the defect in the petition, on a notice which states that the motion to dissolve will be made on the petition, and the affidavits on which the injunction was granted, and on such other affidavits as the moving party may deem proper to use in support of his motion. — Kemper v. Campbell, (Kan.) 26 P. 53.

Action on injunction bond.

13. In an action upon an injunction bond by a riparian proprietor, who had been enjoined from using the water of a stream adjoining her land for either irrigating or domestic purposes, evidence that the water was needed upon her meadow, that her stock were forced to roam for water, and that she had to carry water half a mile for domestic use, was competent, under a general allegation of damages. — Rohwer v. Chadwick, (Utah,) 26 P. 1116.

14. Where no estimate of the amount of damages suffered is given in evidence, only nominal damages can be assessed. — Rohwer v. Chadwick, (Utah,) 26 P. 1116.

INNKEEPERS.

Who are innkeepers.

1. One who keeps a house for the entertainment of all who choose to visit it, and extends a general invitation to the public to become guests, is an innkeeper, and liable as such, though the house is situated on inclosed grounds. — Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 1099.

Loss of goods of guest.

2. Under Civil Code Cal. § 1859, making an innkeeper liable for the loss of personal property placed by his guests under his care, "unless occasioned by an irresistible superhuman cause," a loss occurring by a fire which originated in the battery room of an hotel cannot be considered occasioned by an "irresistible superhuman cause." — Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 1099.

3. Where one went to a public inn, and was assigned a room, the fact that she inquired as to the price of room and board is not sufficient to show that she was received as a boarder, and not as a guest. — Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 1099.

4. A guest at a public inn may retain personal custody of necessary wearing apparel; and jewelry worn daily by her need not be deposited with the innkeeper, when not in use, to make him liable for its loss by fire. — Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 1099.

5. Plaintiff, who had no fixed home, with his family went to an hotel, expecting to remain there as long as his wife's health permitted, and in consideration of the probable length of his stay he was furnished board and lodging at a large reduction from the regular rates. He did not put any of his valuables in charge of the hotel-keeper. Soon afterwards a fire occurred, without any negligence on the part of the hotel-keeper or his employees, in which plaintiff's personality was destroyed, and he sued the hotel-keeper therefor. Held, that plaintiff and his family were boarders, as to whose property defendant is not liable as an innkeeper and an insurer, and hence plaintiff cannot recover. — Moore v. Long Beach Development Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 92.

Refusal to receive guest.

6. In an action against an innkeeper for refusal to entertain plaintiff, an invalid, thereby preventing him from receiving the benefit of the water of a mineral spring appurtenant to the hotel, from which it is alleged that he had derived much benefit theretofore, it is not error to allow plaintiff to testify that deprivation of the water had injured his health. — Willis v. McMahon, (Cal.) 26 P. 649.

7. Where there is no evidence that defendants refused to allow plaintiff the use of the water, it is not error to refuse defendants' request to instruct that they were not bound to furnish such water.—Willis v. McMahan, (Cal.) 26 P. 649.

INSANITY.

As defense to crime, see Homicide, 9-11.

Liability of husband of insane person.

Acts Cal. 1885, pp. 82, 83, which provide that, in case an insane person is able to pay actual expenses, a guardian may be appointed, whose duty it shall be to pay such expenses to the board of directors of the insane asylum, and, if indigent insane persons have kindred of degree of husband or wife of ability to pay, they shall support, etc., give such board power to collect a debt due the directors from a husband of an inmate, and they may maintain an action for such recovery as trustees of an express trust.—Watt v. Smith, (Cal.) 26 P. 1071.

INSOLVENCY.

See, also, Assignment for Benefit of Creditors.

Petition.

1. The allegation in a petition in insolvency against a firm, alleging that A. and B., doing business under the firm name of A. & B., are indebted, instead of averring that the firm "A. & B." is indebted, is not insufficient, as showing that the indebtedness is by the parties as individuals, rather than by the partnership.—In re Wright, (Cal.) 26 P. 600.

2. Where, in a petition, different creditors have joined, having several debts, and are required to join in the verification, some of the matters must necessarily be stated upon information and belief, and that form of verification is proper, although there are no allegations in the petition which are stated to be upon information and belief.—In re Wright, (Cal.) 26 P. 600.

3. It is not necessary that the petition in insolvency proceedings state the names of the members of the firms signing the same as creditors.—In re Dennery, (Cal.) 26 P. 689.

4. Under the insolvent act of California, (1880,) § 8, providing that an adjudication of insolvency may be made on the petition of five or more creditors, whose debts amount in the aggregate to not less than $500, a petition setting forth that the demand is for a certain sum, and accrued for goods sold and delivered at a certain place by petitioners to respondent, within one year last past, at his request, sufficiently states the debt.—In re Dennery, (Cal.) 26 P. 689.

Petition by firm.

5. A proceeding under the insolvent act to declare a debtor insolvent is a special proceeding, and not an action, within the meaning of Civil Code Cal. §§ 2466, 2468, requiring partnerships doing business in the state, under a designation not showing the names of the partners, to file a certificate with the clerk, etc., before they shall be allowed to maintain "an action."—In re Dennery, (Cal.) 26 P. 689.

6. A partnership doing business in the state, three of whose members are residents of the state, though the other is a non-resident, is a resident of the state, within the meaning of the insolvent act of California, (1880,) providing for declaring a debtor insolvent on petition of five or more creditors, "residents" of the state. HARRISON, J., dissenting.—In re Dennery, (Cal.) 26 P. 689.

Stay of proceedings against debtor.

7. Code Wash. § 2023, requires the court, when ordering the meeting of creditors in insolvency proceedings, to stay all actions against the debtor, providing that such stay shall not prevent the appointment of a receiver to care for the debtor's property "for the benefit of all his creditors." Held that, after an assignment, appointment of receiver, and stay of proceedings, the court has no authority to set the stay aside, and permit attachments to issue.—Traders' Bank v. Van Wagenen, (Wash.) 26 P. 253.

Title of assignee.

8. Code Wash. § 2046, provides that, after the surrender of the debtor's property, it shall not be liable to execution, but shall "be fully vested" in the assignee, who may claim and recover it all "for the benefit of creditors." Held that, when once vested in the assignee, the debtor's property cannot be divested or affected by his failure to receive a discharge.—Traders' Bank v. Van Wagenen, (Wash.) 26 P. 253.

Discharge.

9. Section 87 of the insolvent act of California provides that all debts existing at the time of the adjudication of insolvency, though not payable until a future time, may be proved against the estate of the debtor. Section 40 provides for the allowance of contingent claims at their present value. Section 53 provides that the discharge shall release the debtor from all debts and liabilities which were or might have been proved against his estate. Held, that the discharge in insolvency is a bar to an action for breach of a contract of hiring for a definite period, even as to money which became due thereon after the filing of the petition in insolvency and after the discharge. SHARPESTEIN and THORNTON, J.J., dissenting. Reversing 23 P. 1111.—Mooney v. Detrick, (Cal.) 26 P. 280.

10. The insolvent act of California, §§ 49, 53, declare void "fraudulent preferences contrary to provisions of this act," preferences "made in contemplation of becoming insolvent," and preferences "made within one month before filing a petition in insolvency." Held, that allegations by a creditor that an insolvent made certain preferences more than a year before the filing of his petition, knowing himself then to be insolvent, do not show valid grounds of opposition to the insolvent's discharge, and hence the insolvent is not required to answer or demur thereto, under section 50.—Dyer v. Bradley, (Cal.) 26 P. 1108; Same v. Martin, Id. 1106.

11. It is not a valid ground of opposition that opponent's debt was created by a fraud of the insolvent, and while a fiduciary relation existed between the parties, since under the insolvent act of California, § 53, such debts are not affected by the discharge.—Dyer v. Bradley, (Cal.) 26 P. 1108; Same v. Martin, Id. 1105.

INSURANCE.

Assignment to insurer of claim against person wrongfully causing loss, see Assignment, 2.

The contract.

1. After an oral agreement for insurance, the insured signed an application from which part of the property was omitted by mistake. The premium was calculated on the value of the property included, and notice given therefor. The policy was issued and tendered to the insured, who refused to receive it. The agent offered to get a new policy for the omitted property, or to have it included in the one tendered. The insured declined both propositions, but did not demand a rescission. Held, that the insurance company could recover on the notes.—Pierce v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, (Kan.) 26 P. 5.

2. Where application is made for insurance, and the premium fixed, and the agent orally agrees that in consideration of the necessary delay in procuring the execution of the policy the insurance shall begin from the date of the application, this is a valid contract of insurance, on which a recovery may be had if the property is destroyed before the policy issues, and not a mere agreement for a contract, to be executed by execution and delivery of the policy.—Hardwick v. State Ins. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 840.

8. While the insurer, in the absence of a provision to that effect in the contract, cannot demand the premiums before the policy issues, in an action for breach of the oral contract to insure the plaintiff must allege and prove payment or tender of the premium before he can recover.—Hardwick v. State Ins. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 840.

Application.

4. An application for insurance was signed by the applicant without reading it, and he afterwards received the policy issued thereon, which he retained for several months without objection. Held, that in an action on a note given for a premium on the policy, no fraud in the procurement of the application being shown, the statements in the written application could not be varied or contradicted by parol evidence.—Walker v. State Ins. Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 718.

5. An application for fire insurance described the building as an "elevator," and stated that a watchman was kept on the premises at night, and that no other duty was required of him. The building contained machinery for grinding grain, which was not mentioned in the application. The insured and 8 or 10 other business men employed a private watchman to guard their property at night. The facts were known to the local agent of the company who filled out the application, and told the insured that it was correctly done. The latter read the application and signed it. Held, that the company could not avoid liability on account of the inaccurate statements in the application.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Weeks, (Kan.) 26 P. 410.

6. Although Civil Code Cal. § 2607, provides that "a statement in a policy of a matter relating to the person or thing insured, or to the risk, as a fact, is an express warranty thereof," yet, where it appears from the whole policy that such an expression was not intended as a warranty, it will not be held to be such; and where the policy recites that "it is understood and agreed that the within described promises have been leased by * * *," and it turns out that the premises were not then so leased, though they had previously been, the policy is not avoided, it appearing that there was no intentional misstatement by the assured.—National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. v. Union Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 509.

7. In an application for insurance, covenanting that the representations therein were true so far as "known to the applicant, and material," plaintiff represented her building as 90 feet from the next nearest, without knowing the exact distance to be 72 feet. Held, that such statement was not a warranty, although the policy provides that the application shall be considered a part thereof, "and a warranty by the assured."—Noone v. Transatlantic Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 103.

Notice and proofs of loss.

8. Where an insurance company accepts the premium after notice of loss, it cannot, in an action on the policy, complain that plaintiffs did not give them the notice of the loss required by the policy.—Emery v. Svea Fire Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 88.

9. Though a fire insurance policy requires proof of loss to be made within 30 days, and makes the insurance payable 60 days after the proof is received by the company, those provisions may be disregarded in a suit on the policy where, within the 30 days, the company denies liability on the ground that the policy is void.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Weeks, (Kan.) 26 P. 410.

10. Where the nearest notary was in the employ of the company, and refused to furnish a certificate of actual loss without fraud, as required by the policy, and the certificate was furnished by another notary, Civil Code Cal. § 2637, providing that the insured should "furnish reasonable evidence to the insurer that such refusal was not induced by any just grounds of disbelief in the facts necessary to be certified," did not require plaintiff to send to the company evidence that the nearest notary was in their employ.—Noone v. Transatlantic Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 103.

Payment of loss.

11. Under Sess. Laws Kan. 1875, c. 3, (Comp. Laws 1879, c. 50a,) authorizing the incorporation of mutual fire insurance companies, which divides the property to be insured into two classes, and provides that "the business of each class shall be conducted separately and independently of the other, and in no case shall an assessment be made by the company or association upon the premium notes of one class to pay the losses or expenses of the other, a general judgment rendered on a policy issued on property of the second class cannot be enforced against assets of the company designed for the payment of losses in the other class.—Kansas Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Amick, (Kan.) 26 P. 944; Naill v. Kansas Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., Id.

12. Where the loss is payable to the mortgagee of the property, and occurs after sale under foreclosure, but before the time for redemption has elapsed, the mortgagee is entitled to recover the loss, as the foreclosure is no extinguishment of his debt until the deed has been made and the time for redemption has expired.—National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. v. Union Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 509.

Actions on policy—Pleading.

13. In an action on an insurance policy the complaint must state that plaintiff had an insurable interest in the premises, failing which a cause of action is not stated.—Hardwick v. State Ins. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 840.

14. Where, in an action on an accident policy, the complaint alleges that deceased sustained bodily injuries effected through external, violent, and accidental means, such a state of facts being provided against by the policy, an objection that the complaint does not state the particular circumstances under which the insured met his death is not maintainable under a general demurrer.—Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 762.

15. In an action on an insurance policy, where there is an allegation that plaintiffs performed all the conditions of the contract, defendant cannot object that the complaint does not allege that there was a notice of loss as required by the policy.—Emery v. Svea Fire Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 88.

16. The policy provided that the money shall be paid within 90 days after proof that the insured received injuries which alone occasioned his death within 90 days from the happening thereof. The complaint alleged that "more than 90 days had elapsed prior to the commencement of this suit after sufficient proof that the insured at a time within the continuance of the said policy had sustained bodily injuries through external, violent, and accidental means, within the intent and meaning of said policy; that such injuries alone had occasioned death within ninety days from the happening of such injuries," and that deceased and plaintiff "have duly complied with all the terms and conditions of said policy and renewal by them, or either of them, to be kept or performed." Held, it sufficiently alleged the notice and proof of death required by the policy.—Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 762.

Evidence.

17. In an action on a fire insurance policy running to O. & Co., (owners,) loss payable to R. & Co., (plaintiffs,) it appeared that, at the time of making application for insurance, plaintiffs promised to furnish a survey and diagram, without which the company refused to take the risk. A rider to the policy provided: "Reference is hereby made to a survey and diagram on file in the office of M. & Son, [insurance brokers acting on behalf of plaintiffs,] which is made a part of this policy, and a warranty on the part of the assured." The policy also provided: "For further particulars, reference is hereby made to an application and survey, No. —, furnished by, and a warrant on the part of, the assured, which is hereby made a part of this policy." Held, that the admission in evidence of the survey and diagram, consisting of questions and answers, could not be objected to on the ground that the insurance was effected before it was furnished to the company; as, if it was thereby deprived of its force as a warranty, it still had effect as a representation of facts made as an inducement for the issuance of the policy, the falsity of any material part of which would warrant the rescission of the insurance.—Rankin v. Amazon Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 872.

18. The survey having been furnished in accordance with plaintiffs' agreement, they could not object to it on the ground that the parties furnishing it had no authority from the owners of the property.—Rankin v. Amazon Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 872.

19. In an action on an accident insurance policy for the death of the insured from hernia, caused by an accident while in performance of his duty as a railroad fireman, where the defense is that he was for years before afflicted with chronic hernia, testimony of the engineer that he had been continuously at work prior to the accident is admissible. Bissell, C., dissenting.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, (Colo.) 26 P. 774.

— Question for jury.

20. The provision of the policy that "it is understood and agreed that, during such time as the above mill is idle, a watchman shall be employed by the insured, to be in and about the premises day and night," being free from ambiguity with respect to the time the premises were to be watched, it was error to submit the question to the jury whether plaintiffs had complied with the condition; it appearing that while the mill was idle for two months but one watchman was hired, and he was not instructed to watch the mill at night, and, as a matter of fact, slept every night in a building several hundred feet from the mill.—Rankin v. Amazon Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 872.

21. In an action on an insurance policy, where there is evidence that plaintiff had no knowledge of any limitations on the agent's authority, and the court has properly instructed on the law of agency, it is not error to leave it to the jury to determine whether the agent had authority to make an oral contract that the insurance should run from the time of the application.—Hardwick v. State Ins. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 840.

Accident insurance.

22. Where the insured died from the effects of a blow struck by a person after an attempt to blackmail, such death is the result of accidental means within the general terms of a policy providing against injuries or death caused through "external, violent, and accidental means."—Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 762.

23. Where, in an action on an accident policy providing that the insurance shall not extend to any cause of death unless the claimant shall establish by positive proof that the death was not the result of design, either on the part of the insured or of any other person, it appearing that the insured died from the effects of a blow struck by another person, it is not error to charge that if the death of insured was caused by a blow dealt him, that would not prevent recovery if the person inflicting the blow did not mean to kill the insured.—Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 762.

24. An accident insurance policy, insuring against death "from bodily injuries effected through external, violent, and accidental means," but excepting death from hernia, does not relieve the insurer from liability where death results from hernia caused by "external, violent, and accidental means." Bissell, C., dissenting.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, (Colo.) 26 P. 774.

25. In an action on an accident policy for the death of insured from hernia, where the defense is that he was for years before his death afflicted with chronic hernia, deceased's physician testified that, after the accident alleged to have resulted in hernia, deceased told him that he had never before, to his knowledge, had a rupture or any such trouble, but that he had noticed a little lump there for eight years back. The testimony of several physicians was against the possibility of there having been hernia, and deceased's mother and brother, with whom he lived, and who frequently saw his person, and a number of intimate friends, testified to his good health and vigor. Held, that the existence of hernia previous to the accident was not established. Bissell, C., dissenting.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, (Colo.) 26 P. 774.

26. Where a person, injured in an accident resulting in hernia, dies after a dangerous and unsuccessful surgical operation resulting in peritonitis, performed when death seemed inevitable without it, the accident is the proximate cause of his death. Bissell, C., dissenting.—Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, (Colo.) 26 P. 774.

Mutual benefit insurance.

27. A benefit certificate provided that on the death of the insured the money should be paid to his wife, "and in case of her death to his children." The wife was an invalid, and the children infant daughters, the issue of a former marriage. The constitution of the order provided that the beneficiaries named in its certificates should be confined to the family of the insured, or to some person related to him by blood, and that on the death of the insured the amount of his insurance should be paid from an assessment to be made on the 1st of the month next after notice of the death. The wife died after the insured, but before an assessment could have been made under this provision. Held, that the insurance vested in the wife on the death of the insured, and when she died it passed to her administrator. ELLIOTT, J., dissenting.—Chartrand v. Brace, (Colo.) 26 P. 152.

INTEREST.

See, also, Usury.

Application of payments, see Payment, 4.

When allowed.

1. In an action against a railway company for killing a horse, plaintiff was entitled to legal interest on the value of the horse from the time of instituting suit.—Woodland v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 298.

Rate.

2. A contract provided for interest at 12 per cent., and the statute then provided that, "when a rate of interest is specified in any contract, that rate shall continue until full payment is made, and any judgment rendered on any such contract shall bear the same rate of interest, * * * but in no case shall such rate exceed 12 per cent. per annum." Laws Kan. 1889, c. 164, § 5, amended the statute so that the last clause reads, "but in no case shall such rate exceed 10 per cent. per annum." Held that, if construed as applicable to prior contracts, the amendment would impair the obligation of contracts, and the judgment should bear interest at 12 per cent. until paid.—Getto v. Friend, (Kan.) 26 P. 478.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

License.

1. In an action to recover unpaid liquor license taxes under an ordinance passed by a board of supervisors, Monday, October 1, 1883, it appeared that prior thereto, on August 6, 1883, the board, pursuant to County Government Act Cal. March 14, 1883, § 22, requiring the supervisors to provide for the holding of regular meetings, and which act repealed Pol. Code, § 4045, March 13, 1883, requiring the supervisors, on the first Monday of October, to fix rates of county licenses, passed an ordinance for the holding of regular meetings on the first Monday in February, May, August, and November, to continue in session until the business was disposed of. The ordinance was passed at a special meeting of the board held for the fixing of county taxes only. Held, that the ordinance passed October 1st is void.—People v. Dunn, (Cal.) 26 P. 761.

2. A party wishing to apply for a license to sell intoxicating liquors in quantities less than one gallon, under Act Or. Feb. 18, 1889, must pay into the county treasury the amount of the tax before the license can issue, and, if the county court refuse the license, the party cannot sue the county to recover back the sum paid. Trainor v. County of Multnomah, 2 Or. 214, followed.—McLeod v. Scott, (Or.) 26 P. 1061.

Dealer's bond.

3. Where, on application for a liquor license under Act Or. Feb. 18, 1889, a bond in legal form and proper conditions is presented to the county court, with the requisite number of sureties, who severally justify in the proper form and amount, it is the duty of such court to approve the bond; and they have no right to disregard the affidavits without legal proof, nor to reject the sureties without at once giving the reason, and a speedy opportunity to meet the facts or to supply other sureties.—McLeod v. Scott, (Or.) 26 P. 1061.

4. Under an ordinance licensing saloons and forbidding any business therein "between 11 o'clock P. M. and 5 o'clock A. M. of each and every day," no recovery can be had on a bond conditioned for the lawful conduct of the business, under a complaint charging the saloon-keeper with selling liquors between 11 o'clock P. M. and 5 o'clock A. M. of the "following" day.—City of Eureka v. Diaz, (Cal.) 26 P. 961.

Criminal prosecution.

5. Though, in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquor for other than medicinal, mechanical, and scientific purposes, the state elects to rely on a sale to R. on a certain day and evidence of other sales to R. is admitted, it is not error to charge the jury to convict if they find that the accused sold to R., for other than the excepted purposes, at any time within two years prior to the finding of the indictment.—State v. Elliott, (Kan.) 26 P. 55.

Indictment and information.

6. Objections that an information charging defendant with violating the Kansas statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors did not show who had knowledge of any of the offenses charged; that it was not supported by the oath or affirmation of any one, and no statement of any witness was filed with the information,—cannot be raised on appeal from a judgment of conviction, as defendant waived such objections by pleading not guilty; no motion to quash having been made.—State v. Falk, (Kan.) 26 P. 1023.

7. Where an information for selling intoxicating liquors in violation of the Kansas prohibitory law is not verified by the oath of the county attorney, and there is filed with it the testimony of a private person at an examination made by the county attorney, defendant cannot be found guilty of any offense except one of which the person who was examined by the county attorney had notice or knowledge at the time of his examination.—State v. Hescher, (Kan.) 26 P. 1022.

Evidence.

8. In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors for other than medicinal, mechanical, and scientific purposes, where the state elects to rely on a sale to R. on a certain day, evidence of other sales to R. is competent to show that he did not buy for the excepted purposes, and that this was known to the accused.—State v. Elliott, (Kan.) 26 P. 55.

9. Under the Kansas prohibitory law requiring a druggist to take, from those to whom he sells intoxicating liquors, written statements which he must file with the probate judge, these statements are not incompetent in a prosecution against the druggist on the ground that to use them against him would be requiring him to criminate himself.—State v. Elliott, (Kan.) 26 P. 55.

Action under civil damage law—Parties.

10. Code Wash. § 2059, provides that "every husband, wife, child, parent, guardian, employee, or other person, who shall be injured in person or property or means of support by any intoxicated person, or in consequence of the intoxication, habitual or otherwise, of any person, shall have a right of action in his or her own name, severally or jointly, against any person or persons who shall, by selling or giving intoxicating liquors, have caused the intoxication, in whole or in part, of such person;" and a right of action is also given against the owners of the building in which the liquor was sold or given, where they knew of or permitted it. Held, that the words "severally or jointly" refer to defendants, and, where a widow and her minor children sue jointly for the death of the husband, there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff.—Delfel v. Hauson, (Wash.) 26 P. 290.

IRRIGATION.

Water-rights.

1. Upon the evidence in support of a claim of title to the water flowing in certain ditches used for irrigation, it appeared that the possession of plaintiff and his tenants had been disputed by the adverse claimant, and that for several years no one had the exclusive use of the water, and the possession of none of the claimants was continuous. Held, that no title in plaintiff was established thereby.—Faul v. Cooke, (Or.) 26 P. 662.

2. Persons who had settled upon lands in the vicinity of a stream of water capable of being used for purposes of irrigation, and which were of little, if any, value without irrigation, co-operated in constructing dams and digging ditches for the purpose of conveying the water to their respective parcels of land in order to irrigate them. Held that, in the absence of direct proof to the contrary, a tacit agreement among them was to be inferred that each should be entitled to appropriate a just proportion of the water for the purpose of irrigating his land; and, such agreement having been acted upon by them for a long time, so that the violation of it by one of them would produce irreparable damage to others, such violation should be restrained by a court of equity.—Combs v. Slayton, (Or.) 26 P. 661.

3. The facts that a party has changed the head of a ditch to a point higher up stream, or that he built a new ditch in which to carry the water of a former appropriation, do not affect his right to such water.—Greer v. Heiser, (Colo.) 26 P. 770.

Priorities.

4. The fact that for several years a party has obtained his water exclusively through a neighbor's ditch, by agreement, will not affect his right to receive water through his own ditch, as against the neighbor's grantee.—Greer v. Heiser, (Colo.) 26 P. 770.

5. Plaintiffs sued to enjoin defendants from interfering with their right to divert and use the waters of certain creeks, to furnish water to a city during the winter season, from November 15th to April 15th. Defendants objected on the ground that, when plaintiffs' land was public land, they owned land below it, and claimed the right to use the water of said creeks for irrigation purposes, from April 1st to November 1st. The court's findings did not show that defendants needed during the winter season more water than was left them, and it appeared that they had got along with it for a number of years. Held, that an injunction was properly granted.—Stowell v. Johnson, (Utah.) 26 P. 290.

Enforcement.

6. Gen. St. Colo. § 1763, provides that "every person * * * owning or claiming any interest

In any ditch * * * within any water district shall, on or before the 1st day of June, 1881, file with the clerk of the district court having jurisdiction of priority of right to the use of water for irrigation in such water district a statement of claim under oath." Section 1788 provides that no review of a decree entered under the provisions of this act shall be ordered, unless applied for within two years from the time of entering such decree. But section 1796 provides that "nothing in this act * * * shall prevent any person * * * from bringing * * * any suit * * * whatever, hitherto allowed in any court having jurisdiction, * * * at any time within four years." Held, that a party who failed to file such claim within the requisite time, or to apply for a review within two years after a decree, but brought an action within four years thereafter, is neither presumed to have had no rights, nor to have waived them.—Greer v. Heiser, (Colo.) 26 P. 770.

7. In an action for priority of right to water for irrigation, it was alleged that the ditch in controversy was constructed in 1875, that it was 89 rods long, $1\frac{1}{4}$ feet wide at the bottom, and 2 feet wide at the top, and 8 inches deep, and that it watered from 30 to 35 acres. The proof showed it was 2 feet deep, and a foot and a half wide at the bottom, but that it was not constructed until 1887, and that a much smaller ditch was constructed in 1874 or 1875, which did not water more than 15 to 20 acres. Held, that a decree fixing the time of priority April 30, 1874, and allowing plaintiff the right to all the water necessary to fill his ditch, describing it as 87 rods long, $1\frac{1}{4}$ feet wide at the bottom, 2 feet wide at the top, and 8 inches deep, was erroneous for variance.—Greer v. Heiser, (Colo.) 26 P. 770.

Widening ditch.

8. In an action to enjoin the widening of an irrigation ditch, it appeared that the ditch had been maintained prior to 1866, but was then allowed to fill up and be disused until 1874, when defendants opened it to a less capacity than formerly, and so used it until 1884, when plaintiff purchased the land through which it ran. There was no evidence to show who constructed and used the ditch before defendants opened it. Held, that defendants could not, after plaintiff's purchase of the land, increase the ditch to its former capacity.—Jatunn v. O'Brien, (Cal.) 26 P. 635.

Irrigation districts.

9. St. Cal. 1887, p. 30, § 2, provides: "Nor shall any lands which will not, in the judgment of said board, be benefited by irrigation by said system, be included within said district." Held, that a city or town, or a portion thereof, may, in a proper case, in the discretion of the board of supervisors be included in an irrigation district.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

10. Upon the question of fact as to what lands will or will not be benefited by irrigation the decision of the board of supervisors is conclusive.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

Bonds.

11. St. Cal. 1887, p. 35, § 15, which provides the manner of giving notices for special elections for voting bonds for irrigating districts excludes the notice provided by section 5 of the act, which provides for general elections for that purpose.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

12. St. Cal. 1889, p. 212, provides, in proceedings for the issue of bonds of irrigation districts, that the court shall direct publication of a notice of the filing of the petition in the same manner and length of time that a notice of special elections is provided for, stating the time and place for the hearing the prayer of the petition, and that any person interested in the organization may on or before the day of hearing demur to or answer said petition. Held, that the notice prescribed by the statute was sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the superior court.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

13. The notice is sufficient if it states the substance of the prayer in the petition.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

14. St. Cal. 1889, p. 23, § 6, provides that, if there be any outstanding bonds, no order of exclusion of part of the district can be made without consent of the bondholders. There was an understanding between the bidders and directors that the former were not to be held to their offer unless they could effect a sale of the bonds. The bonds were never issued or paid for, and prior to the order of exclusion the bidders had been released from their offer. Held, that the decree of validity of the order of exclusion rendered by the lower court was proper.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

15. Under St. Cal. March 16, 1889, the directors of irrigation districts may commence confirmation proceedings as soon as any resolution for the issue and sale of bonds for irrigation purposes has been adopted by them.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

16. Under St. Cal. 1889, p. 212, in proceedings for the confirmation of the issue of bonds of an irrigation district, the prayer of the petition is sufficient if it prays for the examination, approval, and confirmation of the proceedings "aforesaid" for the issue and sale of bonds of the district.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

17. Under St. Cal. 1889, p. 212, supplemental to an act providing for the organization of irrigation districts, approved March 7, 1887, authorizing the directors to institute proceedings for the confirmation of the issue and sale of bonds, the directors of the M. district issued bonds to the amount of $800,000, and, failing to dispose of them, issued another series upon vote of the stockholders to the amount of $400,000. They filed a petition setting forth the last issue, published a notice praying for confirmation of the issue and sale, and designated the time when any interested person might demur or answer. Thereafter the directors filed an amended petition, alleging the issue of the first series of bonds, and stated that the $400,000 were part of the original series, but no notice of the changes introduced in the amended petition was published or served save on defendant. The court below confirmed the order relating to the sale of both series of bonds. Held that, where the petition was amended by setting out new orders of the board, the court acquired no jurisdiction to confirm same without publication of a new notice, and the decree is void as to the $800,000 issue.—Board of Directors of Modesto Irrigation District v. Tregea, (Cal.) 26 P. 237.

18. St. Cal. 1887, p. 29, known as the "Wright Act," authorized the organization of irrigation districts, with boards of directors, who, after determining the necessary amounts to be raised, should submit the question of the issue of bonds therefor to the qualified voters at a special election. St. 1889, p. 212, supplemental to the Wright act, provided for confirmation of proceedings for the issue and sale of bonds issued thereunder by a special proceeding in the superior court on petition of the board of directors after notice given and published in a prescribed manner. Held, that an order of confirmation entered in such proceedings is conclusive, as to a proper compliance with all the provisions of the Wright act, on a land-owner of the district who did not appear at the confirmation proceedings, but who seeks to enjoin the sale of the bonds.—Crall v. Board of Directors Poso Irrigation Dist., (Cal.) 26 P. 797.

19. The confirmation proceeding being a proceeding in rem, the land-owner is bound thereby if there has been due publication of notice in accordance with the terms of the statute, notwithstanding there has been no personal service upon him.—Crall v. Board of Directors Paso Irrigation Dist., (Cal.) 26 P. 797.

JAIL AND JAILER.

Imprisonment in filthy jail—Liability of city.

Though Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 1018, provides that, in a city of the third class, the chief of police shall have power "to keep all persons arrested in the city in the city prison, county jail, or other proper place," and paragraph 3862, that "all prisoners shall be treated with humanity," the city is not liable for injuries resulting from the confinement of a prisoner without bedding in a filthy and uninhabitable city prison.—City of New Kiowa v. Craven, (Kan.) 26 P. 426.

Const. Mont. art. 8, § 14, declares that the legislative assembly may increase or decrease the number of judges in any judicial district. Act Mont. Feb. 27, 1891, provides that the district judges, whose offices may be established by the legislature, shall receive the same compensation as is now, or may hereafter be, provided by law for judges of the district courts. Const. Mont. art. 8, § 29, provides that district judges shall be paid quarterly a certain salary, and section 34 provides that all judges who have been elected or appointed are governed by the same provisions of the constitution. Held, that the constitution appropriates money for the salary of a judge appointed to fill an office subsequently created, and he is entitled to be paid, in preference to appropriations made for other purposes before his appointment.—State v. Hichman, (Mont.) 26 P. 886.

JUDGMENT.

Appealable judgments and orders, see Appeal, 2-14.

In ejectment, see Ejectment, 18, 19.
Power to annul, see Justices of the Peace, 5.

Validity.

1. A summons issued by a justice of the peace was served by a constable by leaving a copy, which was a correct copy of the original, except that the name of the constable was signed to the copy in place of the name of the justice; but an indorsement on the copy was signed by the latter as justice. Held that, although such service might have been set aside on motion, it was not absolutely void, and the judgment entered on it was voidable only, and not void.—Stewart v. Bodley, (Kan.) 26 P. 719.

2. A judgment entered against one who has not been served on an appearance by an unauthorized attorney, which has not been ratified or confirmed, is absolutely void as against the one for whom the unauthorized appearance was made.—First Nat. Bank v. Wm. B. Grimes Dry-Goods Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 56.

3. A judgment having been entered against one of several defendants, who had not been served, and had not entered an appearance, a motion by him to modify and vacate the judgment as against him will not render the judgment valid as to him, though, in addition to stating that the court had acquired no jurisdiction of his person, the motion recites that the judgment was entered as it was by mistake and inadvertence, and that the judgment actually rendered by the court did not affect the party moving for a modification of the entry.—First Nat. Bank v. Wm. B. Grimes Dry-Goods Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 56.

By default.

4. Filing an answer after a default has been entered does not affect the default.—Irvine v. Davy, (Cal.) 26 P. 506.

5. On default in an action for the conversion of personal property, it is not error for the court, before entering judgment, to require proof of the value of the property.—Haley v. Eureka County Bank, (Nev.) 26 P. 64.

Setting aside.

6. On July 19th defendant filed an application to set aside a judgment by default entered against him on July 16th. The hearing was postponed by consent, and on November 23d the motion was stricken from the calendar in the absence of both parties, but on defendant's motion it was restored on January 8th following. On January 12th, defendant, discovering that the application was defective, filed a new application, with affidavits, and a proposed answer, making the record of the first application part of the moving papers. Held, that the second application was substantially an amendment of the first, and was filed within a reasonable time, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 473, requiring such an application to be made within a reasonable time, but in no case exceeding six months after the judgment was taken.—Wm. Wolff & Co. v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 825.

7. Such provision does not require the application to be heard within the time limited.—Wm. Wolff & Co. v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 825.

8. The dismissal by the court without prejudice, on defendant's motion, of his application to set aside a judgment by default because of a defect in the application, is not a refusal, in whole or in part, to grant the application, within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 182, providing that if an application to a judge for an order is refused, in whole or in part, no subsequent application for the same order shall be made, etc.—Wm. Wolff & Co. v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 825.

Conditions of opening.

9. Where a defendant applies, under Civil Code Kan., to have a judgment which was rendered on service by publication opened, and that he be permitted to make a defense, he may, in the discretion of the court, be required to pay all costs before his application will be granted; but a formal offer, by answer or otherwise, to pay costs, is not a prerequisite to the hearing or granting of the application, not being required by the statute.—Stewart v. Scully, (Kan.) 26 P. 957.

10. Where the court makes an order opening a judgment by default on condition that defendant pay plaintiff a certain attorney's fee, the refusal of plaintiff to accept the same, on the ground that his right of appeal from the order may be affected, does not warrant the court's vacating that part of the order requiring payment of the fee.—Wm. Wolff & Co. v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 825.

11. Where an order opening a judgment by default requires defendant to pay plaintiff a certain attorney's fee, a tender thereof to plaintiff's attorney is sufficient to preserve defendant's rights under the order until its validity is determined, but does not constitute payment unless it is kept good.—Wm. Wolff & Co. v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 825.

Rendition and entry.

12. In an action to foreclose a lien, and recover the value of a windmill erected by plaintiff on land of defendant, the value of the improvement was expressly fixed, in an order admitted to have been executed by defendant, at $221.28. Such order required plaintiff, on notice of the failure of the mill to work well, to make it so work. The jury found specially that the mill was constructed according to the contract, and that, while it did not work well at first, plaintiff upon notice remedied the defects; and they found a general verdict for plaintiff for $98.44. Held, that on the special findings plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the full amount fixed by the order.—Phelps & Bigelow Windmill Co. v. Buchanan, (Kan.) 26 P. 708.

13. A judgment rendered by one judge is not impaired by his failure to authenticate it, and the authentication thereof after the expiration of his term of office by another judge, since the statute does not require a judgment to be signed.—Crim v. Kessing, (Cal.) 26 P. 1074.

14. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 577, defines a judgment as "the final determination of all the rights of the parties." Section 583 requires the court's decision to be "given in writing and filed with the clerk." Section 726 provides that on foreclosure proceedings the judgment shall direct a sale of the property, and an application of the proceeds to the costs, etc., "and the amount due to the plaintiff." Held, that an entry by the clerk at the end of the trial of the amount for which plaintiff was entitled to recover in a foreclosure suit does not constitute a judgment; and the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the decision has been "given in writing, and filed with the clerk," and recorded.—Crim v. Kessing, (Cal.) 26 P. 1074.

15. When the court decrees the rights of defendants as against each other, one of defendants cannot take an appeal without notice to his co-defendant, and he cannot sustain his appeal on the ground that the court had no right under the pleadings to determine the rights of defendants as between each other, since, the court having had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, the decree is voidable, and not void.—Jones v. Sander, (Wash.) 26 P. 224.

16. In an action for divorce brought by the husband, the court rendered a decision that plaintiff was entitled to the divorce, and that defendant should be awarded $5,000 as permanent alimony, but refused to enter the decree until $1,000 of the sum so awarded should be paid. Held, that such condition was unauthorized, and that mandamus would issue to the judges to enter the decree.—People v. Graham, (Colo.) 26 P. 936.

Res adjudicata.

17. At a point above the appropriator's ditch a slough connects with and receives the waters of the river in question, carrying them over the riparian owners' land. To prevent this the appropriator constructed a dam at the head of the slough, and deepened the river bed, cutting off the water from the riparian owners' land. Held, that a judgment obtained by the riparian owners, preventing the maintenance of the dam at the head of the slough, and restraining the appropriator from interfering with or preventing the free flow of the water "into or down the channel" of the slough, was a determination that the appropriator had no right to interfere with the natural flow of the water, not only at the head of the slough, but through its entire channel, and that this question could not again be litigated in a subsequent action by the appropriator against the riparian owners for diverting the water of the river through the slough.—Last Chance Water-Ditch Co. v. Heilbron, (Cal.) 26 P. 528.

18. Where a sheriff wrongfully attaches the goods of a stranger to the writ, who replevies them from the sheriff, claiming damages for their detention, and recovers the goods and costs, but no damages, and the sheriff satisfies the judgment, it is a bar to an action against the sheriff and his sureties for damages caused by the seizure and detention of the goods.—Ellis v. Crowl, (Kan.) 26 P. 454.

19. The plaintiff orally rented a lot for four years to one H., who was to have the privilege of erecting a shop on the lot, the plaintiff agreeing to pay H. for the shop the cost thereof if H. should, at any time, want to give up the lot. With the consent of the plaintiff H. sold the shop to the defendant. Before the end of the four years the plaintiff refused any longer to receive the rent from the defendant at the rate agreed on with H. The plaintiff notified the defendant to quit, and recovered the possession in an action of forcible entry and detainer. He then refused to allow the defendant to remove the shop, and converted it to his own use. Justice's Code Kan. § 160, provides that judgments in actions of forcible entry and detainer "shall not be a bar to any after action by either party." Held, that the defendant could recover from the plaintiff the original cost of the shop, that he could use this cause of action as a set-off, and that it was not barred by the judgment in the action of forcible entry and detainer.—Deisher v. Gehre, (Kan.) 26 P. 3.

20. Plaintiff brought an action against defendant for damages resulting from the forcible removal of a boundary fence, alleging in his complaint that he was the owner in fee of the ground from which the fence had been removed, and of that on which it had again been placed, and that the premises were then in possession of his tenant. Defendant admitted the doing of the acts charged, but denied plaintiff's title, and tendered issue of title in himself. Held, that a judgment in plaintiff's favor was conclusive as to the title of the disputed strip, as the issue of title in fee was indispensable to enable plaintiff to recover for the removal, and that in ejectment subsequently brought by him for the same land the judgment in the former action was admissible to show title in himself.—Williams v. Hacker, (Colo.) 26 P. 143.

21. On the trial of an action of ejectment it appeared that, in a foreclosure suit in another county, the defendant, being also a defendant therein, had answered and set up his title to the same land by virtue of a tax-deed made subsequent to the mortgage, and that in the trial of such foreclosure suit the court found that said defendant had a valid tax-deed, and was the owner and in the actual possession of such land, and that no other party to that suit had any lien thereon, and rendered judgment against the mortgagor, and decreed that certain lands be sold to satisfy the mortgage, but did not include such land claimed by defendant under his tax-deed. Held, that such special finding of facts in favor of defendant was res adjudicata as to the parties to the action and all persons claiming under them.—Redden v. Metzger, (Kan.) 26 P. 689.

22. The purchaser of land is not concluded by the overruling of his motion to set aside the sale of the land on execution against his vendor.—Mills v. Pettigrew, (Kan.) 26 P. 33.

23. The purchaser of land is not concluded by the dismissal, for want of prosecution, of a suit brought by him to enjoin a sale of the land on execution against his vendor.—Mills v. Pettigrew, (Kan.) 26 P. 33.

Lien.

24. The lien of a judgment on the real estate of the debtor in Oregon will not be affected by his death.—Barrett v. Furnish, (Or.) 26 P. 861.

25. Within a year after the rendition of a judgment, an execution was levied on land which was erroneously appraised by excluding the amount of a mortgage debt, and the sheriff neglected to sign his return. The creditor directed the sheriff not to sell under the illegal appraisal. During the succeeding year other judgments were obtained. Held, in a proceeding to settle the priorities, that the sheriff might amend his return by signing the same, and that the levy preserved the priority of the lien of the judgment first rendered.—Excelsior Manuf'g Co. v. Boyle, (Kan.) 26 P. 408.

Correction.

26. Where there have been two trials of a case, and the record shows that judgment was rendered on the second verdict, but the clerk entered it for the amount of first verdict, the entry will be corrected nunc pro tunc.—Gaynor v. Clements, (Colo.) 26 P. 324.

Opening and vacating.

27. By the express provisions of Code Civil Proc. Kan. §§ 535, 568, 569, 575, a judgment irregularly obtained or a void judgment may be corrected or vacated on motion, on reasonable notice to the adverse party or to his attorney of record in the action, and the motion may be made at any time within three years after the judgment was entered, and even at a later time, if the judgment is absolutely void.—First Nat. Bank v. Wm. B. Grimes Dry-Goods Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 56.

29. If a decree be rendered against a party while under duress, so that such party is unable to defend the case properly, the remedy of such party is to apply to the court to be delivered from the decree as soon as such duress is removed; and he cannot take advantage of so much of the decree as is favorable to him, and object to the residue as procured by duress.—Ross v. Ross, (Or.) 26 P. 1007.

Equitable relief.

29. In a suit to enjoin a judgment the bill alleged that, by reason of the resignation of the justice by whom it was rendered, plaintiff was prevented from perfecting his appeal; but it appeared that, of the 30 days allowed within which to perfect the appeal, 18 were allowed to elapse before any steps were taken to do so. Held, that this alone was not sufficient to confer jurisdiction on a court of equity to interfere with the judgment.—Galbraith v. Barnard, (Or.) 26 P. 1110.

Competency of juror.

1. As Civil Code Colo. § 243, requires the jurors in condemnation proceedings to be freeholders, it is error to overrule a challenge to one who testified that he owned personal property, but no mining property, nor any house or land.—Colorado Cent. R. Co. v. Humphreys, (Colo.) 26 P. 165.

2. A juror stated that he had talked about the case with 30 or 40 people, including one of the jury who had tried a person indicted jointly with the defendant, and had read newspaper reports of the testimony before the coroner's jury and at the preliminary examination; that his opinion was confirmed, and strong evidence would be required to remove it, but that he would be governed by the law and the evidence, and could lay aside all previous impressions. Held incompetent. Scott, J., dissenting.—Rose v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 264.

3. Where a juror heard "some of the facts," and formed "a slight opinion" at the time, but afterwards forgot even the facts, and another "heard of the case," and formed a conditional opinion, not, however, on the merits, and each swore on his voté dire that he thought he could try the case fairly and without regard to his previous opinion, it was not error to disallow challenges thereto, inasmuch as such opinions were not "unqualified * * * as to the merits of the action" within Civil Code Colo. § 182.—Collins v. Burns, (Colo.) 26 P. 145.

4. One who states that he has read newspaper accounts of the murder, has heard the opinions of others, and formed, but not expressed, one of his own, but that it will have no influence on him as a juror, and that he can try the case fairly, is competent.—Rose v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 264.

Summoning and impaneling.

5. A jury of 12, called from the general panel in attendance in term-time, is not a legal jury, in condemnation proceedings, under Civil Code Colo. § 243, providing that the land-owner may demand "a jury of six freeholders," to be drawn as provided in the succeeding sections.—Colorado Cent. R. Co. v. Humphreys, (Colo.) 26 P. 165.

6. Where, in quo warranto proceedings, in which the sheriff was relator, to determine the right to an office, a special venire for jurors was issued, respondent's challenge to the array, on the ground that the regular panel was not exhausted, was properly overruled.—Londoner v. People, (Colo.) 26 P. 135.

7. The fact that the sheriff's return on the venire shows two names of jurors summoned as "Garwin" and "Zena," and that two jurors who were sworn and served were "Ganivan" and "Zina," is no ground for reversing a judgment, where it is in no other way made to appear that all the jurors who sat at the trial were not summoned.—People v. O'Brien, (Cal.) 26 P. 832.

Challenge.

8. Failure of the court to inform defendant, as provided by Pen. Code Cal. § 1066, that if he desires to challenge any particular juror he must do so before the juror is sworn, is not ground for reversing the judgment, if it appears that defendant and his counsel were fully aware of his rights. Following People v. Mortier, 58 Cal. 252.—People v. O'Brien, (Cal.) 26 P. 832.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Jurisdiction.

1. A complaint against a railroad company was filed with a justice of the peace, who issued a summons to the company's agent. On this summons a judgment by default was entered, which was afterwards set aside on the plaintiff's motion, and an alias summons issued. Before the service of the alias summons the company had sued out a writ to review and set aside the void judgment. It appeared before the justice, and filed an answer in abatement, to which a demurrer was sustained. The company made no further defense, and judgment was entered against it. Held, that the void judgment did not terminate the jurisdiction of the justice, and the company was bound by the second judgment.—Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Russell, (Or.) 26 P. 304.

2. In an action by a city in the justice's court for taxes, where the complaint alleges that defendant is indebted to the city in a certain amount for taxes on real estate, and asks judgment, and the answer is a mere denial, and is not verified, no issue involving the title to real property or the legality of a tax is raised, so as to oust the justice of jurisdiction under Comp. Laws Utah 1888, § 3543.—Willard City v. Woodland, (Utah,) 26 P. 284.

3. An action against a receiver appointed to receive and hold the rents of land pending an appeal in ejectment, brought by one to whom the successful party assigns her right to such rents, is not an equitable action, but an action for money had and received, and a justice has jurisdiction thereof. The rents in his hands are no part of the judgment in ejectment.—Garniss v. Superior Court of San Francisco, (Cal.) 26 P. 351.

4. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 892, relative to justices' courts, provides that "when the trial is by the court judgment must be rendered at the close of the trial," but attaches no penalty or consequence to a violation thereof. Held, that such provision is merely directory, and that a judgment rendered by a justice six weeks after trial is valid. McFarland, J., dissenting.—Heinlen v. Phillips, (Cal.) 26 P. 366.

Power to annul judgment.

5. A justice of the peace has no power to annul a judgment rendered in his court after a regular trial. Following Weimner v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 P. 849. McFarland, J., dissenting.—Heinlen v. Phillips, (Cal.) 26 P. 366.

Continuance.

6. Where an action before a justice of the peace is continued to a certain day by the agreement of both parties, defendant's attorney has no right to rely on a promise of the justice that the case should not be called for trial until he (the attorney) had been notified.—Snively v. Hill, (Kan.) 26 P. 1024.

Bill of particulars.

7. In justice's court, a bill of particulars is sufficient which reads: "The plaintiff alleges for his cause of action against H. the use of one two-horse wagon from the 26th day of September, 1887, to the 21st day of November, 1887, 50 days in time between dates, at twenty-five cents per day, $12.50."—High v. Hill, (Kan.) 26 P. 456.

8. In justice's court, a bill of particulars is sufficient which alleges that the defendant employed plaintiff to solicit a purchaser for certain land, and agreed to pay 5 per cent., or the customary commission; that plaintiff found a purchaser who paid $2,000 for the land, but defendant refused to pay plaintiff, and there is due him on the sale $100.—Pate v. Fitzhugh, (Kan.) 26 P. 452.

Compensation.

9. The charter of the city of S. provided that the city might designate one of the justices of the peace residing therein to act as police magistrate, and might regulate the compensation of its officers, "except when otherwise provided." Held, that the phrase, "except when otherwise provided," referred to the general statutes, and not to the ordinances of the city which fixed the compensation of the police magistrate; and that he was entitled only to the fees allowed by statute to other justices of the peace.—McIntosh v. Furth, (Wash.) 26 P. 79.

Justifiable Homicide.

See Homicide, 3, 4.

KIDNAPPING.

What constitutes offense.

1. On indictment for kidnapping, where it is shown that defendant, a constable, had a warrant authorizing him to arrest prosecutrix and bring her before a justice of the peace, and that he did not take her before the justice, but left her at a certain house, it is no defense that the warrant under which defendant acted was regular on its face, since his arresting prosecutrix, his taking her into another county, and his leaving her at the house instead of taking her before the justice, as directed by his warrant, constitute a continuous act, which was not within his authority under the warrant.—People v. Fick, (Cal.) 26 P. 759.

Indictment—Variance.

2. Though the indictment alleges that defendant forcibly took the prosecutrix "for the purpose and with the intent to feloniously employ her for the unlawful use" of certain named persons, the intent is surplusage, and need not be proved.—People v. Fick, (Cal.) 26 P. 759.

Evidence.

3. On indictment for kidnapping, where it is shown that defendant, a constable, had a warrant authorizing him to arrest prosecutrix and bring her before a justice of the peace, and that he did not take her before the justice, but left her at a certain house, evidence is admissible that this was a house of ill fame; such evidence tending to show a motive for his failure to take her before the justice.—People v. Fick, (Cal.) 26 P. 759.

4. Evidence that at the same time another constable arrested the husband of prosecutrix on a charge of which he was innocent, and confined him in jail for two days, is immaterial, and its admission is harmless error.—People v. Fick, (Cal.) 26 P. 759.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Damages for breach of contract, see Damages,

5, 4.

Mining leases, see Mines and Mining, 5, 6.

Lease.

1. A contract recited that the party of the first part, in consideration of certain agreements by the parties of the second part, "their heirs, executors, and assigns," "granted, demised, and let" a certain ranch for three years, with the privilege to the second parties to keep hogs thereon until a certain date succeeding the expiration "of this lease." The second parties were to plant certain crops and make certain improvements; the first party to furnish farming implements, seed, and materials, and make certain improvements. The increase of certain hogs and fowls belonging to the first party, and certain crops, were to be divided in certain proportions, the sales thereof to be made only upon "mutual consent." The first party could re-enter, etc. in case of default in any of the covenants by the second parties; but, if such covenants were performed, then the second parties might during such term hold the premises without hindrance from the first party, "his heirs and assigns." Held, that such contract is one of lease, and not of partnership.—Smith v. Schultz, (Cal.) 26 P. 1087.

2. The fact that a lease has always been in the possession of the lessor is not conclusive evidence that there has been no delivery, since the lessor has as much interest in it as the lessee, and as much occasion for its possession, and the fact that the tenant has entered under it is sufficient to sustain a presumption that it has been duly delivered.—Oneto v. Restano, (Cal.) 26 P. 788.

3. A contract leasing certain land, with the privilege of removing timber therefrom, provided that the lessee should remove at least 1,500,000 feet the first year, and 2,000,000 each succeeding year, and pay one dollar per thousand feet therefor, in quarterly installments: provided that, if he should not remove such amount in any one year, he should pay therefor, and remove the same in any subsequent year without further charge; the lease to continue 20 years, renewable at the option of the lessee, on certain stated terms. Held, that such contract provided only for the sale of the timber, and not for a continuous rent, and, where the timber is all removed before the end of the lease, the lessor cannot recover rent for the remainder of the term, though the lessee is still entitled to possession.—Baird v. Milford Land & Lumber Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 1084.

4. Where a landlord agrees to purchase from the tenant an addition to the leased house, to be constructed by the tenant at the expiration of the lease, at the then value of such addition, it is error to instruct the jury that, "in determining such value, you have a right to consider the proper cost thereof, and the depreciation in value consequent upon use and lapse of time after it was completed."—Edwards v. Van Patten, (Kan.) 26 P. 958.

5. Tenants who enter under a lease, sufficient except for lack of acknowledgment, and pay rent and erect improvements, cannot be ejected by a subsequent vendee of the landlord, who takes with knowledge of the facts; and the omission from the granting clause of the lease of the name of one of the lessors is immaterial.—Schulte v. Schering, (Wash.) 26 P. 78.

Lease—Renewal.

6. A written lease provided that the term should commence on March 1st and the rent be paid on November 1st, but it did not fix the duration of the term. It was understood that the term was for one year. The lease provided that the lessee should have the privilege of continuing the lease at the same rent, "provided he fulfills the contract." The rent was paid in installments between November 1st and December 19th, and it was received by the lessee as thus paid without objection. Held, in forcible entry and detainer brought by the lessor at the end of the first year, that the lessee was entitled to a renewal for another year.—Lyons v. Osborn, (Kan.) 26 P. 81.

Tenancy at will.

7. The entry on land under a verbal contract to purchase makes the person in possession a tenant at will.—Hall v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 860.

Holding over.

8. In case of a tenancy from month to month, the landlord cannot, by notice to vacate, fix the tenant's liability, if he holds over, for a greater rent than under the old lease, and without regard to the value of the use, unless the tenant expressly or impliedly assents to the increase.—Atkinson v. Cole, (Colo.) 26 P. 815.

Action for rent—Defenses.

9. Though the tenant is estopped to deny the landlord's title without surrendering possession of the leased premises, in an action for rent for occupancy under an agreement continuing the terms of an expired lease, where the tenant denies any such agreement, it is proper for the court to receive evidence of title in a third person, leaving its admissibility to be determined by its conclusion as to the existence of the alleged agreement.—Knowles v. Innman, (Colo.) 26 P. 823.

10. In an action by a landlord against his tenants for an installment of rent, the answer alleged that, prior to the date when such installment was alleged to have fallen due, defendants abandoned and vacated the premises, and plaintiff resumed possession and control thereof, and leased them to various parties, collecting and retaining the rent therefor. Held, on demurrer, that the answer stated a defense to at least a part of the landlord's claim.—Engstrom v. Tyler, (Kan.) 26 P. 735.

LARCENY.

What constitutes.

1. A charge that, "if the defendant was an inmate of the penitentiary at the time of the larceny, serving out a sentence of a competent court, and that he took the horse in question for the purpose of escaping, that would be larceny," is not error, when accompanied by a correct definition of larceny, and an instruction that, in order to convict, the jury "must find beyond reasonable doubt that the defendant feloniously took and rode away the horse in question, with intent to deprive the owner thereof of the ownership and use of the horse, and that there ought to be a union of act and intent in every criminal offense," etc.—People v. Flynn, (Utah,) 26 P. 1114.

Information.

2. An information for larceny charged that defendant, "on or about the 17th day of November, 1889, did * * * steal * * * a certain bank-check, * * * which said check was then and there of the value of $95.50, and was the property of said P." Held, that this sufficiently alleges that the check was the property of P. at the time the offense was committed. De Haven, J., dissenting.—People v. Arras, (Cal.) 26 P. 766.

Variance.

3. Though the information alleges that the check stolen was drawn "in favor of one P.," and the evidence shows that it was drawn in favor of "A. G. P. or bearer," the variance is immaterial. De Haven, J., dissenting.—People v. Arras, (Cal.) 26 P. 766.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Criminal libel—Power of jury.

Comp. Laws Kan. 1885, p. 860, § 275, which provides that, in prosecutions for criminal libel, the jury, after having received the direction of the court, shall have the right to determine at their discretion the law and the fact, is constitutional.—Appeal of Lowe, (Kan.) 26 P. 749.

LICENSE.

Revocation.

A license under which the licensee has constructed a levee on the licensor's land cannot be revoked, where the revocation would cause great and irreparable injury to the licensee's land; and a court of equity, on the ground of equitable estoppel, will enjoin the licensor from subsequently tearing down the levee.—Grimshaw v. Belcher, (Cal.) 26 P. 84.

What law governs, see Conflict of Laws.

Concurrent jurisdiction of law and equity.

1. Where a bill in equity is brought to compel the transfer of corporate stock to the equitable owner, when reprieve would lie therefor, the six-years statute of limitations, applicable to actions in replevin, applies under Rev. St. Colo. § 2172, providing that, where courts of equity and law have concurrent jurisdiction, the limitations as to such actions at law shall apply in equity.—Dunne v. Stotesbury, (Colo.) 26 P. 333.

Running of statute.

2. Defendant and another agreed with plaintiff, in consideration of the latter selling certain stock owned by them, and retaining stock in the same company owned by plaintiff himself until a subsequent opportunity to sell, that they would make good to plaintiff any deficiency in the price as compared with that received by them. Held, that plaintiff's cause of action for such a deficiency accrued at the time of the sale of his stock, and the statute of limitations did not begin to run until that time.—Patmor v. Rombauer, (Kan.) 26 P. 691.

3. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a purchaser of land at a sheriff's sale, or his grantees, until delivery of the sheriff's deed.—Leonard v. Flynn, (Cal.) 26 P. 1097.

4. Under Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 2796, a creditor of a decedent having a claim which he wishes to establish against the estate, may, if the widow or next of kin refuse to take out letters of administration, obtain letters for himself or some other person, after 50 days from the death of decedent; and he cannot, without any good cause or reason therefor, defer making such application until the statute of limitations has run, and then claim that all of the time from the death of the debtor to the appointment of the administrator the statute of limitations is suspended on account of the non-appointment of such administrator.—Bauserman v. Charlott, (Kan.) 26 P. 1061.

— Commencement of action.

5. Under 2 Comp. Laws Utah, §§ 3155, 3203, providing that the filing of the complaint is the commencement of the action, and that summons may issue within a year, or defendants may appear within that time without summons, where no summons was issued, and defendants appeared and defended more than a year after the filing of the complaint, but did not object that no summons was issued, the action will be deemed to have been commenced from the filing of the complaint.—Needham v. Salt Lake City, (Utah,) 26 P. 920.

6. Where an action is brought upon two notes, and during the trial it is dismissed as to one of them without prejudice, and afterwards plaintiff amends his petition, and claims the same amount as balance due on a settlement, and the pleadings show the settlement occurred more than three years before the petition was amended, the amendment does not relate back to the time of beginning suit, and the claim is barred by the three-years statute of limitations.—Parsons Water Co. v. Hill, (Kan.) 26 P. 412.

7. By Act Cal. March 26, 1851, the city of Sacramento was incorporated, and provision made that it might sue and be sued under its corporate name of the "Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento." Under provisions of acts of April 26, 1853, and April 10, 1854, it issued bonds payable July 1, 1874. By Act May 1, 1858, the city and county of Sacramento were united under the name of the "City and County of Sacramento," the act providing that the city and county was thereby made the successor of the mayor and common council, and the property and rights of the latter corporation transferred to and vested in the former. It was also provided that the city and council should not be subject to suit, or its property liable for debt. By Act April 25, 1863, the inhabitants within the limits of the city of Sacramento as defined in the act of March 26, 1851, were made a body politic under the name of the "City of Sacramento," and all property which on April 30, 1853, was vested in the "Mayor and Common Council," etc., and such as had since been acquired within the described city limits for municipal purposes, was transferred to the new corporation, and provision made that it might be sued on any bond or contract thereafter made. Held, that the holder of the bonds could not be deprived of the right to sue their maker, and that at no time since July 1, 1874, was he prevented by a statutory prohibition from bringing action thereon within Code Civil Proc. § 356, providing that when the commencement of an action is stayed by injunction or statutory prohibition the time of the continuance of the injunction or prohibition is not part of the time limited for the commencement of the action.—Bates v. Gregory, (Cal.) 26 P. 891.

— Trusts.

8. Where a trustee voluntarily assumes a trust, with an implied agreement to reconvey upon request, the statute of limitations does not run against the beneficiary.—Butler v. Hyland, (Cal.) 26 P. 1108.

9. An executor who takes possession of assets belonging to the estate, and gives to his co-executors a note secured by mortgage for the amount, is a trustee of the fund, and the statute of limitations will not run in his favor until there is an express repudiation by him of the trust. Affirming 24 P. 855.—Fox v. Tay, (Cal.) 26 P. 897.

Acknowledgment.

10. A credit entered in a book of accounts by the creditor, after the account had been barred by the statute of limitations, is not sufficient to establish such a partial payment as will revive the account.—Hamilton v. Coffin, (Kan.) 26 P. 42.

Pleading.

11. Under the provision of Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 462, that statements of ~~new~~ matter in the answer must be deemed controverted, matters in avoidance of the bar of limitations will be deemed to have been pleaded in reply to affirmative matters on the subject alleged in the answer. Affirming 24 P. 855.—Fox v. Tay, (Cal.) 26 P. 897.

12. An answer, which merely alleges that an action for taking and diverting water was barred by the statute of limitations, is not a good plea of that statute, as it does not state the section of the Code relied on, as required by Comp. Laws Utah, § 3244, nor set out the facts constituting the defense.—Spanish Fork City v. Hopper, (Utah,) 26 P. 293.

LOST INSTRUMENT.

Proof.

The record title to a homestead, occupied by a mother, was in some of her children. After her death her other children filed a bill against those having the record title, alleging that defendants had conveyed the homestead to the mother during her life; that the deed had never been recorded; and that after her death they had destroyed it. Two of the complainants testified to having seen the deed, but neither of them could give its date, its language, its manner of execution, nor swear definitely as to the description of the land. Defendants denied the execution of the deed, and testified that they had permitted the mother to occupy the premises from filial affection. No declarations by the mother indicating that she ever claimed to be the owner were shown, nor was any reason given why the deed, if in existence, was not recorded during her life-time. Held, that a finding by the chancellor against the execution and existence of the deed would not be disturbed, as the rule is that the proof as to execution of a lost conveyance and its contents must be clear before the record title of the alleged grantors will be divested.—McDonald v. Thompson, (Colo.) 26 P. 146.

Magistrate.

See Justices of the Peace.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Probable cause.

The finding of an examining magistrate that "an offense had been committed, and that there was probable cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof," is only prima facie evidence of probable cause, in an action for malicious prosecution brought by such defendant against the prosecuting witness.—Ross v. Hixon, (Kan.) 26 P. 955.

MALPRACTICE.

Presumption.

A surgeon performed an operation on the eye for strabismus. Before that the patient's sight had been good, and after the operation her eyes were weaker than before, and she had "a spell of sore eyes." Held, that malpractice could not be presumed from the condition of her eyes since the operation.—Pettigrew v. Lewis, (Kan.) 26 P. 458.

MANDAMUS.

To courts.

1. If the county court improperly refuse to grant a liquor license to a person who complies with the prerequisites of the statute on that subject, (Act Or. Feb. 18, 1889,) mandamus will lie to compel such license to issue; and the writ of review provided by Code Or. § 573, is not an adequate remedy.—McLeod v. Scott, (Or.) 26 P. 1061.

2. In an application for an alternative writ of mandamus to the county court for refusing to grant a liquor license, it is improper to make the county clerk a party, unless it be made to appear that he has refused to perform some act which the law specially enjoins upon him by virtue of his office.—McLeod v. Scott, (Or.) 26 P. 1061.

To state auditor.

3. Act Mont. March 14, 1889, which fixes the compensation of the Code commissioners at $4,000 each, and which provides that on filing any one of the completed Codes with the secretary of the territory the auditor shall draw his warrant for the pro rata salaries of the commissioners, constitutes an appropriation of the money required for the compensation of the commissioners, and mandamus will issue to the state auditor to compel him to draw his warrant in favor of the commissioners who have performed their duties as prescribed by the act.—State v. Kenney, (Mont.) 26 P. 197.

4. Comp. St. Mont. div. 5, § 1998, provides that the state reporter shall publish 300 copies of each volume of the State Reports, "provided that the same shall be paid for at the rate of six dollars for each volume of 600 pages, and that each volume of more than 600 pages shall be paid for at the same rate for the number of pages exceeding 600," and that upon delivery the auditor "shall issue to the said reporter a warrant for the amount to be found as provided above, and also a warrant for the sum of three hundred dollars, to cover the expenses of stationery and clerical work: * * * provided, that the whole expense of publication and preparation of a full volume of such Reports shall not exceed the sum of two thousand one hundred dollars." Held, that mandamus will lie to compel the auditor to issue a warrant to the reporter for the payment of all pages in excess of 600 at the rate of $6 for 600 pages.—State v. Kenney, (Mont.) 26 P. 999.

To compel levy of tax.

5. In mandamus by a water-works company against a city to compel the levy and collection of a tax to pay rent for hydrants, contracted for by the city under an ordinance, the minutes for the passage of the ordinance, as entered upon the journal, did not show that the ordinance was regularly passed, but the evidence outside of the journal showed that the ordinance was in fact regularly passed and approved and attested and published, and it appeared to be valid upon its face, and was accepted and acted upon as valid by all parties, and the city at two different times passed two other ordinances relating to the water-works, and purporting to be amendments to the aforesaid original ordinance, and under these ordinances the water-works were constructed to the satisfaction of the city, and the city afterwards accepted the hydrants and their use, and levied taxes for three years to pay for their use, and paid the rent therefor for 2½ years, and then refused to further levy taxes or to pay rent for the use of the hydrants. Held, that mandamus may be allowed requiring that the minutes of the passage of the said original ordinance shall be so corrected by an entry nunc pro tunc as to make them show that the ordinance was regularly passed, and that the mayor and council shall then levy taxes, and perform all the other duties which may be incumbent upon them under the provisions of the ordinance as a valid ordinance.—Columbus Water-Works Co. v. City of Columbus, (Kan.) 26 P. 1046.

To election officers.

6. Where an alternative writ of mandamus to compel the officers of a city to canvass the votes cast at an election for a member of the school board shows that illegal votes were cast, but that it is impossible for the officers of the city to separate the legal votes from the illegal votes, or to tell for whom the legal votes were cast, such writ states no cause of action, and a motion to quash should be sustained.—City of Garden City v. Hall, (Kan.) 26 P. 1031.

7. Under the repeated decisions of the supreme court of California, a writ of mandate will not issue to compel the registrar and board of election commissioners of the city and county of San Francisco to count the votes cast in certain precincts for candidates for the offices of supervisor and police commissioner, to declare the result, and to issue certificates of election accordingly.—People v. Pond, (Cal.) 26 P. 648.

Recitals of writ.

8. The writ of mandamus should contain every material fact alleged in the petition upon which the plaintiff relies, making or creating the duty upon the defendant to act or do the particular thing which the plaintiff demands.—McLeod v. Scott, (Or.) 26 P. 1061.

MARRIAGE.

See, also, Divorce; Homestead; Husband and Wife.

What constitutes.

1. In a suit for divorce, it appeared that plaintiff and defendant, after the birth of an illegitimate child, entered into an agreement for a present marriage. Plaintiff's mother testified to the agreement, and that defendant asked her to take plaintiff to an adjoining county, and authorized her to introduce her as his wife, and that he said he wanted it kept quiet in the county where he lived. Defendant at no time after the alleged agreement cohabited with plaintiff, though on a few occasions they had sexual intercourse, and he only contributed $70 to the support of plaintiff and the child. There was no evidence that any one knew of the relations between the parties except themselves and plaintiff's mother and sister. Held, that there was not such an assumption of marital rights as could constitute a civil marriage, under Civil Code Cal. § 55, requiring that consent to the marriage must be followed by a mutual assumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations.—Kilburn v. Kilburn, (Cal.) 26 P. 636.

Presumption—Rebuttal.

2. In an action against a husband for medical treatment of his wife, it appeared that the parties had been formally married and cohabited until they learned that a divorce from a former wife was invalid, whereupon they discontinued cohabitation, but still acknowledged each other as husband and wife. The evidence as to the invalidity of the divorce, and that the first wife was living, was elicited by defendant on cross-examination, and was hearsay. Held not sufficient to rebut the presumption of marriage, although no objection to the evidence was made.—Gerlach v. Turner, (Cal.) 26 P. 870.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Contract of hiring—Termination.

1. The dissolution of a copartnership by the death of a partner terminates a contract of employment for a year between the firm and a salesman, under Civil Code Cal. § 1996, providing that every employment in which the power of the employee is not coupled with an interest in the subject is terminated by notice to him of the death of the employer, and, if the surviving partners retain him to assist in winding up the affairs of the partnership without an express agreement, the implied contract is only for such time as his services may be needed, and at such a salary as his services may be reasonably worth.—Louis v. Elfelt, (Cal.) 26 P. 1096.

Negligence of master.

3. In an action for negligence in suffering the roof of a drift in a coal mine to remain without support, whereby it fell upon and injured a miner, it appeared that several months prior to the accident, defendant, being the owner, turned over the possession and management of the mine to one D., who from that time employed and paid the workmen and operated the mine for his own benefit. Held, that there was no relation between the parties whereby a liability could arise, and the fact that the miners were paid at defendant's store, and that some of them thought they were working for defendant, was immaterial.—Smith v. Belshaw, (Cal.) 26 P. 884.

8. In an action for personal injuries received by plaintiff while in defendant's employ, by falling from a bridge on which he was working, there was evidence that a maul with which he was driving timbers was worn and uneven on the surface, and glanced when a blow was struck, throwing him off his balance, and causing the fall by which he was injured; and that the maul had been handed to plaintiff for the purpose by one of defendant's foremen, who was in charge of the work, and who knew, or could have known, by the exercise of ordinary care, of the dangerous condition of the maul. Held, that this was sufficient to sustain findings by the jury that defendant was guilty of negligence in furnishing the maul to be used by plaintiff in the position occupied by him at the time.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Blevins, (Kan.) 26 P. 687.

4. A railroad company is not liable for injuries to its employees caused by defects in its cars, unless by the use of reasonable diligence the defect could have been discovered.—Allen v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 297.

5. Inspectors of railroad cars are not bound to apply physical force to the rounds of the ladder on a freight car, in order to test its condition, unless they see some indication of weakness.—Allen v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 297.

6. In an action against a railroad company for the negligent killing of an employee, the evidence showed that deceased, who was a car-repairer, was sent by the foreman to repair a car standing in defendant's yard, and while he and others were under the car, upon which they had failed to display a red flag, an engine was heard. One of the men went out, and, in the hearing of deceased, told the switchman directing the engine of deceased's position. The engine was stopped within six feet of the car, but the switchman signaled it to back, which it did, striking the car, and killing deceased. Held, that a verdict for plaintiff was proper. BLACKBURN, J., dissenting.—Pool v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 654.

7. A brakeman who has his hand crushed while attempting to couple in the dark two cars with draw-heads, at an unequal height from the track, can recover for his injuries, where the company had failed to furnish suitable links for such couplings, and the conductor ordered plaintiff to take the unsuitable link with which he attempted to make the coupling.—Denver, T. & G. R. Co. v. Simpson, (Colo.) 26 P. 339.

8. Where the petition avers that the company failed to furnish a sufficient number of safe links, and that the accident resulted from that cause, evidence that the train was not properly supplied with suitable links for the run on which the accident occurred is admissible.—Denver, T. & G. R. Co. v. Simpson, (Colo.) 26 P. 339.

Negligence of master—Evidence.

9. In an action against a railroad company for personal injuries to a freight brakeman caused by the giving way of a round of a car ladder by reason of the rottenness of the wood, plaintiff cannot be asked as an expert railroad man whether, in his opinion, the inspectors would have discovered the defect if the car had been examined.—Allen v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 297.

10. In an action against a railroad company for injuries resulting in the death of an engineer, caused by a misplaced switch, it is not competent for the company to put in evidence the conviction of a trespasser under an indictment for the murder of the engineer, by tampering with the switch, nor can the company prove confessions made by the accused.—Miller v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 70; Guthrie v. Same, Id. 76.

Negligence of fellow-servants.

11. Plaintiff's decedent, a car-repairer, while engaged in removing a broken brake-beam, and assisting to couple the car with a chain, so that it could be set out for repairs, was killed by the unexpected movement of the engine. The court charged, in an action against the railroad, that fellow-servants were such as directly co-operate with one another in the same department of service, or such that their usual duties bring them into habitual association; and that plaintiff was entitled to recover, if the engineer was employed in a department separate and distinct from that in which decedent was employed, and if the latter's death was the result, not of his own negligence, but of that of the engineer in moving his engine without warning. Held, that such instructions were proper.—Webb v. Denver & R. G. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 981.

12. One who is employed by a railroad company, under a foreman, to make repairs in its repair-shops and on cars standing in its yards, is not a fellow-servant of a switchman, who, under orders of the yard-master, directs the movement of cars in the yard.—Pool v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 654.

13. A blacksmith was employed to sharpen tools, and to deliver them to the miners at work in a mine. By his negligence while descending the shaft with the tools, a miner who was ascending was injured. Held, that the two were fellow-servants, and the master was not liable.—Snyder v. Viola Mining & Smelting Co., (Idaho,) 26 P. 137.

14. A switch had been tampered with so that it would not return the rails to their proper position after it had been turned for a side track. A brakeman turned the switch, and after his train had entered on the side track he turned the switch for the main line. A rule of the company made conductors personally responsible for the proper adjustment of switches used by their trains, but neither the conductor nor the brakeman looked to see that the rails obeyed the motion of the switch. In a short time another train passed on the main line, and was wrecked at the switch, injuring the engineer and fireman. Held, that the failure of the brakeman and conductor of the first train to see that the switch was properly adjusted was the negligence of fellow-servants, and the company was not liable.—Miller v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 70; Guthrie v. Same, Id. 76.

15. Under Civil Code Cal. § 1970, providing that an employer is not bound to indemnify his employee for losses suffered in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer "in the same general business," unless he has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employee, a railroad company is not liable for the death of a brakeman in a collision caused by the negligence of the conductor on the same train in running his train ahead of schedule time, unless the company was negligent in selecting an incompetent conductor.—Congrave v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 175.

16. In an action against a railway company for damages alleged to have been caused by the negligence of a fireman, temporarily operating a locomotive, in backing it up too rapidly, whereby plaintiff, a brakeman engaged in coupling, lost a hand, the court refused an instruction, based upon a contention that the fireman was a fellow-servant, that though the jury found that he caused the accident by too rapidly backing the engine, yet, if they found that he was qualified to perform the duties incident to his position, and that among them was that of handling the engine in the absence of the engineer, then they must find for defendant. It charged instead, in substance, that to entitle the plaintiff to recover they must find that the fireman was negligent or incompetent; that such negligence or incompetence must be proved, not by the circumstances of the accident alone, but that facts of his previous career must be taken into consideration; and that the defendant failed to use reasonable care in employing him. Held no error.—Brown v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 579.

Contributory negligence.

17. Defendant, a railroad company, maintained and operated its track about 12 to 18 inches from a line of telegraph poles. Deceased, an engineer, running one of defendant's locomotives, put his head and shoulders outside of the cab while in motion, and was looking backwards, when his head was crushed against one of the poles, and he was killed. Defendant had been running the engine about eight days before he was killed, and prior to his employment had gone over the line. Upon the day of the accident he was told to keep his head inside of the cab, or he would get hurt. Held, that the carelessness of deceased was the proximate cause of his death, and defendant was not liable therefor.—Helfrich v. Ogden City Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 295.

18. The shaft of a mine was provided with a rope attached at the top to a bell, the ringing of which was a signal that there was some one in the shaft. A miner was struck while ascending by some tools which were being let down. He did not ring the bell because "there was not supposed to be any one at the top of the shaft." Held, that he was guilty of contributory negligence.—Snyder v. Viola Mining & Smelting Co., (Idaho,) 26 P. 127.

19. Plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries received while in defendant's employ, by reason of a maul with which he was working, and the surface of which was uneven, glancing, and throwing him off his balance, so that he fell, testified that he had never seen the maul before it was handed to him by defendant's foreman, except at a distance of 15 to 20 feet; that he noticed the edges were battered, but did not see the face of it, and did not know it was uneven; that the work was being rushed, and he was hurried, and did not stop to inspect the maul. Held, that findings by the jury that he was not guilty of contributory negligence should be sustained.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Blevins, (Kan.) 26 P. 687.

See Damages.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

In general.

1. The contract providing that the owner should pay, upon the written order of the contractor, the material-men when the materials were used in the building, and also pay the mechanics and laborers at the end of every week for work performed, such payments are specific enough as to time and amounts to comply with Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1184, which requires the contract price to be made payable in installments at specified times after commencement of the work, or completion of specified portions, or of the whole work.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

2. The contract provided for the payment of $5,500 for all work and material, three-fourths payable in installments as the work progressed, the other fourth 85 days after completion, with an obligation to pay for materials when used, and work as it was rendered weekly. Held, that such contract was a substantial statement of "the amounts of all partial payments, together with the times when such payments shall be due and payable," required under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1183.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

3. It appearing that defendant, owner of the building against which liens were filed, had not retained for 85 days after the completion of the work, and paid over to those entitled thereto, 25 per cent. of the contract price, as provided in his contract, he is responsible to that extent.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

Property subject to.

4. A person in possession of land under a verbal contract for the purchase thereof is the owner, within the Kansas statute relating to material-men's liens, and may subject his interest therein to such a lien.—Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Brown, (Kan.) 26 P. 1019.

5. Const. Cal. art. 20, § 15, gives material-men a lien upon the "property" to which they have furnished material, and Code Civil Proc. § 1188, grants them a lien upon "any building" to which they have furnished material; but Const. art. 11, § 18, prohibits school-districts from incurring indebtedness exceeding the annual revenue provided therefor, unless provision shall be previously made for the payment thereof by taxation. Held, that a public school-house is not subject to the mechanic's lien laws.—Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, (Cal.) 26 P. 646.

Who may claim.

6. In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien on defendant's property for services by plaintiff as superintendent of buildings thereon, plaintiff testified that defendant employed him, but he made no definite statement of the manner of his employment, and admitted that he came to take charge of the work under contract with defendant's architects to superintend their buildings, including defendant's. Defendant denied having employed him, and was corroborated by the architects, who testified that the employment was by them, that they were to pay him, and defendant only to make up to them a certain amount of his wages. Held, that a judgment for plaintiff was unwarranted.—Cadwell v. Brackett, (Wash.) 26 P. 219.

7. The claimants of a mechanic's lien furnished the owner iron fencing posts and gates for fencing certain land. The materials were piled on the highway in front of the premises, but were not used. The owner of the land sold it to the defendant, reserving the fencing, which was afterwards seized by the sheriff and sold as the property of the defendant's vendor. Held, that the claimant had no lien under Sess. Laws Kan. 1873, c. 141, § 1, giving a lien to any person who shall, under contract, furnish material for erecting any fence.—Hill v. Bowers, (Kan.) 26 P. 13.

8. Hill's Code Or. § 3676, provides that "any person who shall, at the request of the owner of any lot, * * * fill in, grade, or otherwise improve the same, shall have a lien," and that "all the provisions of this act respecting the securing and enforcing of mechanics' liens shall apply thereto." Section 3669 makes every contractor or subcontractor, having charge of the construction of any building or other improvement, the agent of the owner for the purpose of the act. Held, that when a person is employed by the owner of a lot to grade, fill in, or otherwise improve it, and he employs laborers to assist him, the services of such laborers will be considered as rendered at the request of the owner, within section 3676.—Pitz v. Killingsworth, (Or.) 26 P. 345.

Proceedings to perfect.

9. Where the memorandum of contract was filed at 10:30 o'clock A. M., and it appeared that the work was commenced no earlier than 8 or 8:30 A. M. of the same day, the evidence thereof being doubtful, and such work being of a trivial nature a finding that the work commenced before said filing will not be sustained.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

10. An objection to the failure to file, in the recorder's office, the plans and specifications of the building, is not well taken, where the contract was made after Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1183, was amended in 1887, and such amendment does not require the filing thereof.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

— Notice of lien.

11. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1187, which requires a person to file a notice containing the name of the owner of the structure for which materials were furnished, and also the name of the person by whom he was employed, or to whom he furnished materials, a notice of lien stating that the materials were furnished to H., and that claimants were employed by both H. and N. to furnish the same, is a compliance therewith; it appearing that plaintiffs made the contract with N., the owner of the building, to furnish the materials, and that H., the contractor, gave sundry orders for payment, drawn on N., which he paid.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

12. Where plaintiffs' notice of lien alleged that the price agreed upon was "the usual price, and what said materials were reasonably worth at their place of business," and that the goods were to be paid for on delivery, it sufficiently complies with the above section, requiring the notice to state the terms of the contract expressly agreed on, to entitle plaintiffs to recover on a quantum meruit; it appearing that the goods were furnished the architects of the defendant owner of the building, and that they were reasonably worth the amount sought to be recovered.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

13. Where, in an action to enforce certain liens of mechanics and others, plaintiffs' notice of lien stated that the labor and materials furnished were to be paid for at what they were reasonably worth, and the testimony showed that part of the materials were furnished upon a contract price, and the balance upon a basis of a quantum meruit, a finding that such notice was "in due form, as required by law," is error, under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1187, which requires the person to file his claim, stating the terms and conditions of his contract.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

14. The allegation of the notice of lien that it was "agreed that the price of all materials furnished * * * should be due on the delivery of the same" is a sufficient statement of the terms of the contract.—Cohn v. Wright, (Cal.) 26 P. 643.

Priorities.

15. The owner of a lot sold it, agreeing to take a mortgage subject to a first mortgage to be executed by the purchaser to raise money with which to build a house. After the erection of the building had commenced, the deed and mortgages were executed as agreed. Code Civil Proc. Kan. § 630, provides that mechanics' liens shall be preferred to all other liens which may attach, subsequent to the commencement of the building. Held that, on the legal estate, the mechanics' liens were inferior to the mortgages, but, on the enhanced value given to the property by the building, the liens were superior to the mortgages.—Getto v. Friend, (Kan.) 26 P. 473.

16. The defendants had priced certain lots, intending to buy one of them and to erect a building on it. They contracted for the materials, and ordered them delivered on one of the lots, but had not then notified the owner of the lot that they would take it. The delivery of the materials commenced at once, and about a month afterwards the defendants obtained a deed for the lot, and a few days later they executed a mortgage on it. Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 4733, gives a lien for labor and materials furnished to erect a building "under contract with the owner of any tract or piece of land." Held, that the contract for the materials was made "with the owner," and the liens for labor and materials furnished in the erection of the building were superior to the mortgage.—Jarvis Conklin Mortgage Trust Co. v. Sutton, (Kan.) 26 P. 406.

Enforcement.

17. A suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien is equitable in its nature, and is not transformed into an action at law by defendants interposing a legal defense by way of counter-claim.—Kilroy v. Mitchell, (Wash.) 26 P. 865.

18. In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the right of another lienholder, made a defendant, to proceed to a final determination of his lien will not be defeated, where the plaintiff's petition is held upon demurrer to be insufficient, or where there is a compromise or withdrawal of any claim for a lien by the plaintiff or other lienholder who is a party in the action.—Johnson v. Keeler, (Kan.) 26 P. 728.

— Parties.

19. Under Laws Kan. 1871, c. 97, § 5, providing that, in foreclosure of mechanics' liens, all persons whose liens are filed as the statute provides, and all incumbancers, shall be made parties, a lienholder who is not made a party in the first instance is entitled, upon application, to come in at any time before final judgment, and, by an answer in the nature of a cross-petition, set forth his claim of lien, and ask to have the same foreclosed.—Johnson v. Keeler, (Kan.) 26 P. 728.

— Pleading.

20. In a complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien, it is not sufficient to aver generally that the notice required by statute was duly made out and filed, but it must also be averred that the notice contained all the essential provisions, and that it was verified as required and filed within the time prescribed.—Pilz v. Killingsworth, (Or.) 26 P. 305.

21. Conceding that a notice of lien attached to a complaint and marked as an exhibit may, by reference, be made part of a complaint, and treated as a sufficient averment of the terms and conditions of the contract, by an allegation that the materials were furnished on the terms and conditions therein set forth, there must still be a direct allegation in the complaint that the materials were furnished to be used in the construction of the building on which the lien is claimed.—Cohn v. Wright, (Cal.) 26 P. 643.

22. In an action to enforce certain liens, where the notice of lien alleges that H., the contractor, purchased the goods both as contractor and as the agent of the owner of the building, an allegation in the complaint that he purchased only as agent is an immaterial variance.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

23. An allegation in the complaint to enforce a mechanic's lien that "said firm sold and delivered N. certain hardware and building material, to be used in the erection and construction of said building, and affixed and attached thereto," warrants the finding that the materials were used in the building.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

24. Where M., whose contract for furnishing materials exceeded $1,000, failed to allege in his complaint that his contract was in writing, or filed for record, such omission does not contravene Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1183, which provides for the filing of a contract between the contractor and owner where the amount exceeds $1,000, it appearing that he was a subcontractor and material-man.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

25. Under Hill's Code Or. § 3676, giving a mechanic's lien on "any lot in any incorporated city or town" for grading, filling in, or otherwise improving the same, "or the street in front of or adjoining the same," the word "lot" must be confined to property so situated as to have impressed on it the character of "urban," as distinguished from "rural," use, and a complaint to enforce a lien is not sufficient which describes the property improved as a "tract of 10 acres in an incorporated city."—Pilz v. Killingsworth, (Or.) 26 P. 305.

26. In a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, the value of materials furnished is sufficiently averred in a petition which alleges that the plaintiff furnished materials "amounting to $537.-98."—Jarvis Conklin Mortgage Trust Co. v. Sutton, (Kan.) 26 P. 406.

27. In a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, where the lien statement is attached to the petition as a part thereof, and states that the materials were furnished under a contract with the owner of the land, the petition is sufficient on demurrer, though it does not allege that the contract was with the owner.—Jarvis Conklin Mortgage Trust Co. v. Sutton, (Kan.) 26 P. 406.

Enforcement—Variance.

28. A variance between the record and the evidence, as to the value of the materials furnished, and the way in which they were purchased and furnished, is immaterial.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

29. Plaintiff's notice of lien set out that his agreement with defendant N. was "that he was to be paid for said labor done and furnished at what it was reasonably worth, to be paid for when the work ceased." On the trial plaintiff testified: "My contract was to furnish all the material and do all the painting for $250." Held, that the variance between the actual contract and the statement in the notice is fatal.—Reed v. Norton, (Cal.) 26 P. 767.

Findings.

30. In an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, the right to which depends on the filing of a notice within a certain number of days after the completion of the building, a finding that the building was completed "on or about" a certain day is insufficient.—Cohn v. Wright, (Cal.) 26 P. 643.

31. A finding that parties, after commencing the construction of a building, abandoned the construction, is insufficient, where it appears that such abandonment was only on their conveyance of the property, and there is no finding that their grantee abandoned the construction.—Cohn v. Wright, (Cal.) 26 P. 643.

MINES AND MINING.

Location of claim.

1. J. attempted to locate a mining claim by posting notices on it, but failed to mark the location on the ground so that its boundaries could be readily traced as required by Rev. St. U. S. § 2324. He and his grantees held possession and worked the mine until ejected by defendant, who attempted to locate the claim by posting a notice at each end and recording a copy thereof, but who also failed to locate its boundaries on the ground. J.'s grantee worked on the claim after the attempted location by defendant. Held, that a finding that plaintiffs and their grantor never abandoned the claim and were in continuous possession, and that defendant was a mere trespasser, was sustained by the evidence.—Neubeaumer v. Woodman, (Cal.) 26 P. 900.

Mining partnership.

2. Civil Code Cal. § 2442, providing that every general partner is jointly liable to third persons for firm debts, applies to members of a mining partnership.—Stuart v. Adams, (Cal.) 26 P. 970.

3. A contract by which a stranger agrees to work the mine, pay one-half the expense, and receive one-half the product as compensation, does not constitute him a partner, under Civil Code Cal. § 2511, providing that a mining partnership exists where several persons owning a claim actually engage in working it.—Stuart v. Adams, (Cal.) 26 P. 970.

4. A mine superintendent has the right to expend partnership funds for necessary supplies for the mine without express authority.—Stuart v. Adams, (Cal.) 26 P. 970.

Mining leases.

5. A mining company advertised for bids for the lease of its property, in answer to which plaintiff offered "to take lease on the whole property at 35 per cent. royalty at eighteen months, and agree to expend at least $5,000 every month in development work; I to have 30 days to begin work, in order to make examination of property, and put machinery in place. Lease to date from time of commencing work. Settlement as usual." At a meeting of the officers of the mining company it was moved and carried that plaintiff's bid be accepted, and the president empowered to draw up a lease in conjunction with plaintiff, and present it to the board of directors for their consideration. The president thereupon telegraphed to plaintiff that the lease had been awarded to him. Held, that this constituted a binding and concluded agreement for a lease. Bissell, C., and HARR, J., dissenting.—Cochrane v. Justice Mining Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 780.

6. Plaintiff is not bound under this contract to accept a lease which requires him to do certain work on the property regardless of its productiveness, and gives the lessor the privilege under certain contingencies to dispose of the ore mined. Bissell, C., and HARR, J., dissenting.—Cochrane v. Justice Mining Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 780.

Mortgagee in possession—Accounting.

1. Where the court has made a finding upon settlement of the account of mortgagees in possession, stating it as of that date, and the decree is not entered until some time afterwards, it is not error for the court to make a supplemental finding showing the expenditures and receipts since the former account, and to modify it accordingly.—Murdock v. Clarke, (Cal.) 26 P. 601.

Foreclosure.

2. Where the description in a mortgage annexed to and made part of the complaint, in a suit to foreclose, shows that the mortgaged premises were, at the time the suit was commenced, in a legal subdivision, which the court judicially knows to have been within the boundaries of the county in which the suit was brought, it cannot be objected that the complaint does not show that the premises were so situated.—Scott v. Sells, (Cal.) 26 P. 350.

3. In an action to foreclose a mortgage for alleged defaults claimed to entitle plaintiff to declare due the principal debt secured by the mortgage, the evidence for plaintiff as to the occurrence of such defaults was conflicting, and not clear, and tended strongly to show that no such defaults occurred before the commencement of the action; but one sum afterwards maturing, and included in plaintiff's demand for a personal judgment, was admitted to be unpaid. Held, that a demurrer to the evidence was properly overruled.—Rogers v. Hodgson, (Kan.) 26 P. 732.

4. Where lands were sold under a decree of foreclosure against two persons, and bought in by the mortgagee, and on appeal the decree was reversed as to one, the mortgagee cannot thereafter treat the original decree as valid against the latter for the purpose of retaining title under the foreclosure, and invalid for the purpose of charging interest and taxes.—Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Jones, (Cal.) 26 P. 1089.

Personal judgment.

5. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage, the defendant answered that one B. had bought the property and assumed the mortgage. An order was entered for B. to be made a party, and he was served with a summons requiring him to answer the petition, in which his name did not appear. Held that, no appearance having been made by B., it was error to render a personal judgment against him. — Beecher v. Ireland, (Kan.) 26 P. 448.

Order No. 1587 of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco is not void for imposing an unreasonable punishment in providing as a penalty for the uttering, etc., of profane and obscene language, and words and language having a tendency to create a breach of the peace, a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both. — In re Miller, (Cal.) 26 P. 620.

— Establishment of sewer district.

2. On the passage of an ordinance establishing a sewer district, a councilman is not disqualified because he owns property within the district, nor because he owns other property which might have been included therein. — City of Topeka v. Huntoon, (Kan.) 26 P. 488.

3. In the absence of positive proof of fraud, the courts cannot set aside as unreasonable a city ordinance establishing a sewer district, and providing for the construction of sewers therein under Laws Kan. 1881, c. 37, § 19, providing that "the mayor and council shall have power to provide for a system of sewerage and drainage for the city, or any part thereof, and to build and construct sewers or drains by districts or otherwise, as the mayor and council shall designate." — City of Topeka v. Huntoon, (Kan.) 26 P. 488.

— Prosecution for violation.

4. Under Gen. St. Colo. 1883, c. 109, § 114, providing that in suit for fines or penalties for the violation of any ordinance it shall be sufficient to state in the complaint the number of the section and title of the ordinance, together with the date of its passage, without stating the section or substance thereof in full, a complaint stating these is sufficient as the proceeding is civil, not criminal. — City of Durango v. Reinsberg, (Colo.) 26 P. 820.

5. A prosecution under a municipal ordinance for an offense not punishable by general statute is not a criminal proceeding, but a civil action, and a judgment in such action against the municipality may be reviewed on error. — City of Durango v. Reinsberg, (Colo.) 26 P. 820.

Officers.

6. By general Municipal Incorporation Act Cal. March 13, 1883, § 4, it is provided that officers chosen at a special election to be held within two weeks after the vote in favor of reorganization shall hold their respective offices only until the next general municipal elections. By section 752, it is provided that all elective officers of cities of the fifth class shall be chosen at a general municipal election to be held therein in each odd-numbered year; the marshal, assessor, etc., to hold office for two years, and the trustees for four years; but there is a further proviso that the first board of trustees elected under the provision of this act shall so classify themselves by lot that three of their number shall go out of office at the expiration of two years, and two at the expiration of four years. Held, the elective officers, except members of the board of trustees, are to hold office for two years, and they for four years and that an election must be held every two years. — Ruggles v. Board of Trustees of City of Woodland, (Cal.) 26 P. 520.

7. Const. Colo. art. 12, § 1, provides that every person holding a civil office in a municipality shall, unless removed according to law, exercise the duties of such office until his successor is duly qualified. Held, that where a candidate for mayor is by the proper canvassing board declared elected, and, filing his oath, enters upon the discharge of his official duties, the outgoing mayor vacating the office without objection, the court may, on the election being contested and adjudged illegal, order him to yield the office to the president of the board of supervisors, since Laws Colo. 1885, p. 90, § 11, provides that in case of a vacancy in the office of mayor the president of the board of supervisors shall act. — Londoner v. People, (Colo.) 26 P. 135.

8. An assignment of city warrants to be issued for work performed under a contract with the city, made to the president of the common council after the completion of the work, does not render him "interested in the contract," within the meaning of Acts Or. 1885, p. 314, § 16, (city charter of East Portland), which prohibits members of the common council and city officers from becoming "interested in any contract or job, the expenses of which are paid out of the city treasury." — Stott v. Franey, (Or.) 26 P. 271.

— Police commissioners.

9. In 1835, section 72 of the charter of Portland was amended so as to provide for the election of police commissioners, who should hold office for three years, and until their successors were elected and qualified. In 1889, section 72 was again amended "so as to read as follows." The section, as amended, provided that the commissioners then in office should hold until their successors were elected and qualified, but it did not fix the term of office, nor provide for any election thereto. Const. Or. art. 6, § 7, provides that "all officers * * * shall hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified." Held, that the commissioners in office when the amendment of 1889 was made were entitled to hold office until some provision should be made by statute for the election or appointment of their successors, and that the amendment of 1889 was not in conflict with Const. Or. art. 15, § 2, which prohibits the creation of any office the tenure of which is longer than four years. — State v. Simon, (Or.) 26 P. 170.

— Compensation.

10. One who is appointed a member of a committee to superintend the construction of water-works for a city, because of his knowledge and experience as a civil engineer, is not such a public officer as to preclude him from recovering compensation for the services rendered under such appointment, where no compensation therefor has previously been specifically provided. — City of Ellsworth v. Rossiter, (Kan.) 26 P. 674.

11. The recorder of the city of Fresno, under Deering's Pol. Code Cal. p. 890, §§ 806, 807, is vested with concurrent jurisdiction with justices of the peace of all actions, civil and criminal, arising within the corporate limits of the city, and shall receive such fees for his services as may be allowed by law to justices of the peace for like services, except that for his services in criminal prosecutions for violations of ordinances he shall be entitled to receive only such monthly salary as the board of trustees shall by ordinance prescribe. Held, that he is vested with a dual jurisdiction as recorder and justice, and that the fines he receives for violations of the Penal Code are to be paid over to the county treasurer, and he must be paid for his services as in the case of justices. — Prince v. City of Fresno, (Cal.) 26 P. 606.

Contracts.

12. Allegations by plaintiffs in an action against a city that they made a filing in one of the public streets of such city of a certain value, with the knowledge, consent, and direction of the city, with a demand for a judgment against the city for the amount stated, are sufficient to set forth a cause of action against the city for that amount, all improvements of the public streets in the city, and all changes to be made therein, being wholly within the control of the city.—Ryan v. City of Coldwater, (Kan.) 26 P. 675.

13. Where all services expected or desired to be rendered under an appointment by a city have been fully and completely performed, and have been accepted and received by the city, the city is then liable to pay for them whatever they are reasonably worth, notwithstanding irregularities in the original employment.—City of Ellsworth v. Rossiter, (Kan.) 26 P. 674.

14. Under the city charter of Albina, § 18, subd. 6, (Sess. Acts Or. 1887, p. 176,) which confers on the city council power to grade and improve the streets, and keep them in repair, the city may, through and by its officers and agents, render itself liable for work in improving its streets, without an ordinance first passed authorizing the same; and, where an ordinance has been duly passed directing the grading of a street, the contractor may recover for extra work which he was directed to do by individual members of the council, constituting a majority, and which was accepted by the city on its completion, though such extra work was never directed to be done at a council meeting.—Murphy v. City of Albina, (Or.) 26 P. 234.

Public improvements.

15. Plaintiff's petition alleged that defendant, a city of the second class, had sold its negotiable bonds to the amount of $10,000, and was about to use the proceeds in purchasing a site for and in erecting a city hall, and prayed an injunction to prevent the expenditure of the proceeds of the bonds for that purpose. Held, that the petition did not state a case authorizing the state to maintain an action for injunction, defendant having authority to use such proceeds in the manner proposed under Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 759, authorizing a city of the second class to purchase and hold real estate, and paragraph 818, authorizing it to provide public buildings for the accommodation of its officers.—City of Argentine v. State, (Kan.) 26 P. 751.

16. In a suit to enjoin the mayor and street commissioner from changing the grade of a street in a city of the second class, which is authorized by statute to change the grade of its streets, the unlawfulness of the change is not established by averments that the street commissioner is about to excavate and change the grade "without authority of law," and that the mayor is "unlawfully" procuring and suffering the excavation to be done.—Kemper v. Campbell, (Kan.) 26 P. 53.

17. Where a statute gives the board of supervisors authority to order a street "graded or regraded," they may order the regrading though the property owners have already borne the expense of grading.—McVerry v. Boyd, (Cal.) 26 P. 885.

18. In a proceeding by a city to appropriate for a street a county road, and condemn defendant's reversionary interest, the admission of oral evidence of the proceedings of the county court, testimony as to the practicability of the route for city purposes, conjointly with opinions as to the value of the reversionary interest, permitting deeds of property adjoining the road to be read from the record entries, and instructions to the jury that the city having made street cuttings across it, so that travel is unsafe, is not an abandonment of the road, are not prejudicial to the substantial rights of defendant.—City of Portland v. King, (Or.) 26 P. 378.

19. Acts Cal. 1871-72, § 7, relating to the granting of contracts for street improvements by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, provides that, if the contractor desires to have the time for completing his contract extended, he must make application to the board of supervisors, and "under the direction of the board" the superintendent of streets may extend the time, and that on passage of the resolution by the board the superintendent shall cause the same to be recorded. Held, that the duties of the superintendent are ministerial only, the extension being granted by the board, and his failure to record the resolution of extension during the life of the contract does not render the extension invalid, if the resolution was passed in time.—McVerry v. Boyd, (Cal.) 26 P. 885.

20. The time specified by the board of supervisors for the completion of certain street work in the published proposals for bids, and the award of the contract, was 26 days, but the contract made by the superintendent of streets and contractor gave 30 days. Held, the contract was void, and assessments to pay for work done thereunder could not be enforced.—Brook v. Luning, (Cal.) 26 P. 972.

21. Act Cal. March 18, 1885, authorizing the improvement of a street, provided "that the street superintendent shall thereupon cause to be conspicuously posted along the line of said contemplated improvement, at not more than three hundred feet in distance apart, but not less than three in all, or, when the work to be done is the improvement of an entire crossing, in front of each quarter block liable to be assessed, notices" of the contemplated improvement. Held, that where the improvement contemplated is the grading of the street for several blocks, posting notices at intervals of 300 feet is sufficient, though the improvement includes several crossings.—Miller v. Mayo, (Cal.) 26 P. 864.

Damages.

22. Laws Kan. 1881, c. 37, § 18, provides that, when the grade of any street shall have been established, it shall not be changed until the damages to property owners, which may be caused by such change, shall have been assessed and paid. Held, that the measure of damages was the difference between the market values immediately before and after the change of grade, and, when the value of the property was not diminished by the change, the owner was entitled to no damages.—Parker v. City of Atchison, (Kan.) 26 P. 435.

Assessments.

23. A property owner cannot object to the assessment by reason of the street superintendent's omission to approve the contractor's bond.—Miller v. Mayo, (Cal.) 26 P. 864.

24. St. Cal. 1869-70, p. 482, and Civil Code Cal. § 498, requiring the owners of a railroad to improve a certain portion of the streets over which their track is laid, do not require that they shall be assessed for portion of the expense of improving the street under a contract between the city and contractors.—McVerry v. Boyd, (Cal.) 26 P. 885.

25. Laws Kan. 1887, c. 90, § 4, (Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 557,) relating to cities of the first class, after providing for payment of the cost of opening, grading, etc., streets, etc., "out of the general improvement fund, except as otherwise provided by law," and that "for all paving, macadamizing, curbing, and guttering of the streets and alleys the assessments shall be made for the full cost thereof on each block separately," further provides for the grading of any street or part thereof, on the petition of the abutting owners, at their expense, and for the assessment of "the cost of such improvement against the lots and parcels of land abutting on such street so improved." Held, that the cost of grading a portion of a street on such a petition should be assessed on the whole length of the part of the street embraced in the petition, as one taxing district, and not separately on each block thereof for the improvement in front of it.—Simpson v. City of Kansas City, (Kan.) 26 P. 721.

26. Where a property owner contests the validity of an assessment for street improvements on the ground that the expense of improving a portion of the street occupied by a railroad should have been assessed against the railroad company, the burden is on him to show that such expense was included in the assessment against him.—McVerry v. Boyd, (Cal.) 26 P. 885.

27. Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 590, authorizes cities of the first class to make special assessments for paving streets, and provides that "no suit to set aside the said special assessments or to enjoin the making of the same shall be brought, nor any defense to the validity thereof be allowed, after the expiration of 30 days from the time the amount due on each lot or piece of ground is ascertained." Held, that the amount due is ascertained when the ordinance making the assessment and designating the amount levied on each lot is published and takes effect, and, after 30 days from that time, the collection of the assessment cannot be enjoined on account of irregularities in the proceedings.—Hammerslough v. City of Kansas City, (Kan.) 26 P. 496.

28. Where a contract made by a superintendent of streets was void, an assessment for the improvement could not become valid by failure of defendant to appeal from the board of supervisors, as allowed by Act Cal. 1873, § 12.—Brock v. Luning, (Cal.) 26 P. 972.

— Enforcement of assessment.

29. Where Act Cal. March 18, 1885, authorizing the improvement of a street, provides that the expense incurred "shall be assessed upon the lots fronting thereon * * * in proportion to the frontage," a complaint in an action to foreclose a lien for such assessments, which alleges that assessment was made "on property benefited by such street improvement," is bad on demurrer.—Miller v. Mayo, (Cal.) 26 P. 864.

30. After a contract for street improvement has been completed, a property owner cannot, in an action to enforce the lien of the assessment, question the sufficiency of a power of attorney under which the contract was entered into.—McVerry v. Boyd, (Cal.) 26 P. 885.

Fiscal management and taxation.

31. Where funds derived from the sale of bonds of a city of the third class are received either by the city treasurer or other person acting in behalf of the city, the entire amount should, on demand, be paid into the city treasury, and such persons cannot fix their own compensation for services in respect to such funds, or withhold a part of the proceeds as such compensation, but any such claim must be presented to the city council in writing, and allowed in the manner prescribed by statute.—City of Syracuse v. Reed, (Kan.) 26 P. 1043.

32. Act Cal. April 24, 1858, consolidating the city and county of Sacramento, provided for "liquidating, funding, and paying" the outstanding debts of the old city government by the issuance of interest-bearing bonds. To pay the accruing interest and redeem the bonds, 55 per cent. of the city revenue was set aside as a sinking fund, and the board of supervisors of the new consolidated government was required to levy an annual tax of 100 cents on the $100 for municipal purposes. Held, that the surrender of their claims by the creditors of the old city government, and their acceptance of the bonds issued by the new consolidated government on the faith of the above provisions for their payment, constituted a contract between the creditors and the consolidated government which cannot be affected by subsequent legislation, and that mandamus would issue on the application of the bondholders to compel the levy of the taxes by the legal successor of the consolidated city and county.—Meyer v. Brown, 26 P. 281, 65 Cal. 583.

— Bonds.

33. The fact that bonds of a city and county were issued by the officers of the consolidated government in payment of claims which they knew to be illegal will not effect the validity of the bonds in the hands of bona fide holders, where the municipality has authority to issue them.—Meyer v. Brown, 26 P. 281, 65 Cal. 583.

34. By Act Cal. March 26, 1851, the city of Sacramento was incorporated, and provision made that it might sue and be sued under its corporate name of the "Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento." Under provisions of acts of April 26, 1853, and April 10, 1854, it issued bonds payable July 1, 1874. By Act May 1, 1858, the city and county of Sacramento were united under the name of the "City and County of Sacramento," the act providing that the city and county was thereby made the successor of the mayor and common council, and the property and rights of the latter corporation transferred to and vested in the former. It was also provided that the city and council should not be subject to a suit, or its property liable for debt. By Act April 25, 1863, the inhabitants within the limits of the city of Sacramento as defined in the act of March 26, 1851, were made a body politic under the name of the "City of Sacramento," and all property which on April 30, 1858, was vested in the "Mayor and Common Council," etc., and such as had since been acquired within the described city limits for municipal purposes, was transferred to the new corporation, and provision made that it might be sued on any bond or contract thereafter made. Held, that the corporations created by the acts of 1858 and 1863 were respectively, in law, the successors of the corporation that issued the bonds, and liable to be sued thereon.—Bates v. Gregory, (Cal.) 26 P. 591.

35. Although Act Cal. March 22, 1864, providing that the holders of all claims against the city of Sacramento which accrued prior to January 1, 1859, might present the same to the board of trustees, and it should issue bonds payable February 1, 1903, for all such claims as it might consider legal and just, does not limit the time within which an application for refunding should be made, still a failure to present them and demand new bonds in their place until after they had become barred by limitations would give the board the right to refuse to issue them.—Bates v. Gregory, (Cal.) 26 P. 591.

— Taxation.

36. A city had done some work on a street as far out as a certain farm, which was inside the corporate limits, and about a mile from the platted portion of the city, and had removed nuisances therefrom, and police protection had been afforded in the immediate vicinity on sundry occasions. Held, that the farm was within the range of municipal improvements and benefits, and subject to taxation.—Cook v. Crandall, (Utah,) 26 P. 927.

NE EXEAT.

When writ granted.

1. Where a guardian and his wife are insolvent, and are about to leave the United States, taking with them the ward's property for the purpose of defrauding her of her inheritance, their arrest on a writ of ne exeat is not in violation of Const. Colo. art. 2, § 12, providing that "no person shall be imprisoned for debt, unless * * * in cases of tort, or where there is a strong presumption of fraud."—People v. Barton, (Colo.) 26 P. 149.

2. Under Gen. St. Colo. § 1604, providing that the district court may remove any guardian and appoint another in his stead and make all orders necessary to compel the guardian to account, it may issue a writ of ne exeat detaining the guardian and his wife until they shall give bond, the complaint alleging that they and the sureties on the guardian's bond are insolvent, and that the latter and his wife have property of the ward's, and are about to leave the United States, taking it with them, for the purpose of defrauding her of her inheritance.—People v. Barton, (Colo.) 26 P. 149.

What constitutes.

1. In an action for personal injuries where it appeared that plaintiff, a child of eight years, was invited by one of the defendants, in the presence of the other, to ride on a narrow pole drawn by a horse to propel machinery, it was not error to charge that if the jury should find that the sweep was a dangerous place for plaintiff to ride, and that defendants, having reason to know that it was dangerous, permitted her to ride upon it in dangerous proximity to the machinery, and that because of her tender years and immature judgment she was incapable of comprehending and guarding against the danger, and under such circumstances was injured, it would be evidence of negligence.—Rosenberg v. Durfree, (Cal.) 26 P. 793.

2. A complaint alleging that defendant negligently left open a hatchway on its vessel, and that plaintiff's intestate was struck and thrown down said hatchway by the negligence of defendant's employee in loading the vessel, states a cause of action.—Davies v. Oceanic S. S. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 827.

3. In an action for personal injuries it appeared that plaintiff, a child of eight years, was invited by one of the defendants, in the presence of the other, to ride on a narrow pole drawn by a horse to propel machinery, which in its circuit passed near to portions of the machinery then in motion; that she lost her hat, and told defendant in charge of the sweep to stop the horse and let her get it; that he told her to pick it up next round; that she tried to do so, lost her balance, and threw out her arm to regain it, when her hand was caught in the cog-wheel, and crushed. Held, that a verdict for plaintiff was supported by the evidence.—Rosenberg v. Durfree, (Cal.) 26 P. 793.

Contributory negligence.

4. An instruction that a child of such tender years and immature judgment as to be incapable of comprehending the danger to which it is exposed, and of exercising the necessary precaution in guarding against it, cannot be charged with negligence in exposing itself to threatened danger, and that in determining this proposition the jury must consider the age, sex, and all the conditions surrounding plaintiff at the time of the injury, is not erroneous as misleading, or as instructing the jury that the machinery by which the child was injured was dangerous.—Rosenberg v. Durfree, (Cal.) 26 P. 793.

Pleading.

5. In an action for personal injuries a general allegation of negligence is insufficient.—McPherson v. Pacific Bridge Co., (Or.) 26 P. 560.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

Accommodation paper.

1. Where one of the makers of a note signed only as accommodation maker, without knowledge that appellant was to sign it afterwards, appellant's subsequent signing is not such an alteration as will avoid the note as to all the makers, including himself, when he received part of the loan.—Hochmark v. Richler, (Colo.) 26 P. 818.

Liability of indorsers—Demand and notice.

2. The indorsee of a forged bill of exchange, on its dishonor, may maintain an action against his indorsers for a recovery of the consideration, which has failed, without proof of demand and notice.—Hamer v. Brainard, (Utah,) 26 P. 299.

3. W. and R. entered into a written contract whereby W. was to furnish to R. wagons to be sold by R. on commission, with the privilege of taking promissory notes therefor, all such notes to be taken upon blanks furnished by W., and to be indorsed by R., he "waiving protest, notice of protest, and non-payment," and agreeing to pay any of them not paid at maturity. On their final settlement, R. delivered to W. two promissory notes executed by third parties, payable to the order of R., not taken upon blanks furnished by W., nor for wagons or any property in which W. had any interest, and indorsed merely with the name of B., without any waiver of protest, notice of protest, and non-payment. Held, that the notes were not given in pursuance of the contract, and that R. was not liable upon them on their non-payment by the makers at maturity and failure to give notice thereof to him.—Studebaker v. Ryan, (Kan.) 26 P. 700.

Actions on.

4. Where an indorsee declares on a negotiable note by setting out a copy with all indorsements, and alleging ownership, and the indorsements are in blank and without date, the petition is sufficient to show that the title was transferred by indorsements, and the possession of the note by the indorsee raises a presumption of law that the note was transferred before maturity, and that the indorsee is a bona fide holder for value.—First Nat. Bank v. Elliott, (Kan.) 26 P. 487.

5. In an action on a promissory note against the maker, where no illegality or fraud is charged, it is not competent to allege or prove a contemporaneous parol agreement, under which the payee agreed to look to a third person for payment.—Portland Nat. Bank v. Scott, (Or.) 26 P. 378.

6. In an action on a promissory note by the payee against the maker, where the note is admitted to have been executed and delivered by defendant to plaintiff, the burden of proof to defeat the note or any part thereof, by showing a want of consideration or failure of a part of the consideration, is upon defendant.—Sollenberger v. Stephens, (Kan.) 26 P. 690.

7. In an action on a note given in payment, among other things, of an antecedent note, the jury having found that its delivery was not, as contended by defendant, conditional on the surrender of the antecedent note, and it being proven that such prior note had not been indorsed, there was no error in refusing to compel the execution of a bond of indemnity against the original note as a condition to recovery on the new note.—Mackey v. Mackey, (Colo.) 26 P. 554.

Newly-Discovered Evidence.

See New Trial, 9.

NEW TRIAL.

Appointment of executrix, see Executors and Administrators, 6.

In criminal cases, see Criminal Law, 42, 43.

Application.

1. Comp. Laws Utah, § 3402, provides that the party intending to move for a new trial must, within 10 days after verdict, file with the clerk, and serve upon the adverse party, a notice of his intention; and, if the motion is made on a statement of the case, he must within 10 days after service of notice, or such further time as the court may allow, prepare a draft of the statement, and serve the same upon the adverse party. Held, that an order giving 30 days in which to prepare and serve such a statement does not extend the time for filing and serving notice.—McGrath v. Tallent, (Utah,) 26 P. 574.

2. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 659, subd. 3, provides that, if a motion for a new trial is made upon a statement of the case, the moving party must within 10 days after service of the notice, or such further time as the court may allow, prepare a draft of the statement, and serve the same or a copy thereof upon the adverse party. Held, that an order allowing 30 days to prepare a "statement on motion for a new trial" carries with it the same extension of time to serve the statement.—Bryant v. Sternfeld, (Cal.) 26 P. 1091.

Misconduct of jury—Evidence.

3. Misconduct of a jury cannot be shown by evidence of statements made by a juror after the trial, and not under oath.—Cain Bros. Co. v. Wallace, (Kan.) 26 P. 445.

Sufficiency of evidence to sustain verdict.

4. The granting of a new trial, on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the decision, is in the discretion of the court, and will not be disturbed, unless there has been a manifest abuse of discretion.—Crooks v. Miller, (Cal.) 26 P. 615.

5. Where the verdict of the jury is manifestly against the evidence, and the trial judge refuses to set aside the verdict, it is the duty of the appellate court to reverse the case, and grant a new trial.—Heifrich v. Ogden City Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 295.

6. Where special findings of a jury, returned with a general verdict, and essential to a recovery, are unsupported by any evidence, a motion for a new trial should be granted.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Long, (Kan.) 26 P. 682.

Excessive verdict—Remittitur.

7. In an action for conversion of household goods against a constable who sold them under execution, the verdict assessed plaintiff's damages at $196. Plaintiff testified that the furniture cost $226.90, had been in use four years, and was now worth $196. The purchaser stated that the goods "looked to be used up pretty well." The articles were sold separately at one bid for $72.25. Held, that it was not an abuse of discretion to require plaintiff to accept $135.60, and remit the excess, under the alternative of a new trial.—Cunningham v. Quirk, (Mont.) 26 P. 184.

Surprise.

8. Where defendant's evidence is admitted without objection, and no application for a postponement of the trial is made, plaintiff cannot urge, as ground for new trial, that there was a variance between the answer and the evidence by which he was surprised.—Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Co. v. Martin, (Kan.) 26 P. 424.

Newly-discovered evidence.

9. In an action on a renewal note, newly-discovered evidence, tending to raise a doubt as to the accuracy of plaintiff's testimony that at the time of the giving of the new note he had the old note in his possession, furnishes no ground for a new trial, as it does not tend to support the defense that the delivery of the new note was conditional on the surrender of the old note.—Mackey v. Mackey, (Colo.) 26 P. 554.

Bias of judge—Sufficiency of showing.

10. The mere expression of the opinions of witnesses that the court entertained bias and prejudice for and against some of the parties in the action, without a statement of the facts and grounds upon which such opinions were founded, cannot be regarded as testimony, and is entitled to no consideration in an application for a new trial.—Winfield Nat. Bank v. Croco, (Kan.) 26 P. 939.

v.26p.—75

NOTARY PUBLIC.

Misconduct—Liability of sureties.

1. A notary public, who was also engaged in negotiating loans, represented to plaintiff that certain persons desired to borrow, and gave her what purported to be mortgages executed by them, to which he had appended his certificate of acknowledgment, and on the faith of which plaintiff gave him the money to be delivered to the mortgagees. The mortgages were forgeries. The notary converted the money to his own use, and absconded, and plaintiff brought suit on his bond. Held that, as receiving money is no part of the official duty of a notary, his sureties are not liable for that fraudulently retained by him, but only for the damages caused plaintiff by the falsehood of his certificate of acknowledgment. McFarland, J., dissenting.—Heidt v. Minor, (Cal.) 26 P. 627; Id. 629.

2. The measure of plaintiff's damages from this element of the notary's fraud is the value of the mortgages if they had been valid. McFarland, J., dissenting.—Heidt v. Minor, (Cal.) 26 P. 627; Id. 629.

NOVATION.

What constitutes.

Plaintiff sold defendant wine at a certain price, a written contract of sale being signed in duplicate. By mutual mistake, one copy recited a less price than that agreed, and this copy was assigned by defendant to a third party, to whom, by defendant's direction, the wine was delivered. Held that, in the absence of evidence showing a release of defendant and an acceptance of his assignee, there was no novation of parties, even though plaintiff may have known of the assignment, and received partial payments from the assignee.—Haubert v. Mausshardt, (Cal.) 26 P. 899.

NUISANCE.

Maintenance of ditch in public street.

1. Since the city of Denver acquired its streets subject to the prior lawfully acquired right of a ditch company to construct and maintain a ditch in some of them, one who, long after the construction of the ditch, purchased land abutting on such a street, cannot recover from the ditch company for the maintenance of the ditch, unless he suffers special damages thereby.—Walley v. Platte & Denver Ditch Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 129.

2. Allegations in the complaint that a ditch of a water company is dangerous to the public health and safety, that it is a public nuisance, and that it is dangerous to the health and safety of all who have occasion to transact business in the vicinity, do not authorize the recovery of special damages.—Walley v. Platte & Denver Ditch Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 129.

Building in street.

3. In a suit to abate a building in a street as a nuisance, special damage to the plaintiff entitling him to sue is not shown by an averment that the building is situate between the plaintiff's hotel and a depot, and obstructs the view of the hotel from the depot so that travelers have gone to other hotels, who would otherwise have come to the plaintiff's, whereby its value has been greatly diminished.—Stufflebeam v. Montgomery, (Idaho,) 26 P. 175.

4. A house built in a public alley so as to partly abut upon plaintiff's lot, and prevent access to the public highway, is a private nuisance, and plaintiff may maintain an action to abate it, although she has suffered no actual pecuniary damage.—Hargro v. Hodgdon, (Cal.) 26 P. 1106.

5. Where a complaint to abate a nuisance does not explicitly state that plaintiff has sustained an injury different in kind to the general public, it is insufficient on special demurrer; but when such injury appears by inference it is proper to overrule a motion for judgment on the pleadings at the commencement of the trial.—Hargro v. Hodgdon, (Cal.) 26 P. 1106.

— Injunction.

6. The owner of a slaughter-house, who slaughters a large number of animals daily, and has no other place for slaughtering, is specially injured by an obstruction in the highway which wholly cuts him off from access to the slaughter-house, and may enjoin the nuisance by a suit in his own name, under Civil Code Cal. § 8498, providing that "a private person may maintain an action for a public nuisance if it is specially injurious to himself, but not otherwise.—Gardner v. Stroever, (Cal.) 26 P. 618.

7. Though the obstruction of a highway exists at the commencement of a suit to enjoin it, it may be abated by a mandatory injunction, as well as by a judgment that the obstruction be removed and the nuisance abated.—Gardner v. Stroever, (Cal.) 26 P. 618.

8. A brass foundry and machinery incident thereto are not, prima facie, nuisances, and in an action by an adjoining proprietor for damages and injunction, where the evidence shows that the smoke-stack and steam escape-pipe are too low; that the boiler and engine are not properly set; that the fuel is not such as should be used; that the dipping of brass castings in diluted acids was practiced upon the sidewalk,—the resulting annoyances are such as can be remedied, and an injunction restraining defendant from operating the factory at all is error, and must be modified. Works, J., dissenting.—McMenomy v. Baud, (Cal.) 26 P. 795.

— Action for damages.

9. Where a mill-dam subjects the plaintiff's land to overflow, he may join a cause of action for damages with one to abate the mill-dam as a nuisance.—Drinkwater v. Sauble, (Kan.) 26 P. 433.

Qualification.

1. Pol. Code Cal. § 907, requires an officer qualify (1) within 10 days after notice of his appointment or election; or, (2) when no such notice has been given, within 15 days from the commencement of his term of office. Held, that one appointed, without any knowledge on his part, as director of the state board of agriculture, may qualify within 10 days after the receipt of his commission from the governor; and the fact that it was not received by him until after the expiration of 15 days from the commencement of his term will not render his qualification invalid, as the second clause of section 907 applies only appointment.—People v. Perkins, (Cal.) 26 P. 245.

2. Pol. Code Cal. § 907, requires an officer to qualify (1) within 10 days after notice of his appointment or election; or, (2) when no such notice has been given, within 15 days from the commencement of his term of office. Held, that where an appointee had no knowledge of his appointment until after the receipt of his commission, his failure to qualify within the 15 days from the commencement of his term was not a "refusal or neglect" to qualify, within the meaning of Pol. Code Cal. § 996, which provides that an office becomes vacant on the "refusal or neglect" of the appointee to file his official bond within the time prescribed by law.—*People v. Joinder.

1. Plaintiff and two others were appointed by a city as a committee to superintend the construction of water-works for the city, plaintiff being appointed because of his knowledge and experience as a civil engineer. Any two of the committee were authorized to act. They all entered upon the discharge of their duties under the appointment, but did not all do the same amount of work. The work for which they were appointed was all performed and completed, and was accepted by the city. Held, that plaintiff might thereafter maintain an action against the city for compensation for his individual services, without joining with him as plaintiffs the other members of the committee, under Civil Code Or. § 35, providing that "all persons having an interest in the subject of the action, and in obtaining the relief demanded, may be joined as plaintiffs," and section 37, providing that "of the parties to the action those who are united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs or defendants."—City of Ellsworth v. Rossiter, (Kan.) 26 P. 674.

2. Code Or. § 381, which provides that "if the consent of any one who should have been joined as plaintiff cannot be obtained he may be made a defendant, the reason thereof being stated in the complaint," does not apply to actions at law.—State Ins. Co. v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 838.

Necessary parties.

3. In an action for diverting water, parties whose rights are subordinate to those of plaintiffs need not be joined, although they and plaintiffs are tenants in common of the water.—Spanish Fork City v. Hopper, (Utah,) 26 P. 293.

Real party in interest.

4. Where property is insured for less than its value, and is destroyed by the negligence of a third party, the insurance companies who have paid the owner the insurance money must, in an action to recover damages for the destruction of the property, be joined with the owner, or if he refuses to join he must be made a party defendant, under the provision of the Oregon Code that an action shall be brought in the name of the real party.—Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., (Or.) 26 P. 857.

5. A written order by the owner of personal property, authorizing plaintiff to dispose of it, and collect the proceeds, does not constitute plaintiff a "trustee of an express trust" within the meaning of Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 6, which authorizes a "trustee of an express trust" to sue without joining the persons for whose benefit the action is prosecuted. Dz Wirt, J., dissenting.—Swenson v. Kleinschmidt, (Mont.) 26 P. 198.

Objection for misjoinder—How taken.

6. A misjoinder of parties is waived if the objection is not taken by demurrer or answer.—Hurd v. Simpson, (Kan.) 26 P. 465.

PARTITION.

Who may maintain suit.

The plaintiff in a suit for partition having acquired title to an undivided half of a lot from one who had for 24 years been exercising acts of ownership, paying taxes, building sidewalks, and receiving small sums for its use, the plaintiff can sue for partition unless the defendants, who own the other half, and claim the whole interest, show that before suit they absolutely and distinctly denied and repudiated the interest of the plaintiff.—Jockheck v. Davies, (Kan.) 26 P. 86.

PARTNERSHIP.

Mining, see Mines and Mining, 2-4.

Petition in insolvency proceedings, see Insolvency, 5, 6.

Publishing names of members.

1. A firm name showing only the surnames of the partners is not "a fictitious name," nor a "designation not showing the names of the partners," within Civil Code Cal. § 2466, requiring every firm doing business under such name or designation to file and publish a certificate showing the full names and residences of its members. Following Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 P. 659.—McLean v. Crow, (Cal.) 26 P. 596; Carlock v. Cagnacci, Id. 597.

Authority of partner to bind firm.

2. It is no defense to negotiable paper, executed in the firm name by one of the partners, that he had no authority to do so, unless it be shown that the holder had notice of his want of authority.—Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank v. McCaskill, (Colo.) 26 P. 821.

Accounting between partners.

3. Shortly before his death, a deceased partner sold a lot of cattle, and received the purchase money therefor. At about the time of this sale the purchaser executed a trust-deed on land to secure a note for an amount about equal to the purchase price, which note was described as payable to the two partners. On a settlement of the partnership accounts before a referee, it appeared that the firm dealt in cattle, and the purchaser admitted that he had had no other dealings of similar import with the partnership or the deceased partner. Held, that these facts were sufficient to overcome the presumption that the sale was made on the deceased partner's individual account, arising from the fact that he had individual property, and that the transaction did not appear on the books of the partnership.—Hottel v. Mason, (Colo.) 26 P. 335.

Firm and private creditors.

4. Where a partnership creditor has acquired a lien on the separate property of one of the partners, he will not be deprived thereof at the instance of an individual creditor of the partner, nor compelled to postpone satisfaction of his execution until the individual creditor has been satisfied.—Barrett v. Furnish, (Or.) 26 P. 861.

Dissolution notice.

5. The dissolution of a partnership will not affect the rights of holders of negotiable paper executed thereafter in the firm name by one of the partners, unless such holders had notice of the dissolution.—Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank v. McCaskill, (Colo.) 26 P. 821.

Surviving partner.

6. Where the partnership business was continued for 18 months after the death of the copartner, the surviving partner, who was also one of the executors of the deceased copartner, must be regarded as acting in a fiduciary capacity for the heirs of his copartner, and held to a strict accountability on a settlement of the partnership affairs, though the widow of the deceased partner, who was a capable woman, had access to the partnership books at all times.—Hottel v. Mason, (Colo.) 26 P. 335.

7. During a partnership business, extending over four years, the books were kept under the supervision of both partners, but most of the entries were made by one member of the firm. His copartner, however, was active in conducting the business, had unrestricted access to the books, and might have familiarized himself with the accounts and the manner of keeping them. Held that, after the death of such copartner, it was error, on a settlement of the partnership accounts, to treat the surviving partner as a trustee, and to charge him with all omissions and inaccuracies in the partnership accounts, since both partners were in pari delicto in so far as the unsatisfactory condition of the firm books were concerned.—Hottel v. Mason, (Colo.) 26 P. 335.

Special partner—Authority.

8. A special partner, under the provisions of Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 3992, which prohibits him from transacting any business on account of the partnership, has no authority to make the partnership liable for his contracts as such special partner only.—Columbia Land & Cattle Co. v. Daly, (Kan.) 26 P. 1042; Same v. Murkins, Id.

Actions by.

9. Where plaintiffs sue as partners, the partnership should be alleged, but a failure to do so cannot be taken advantage of for the first time on appeal.—Fryer v. Breeze, (Colo.) 26 P. 817.

PATENTS FOR INVENTIONS.

Assignment.

1. In an action for the price of letters patent which were sold to a rival manufacturer, and were to be assigned as soon as the patentee had effected certain settlements with other parties, but which were not assigned until nearly three years thereafter, it appeared that the patents were delivered to defendant, and held by him, and that plaintiff ceased to manufacture thereunder, and entered defendant's employ. Held sufficient to support a finding that the delay in making the formal assignment was acquiesced in by both parties.—Scott v. Jackson, (Cal.) 26 P. 896.

2. Where the purchaser of patents takes and retains possession thereof, and derives the same benefit as if they had been formally assigned, and both parties act as if they had been assigned, the purchaser cannot complain that the formal assignments were tendered after one of the patents had expired.—Scott v. Jackson, (Cal.) 26 P. 898.

PAYMENT.

See, also, Release and Discharge.

What constitutes.

1. If goods are purchased from a jobber who is known to sell for himself and for others on commission, and the purchaser has no good reason to believe that the jobber does not own the goods, payment to him by a credit on a pre-existing debt will be a defense against the owner of the goods in a suit on an account for goods sold and delivered.—Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Co. v. Martin, (Kan.) 26 P. 424.

2. Where the owner of land, on the representation of another that he has an interest therein, pays him money for a release of his claim, with the understanding that it is to be repaid if he has no interest, he may recover the money if it is ascertained that the claimant has no interest, though a person who was present with such claimant when the land was purchased has stated to the owner the facts attending the purchase.—Putnam v. Dungan, (Cal.) 26 P. 904.

3. Where, in order to put an end to foreclosure proceedings, a mortgagor agrees to pay the amount due, together with interest, attorney's fees, and costs, but, a dispute arising as to the total amount due, he pays, under protest, more than he believes to be due, such payment is not under compulsion.—Rodgers v. Wittenmyer, (Cal.) 26 P. 369.

Application.

4. Where mortgagees in possession of the mortgaged estate receive therefrom a net income over and above their expenditures, they are under obligation to so apply such payments to reduce the more onerous undertakings of the debtor if it can be done consistently with their receipt of all he has contracted to pay them; and where, of several obligations secured by such mortgage, one bears compound and the others simple interest, the payments must be applied so as to first extinguish the one bearing compound interest.—Murdock v. Clarke, (Cal.) 26 P. 601.

PERJURY.

Indictment and information.

1. An indictment charged that the defendant named therein made out an account against a certain county for a specified sum of money in favor of himself, and attached thereto a statement that the charges were the legal and ordinary charges for the services named therein; that credit had been given the county for all payments and offsets to which it was entitled; and that the account was just, correct, due, and unpaid; which statement was sworn to before the county clerk of said county; and the account was then filed in his office by said defendant, to be presented to the board of county commissioners for their action thereon when they should meet; and also contained allegations showing that the statements contained in said account were false, and averred that the defendant, in making oath to said account acted willfully and corruptly. Held, that this was a sufficient charge of perjury, under the Kansas crimes act, § 148, providing that "every person who shall willfully and corruptly swear, testify, or affirm falsely to any material matter, upon any oath or affirmation or declaration legally administered in any cause, matter, or proceeding before any court, tribunal, public body, or officer, shall be deemed guilty of perjury."—State v. Gregory, (Kan.) 26 P. 747.

2. An information for subornation of perjury under Gen. St. Kan. 1889, par. 2287, which provides that "every person who shall procure any other person, by any means whatsoever, to commit a willful or corrupt perjury, in any cause, matter, or proceeding, in or concerning which such other person shall be legally sworn or affirmed, shall be adjudged guilty of subornation of perjury," is fatally defective where it fails to state that the false affidavit or testimony of the suborned witness was used, or procured to be used, in some cause, etc., before some court, public body, or officer.—State v. Geer, (Kan.) 26 P. 1027.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

A physician called by a man to attend a woman, supposed to be his wife, can recover for his services from the person summoning him, although the parties are not in fact legally married.—Gerlach v. Turner, (Cal.) 26 P. 870.

Demurrer.

1. An objection that several causes of action are stated in a petition, and are not separately stated or numbered, cannot be raised, under the Oregon Civil Code, by demurrer to the petition.—City of Ellsworth v. Rossiter, (Kan.) 26 P. 674.

2. Where defendants, after answering, demurred to the complaint, and the demurrer was overruled, exception thereto was waived by going to trial on the answer, when it contained no objection to the complaint.—Spanish Fork City v. Hopper, (Utah,) 26 P. 298.

Reply.

3. Where the answer in an action on a note admits the execution of the note, but alleges that it was void for want of consideration, in that it was given for usurious interest on moneys theretofore loaned by plaintiff to defendant, a reply to such answer is necessary under Civil Code Kan. § 128, which provides that every material allegation of new matter in the answer, not controverted by the reply, shall, for the purposes of the action, be taken as true.—Babcock v. Farmers' & Drovers' Bank, (Kan.) 26 P. 1037.

Amendment.

4. In a suit on a written contract for the construction of a building, the plaintiff may be allowed to amend at the trial by adding a quantum meruit count for labor and materials furnished.—School-Dist. No. 9 in Wabunsee County v. Boyer, (Kan.) 26 P. 484.

5. In an action by the guardian of a person claimed to have been non compos mentis to recover a gift, an amendment of the complaint to allow evidence of undue influence is not a surprise entitling defendants to a continuance, if it reasonably appeared from the complaint that undue influence was relied on.—Ellen v. Lewison, (Cal.) 26 P. 109.

6. An objection that the court required an amendment to the answer to be filed at once is without merit, where it appears that it was easily made.—Ellen v. Lewison, (Cal.) 26 P. 109.

7. Where an amendment is allowed, and the trial proceeds as if it had been made, the court on appeal will, in support of the judgment, regard the amendment as having been made.—Excelsior Manuff'g Co. v. Boyle, (Kan.) 26 P. 408.

8. Where the plaintiff amends at the trial by setting up a new cause of action, and the defendant objects on the ground that the amended petition states no cause of action, or, if any, that it is barred by the statute of limitations, the defendant cannot on appeal object to the amendment because it changes substantially the ground of complaint.—Parsons Water Co. v. Hill, (Kan.) 26 P. 412.

Discretion of trial court.

9. A refusal to strike from the files an amended petition, as a departure from the original petition, is not ground of reversal on appeal where no objectionable departure appears, nor any abuse of its discretion by the trial court.—Leroy & C. V. A. L. R. Co. v. Small, (Kan.) 26 P. 698.

10. In a proceeding to settle the priorities of judgment liens, where the creditor whose judgment was first rendered does not aver that a levy was made under his judgment within a year from its rendition, it is not an abuse of discretion to allow an amendment at the trial.—Excelsior Manuf'g Co. v. Boyle, (Kan.) 26 P. 408.

11. While the power to permit an amendment of the pleadings is vested in the court below, it ought to be liberally exercised in furtherance of justice, and the insertion of new additional allegations in support of the claim made by the plaintiff, when the subject-matter of the suit continues the same, is in the discretion of the trial court.—Baldock v. Atwood, (Or.) 26 P. 1058.

12. In a suit on a contract for the sale of land, the purchaser having pleaded that the contract was induced by fraud and had been rescinded therefor, it is not an abuse of discretion to allow the purchaser, on paying the costs and submitting to a continuance, to amend his answer so as to affirm the contract and claim damages for the fraud.—Stevens v. Matthewson, (Kan.) 26 P. 38.

13. The filing of amendatory and supplemental pleadings rests largely within the discretion of the trial court, and, unless there is a clear abuse of that discretion, its ruling will not be reversed.—Rogers v. Hodgson, (Kan.) 26 P. 732.

Bill of particulars—Amendment.

14. Permitting a plaintiff to amend the bill of particulars or petition the second time, so as to charge defendant as a copartnership instead of a corporation as originally alleged, being within the discretion of the trial court, is not ground of reversal.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bank of Glen Elder, (Kan.) 26 P. 680.

Exhibits.

15. In an action on a county treasurer's bond, it is within the discretion of the court to deny defendants' demand, under Code Wash. § 93, for a copy of the items of the account mentioned in the complaint, such accounts being public accounts, which it does not appear were not equally accessible to defendants as to plaintiff.—Ferry v. King County, (Wash.) 26 P. 537; Id. 539.

Verification.

16. Under Civil Code Kan. § 103, providing that, if a petition on an account is duly verified, it shall be taken as true unless denied under oath, the affidavit verifying the petition must be sworn to positively.—Tripp & Moore Boot & Shoe Co. v. Martin, (Kan.) 26 P. 424.

Pleading and proof—Variance.

17. In trover for wood, plaintiff alleged title in himself, and a conversion by defendants. Defendants set up a counter-claim, in which they alleged that the title originally had been in a third person, for whom plaintiff had done the cutting; that such third person had sold the wood to defendants; and that they had furnished supplies to plaintiff while engaged in the cutting. Plaintiff's replication consisted of a general denial. Held, that on the trial plaintiff could not admit the truth of the facts averred in the counter-claim, and introduce evidence in avoidance, as the issue raised by his general denial was the existence of the facts averred in the counter-claim.—Swenson v. Kleinschmidt, (Mont.) 26 P. 198.

18. Where the prayer of a petition asks for interest from a certain date, the plaintiff cannot recover interest from a prior date.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Weeks, (Kan.) 26 P. 410.

19. An allegation that a personal injury resulted from defective machinery is not sustained by proof that it resulted from the use of a "team" instead of machinery.—McPherson v. Pacific Bridge Co., (Or.) 26 P. 560.

20. Where, in a suit for specific performance, the complaint avers that the contract was made in favor of J. J. Stokes on August 21, 1889, and that the money was to be paid within 90 days, and that it was tendered November 16, 1889, but the proof shows that the contract was made June 20, and the money tendered September 18, 1889, and that it was in favor of J. J. Stokes & Co., there is no material variance between the allegations and the proof within the meaning of Hill's Code Or. § 96, providing that no such variance shall be deemed material unless the adverse party makes it appear that he was actually misled to his prejudice, and where such fact is not shown, plaintiff should be allowed to amend to conform to the proof.—Stokes v. Brown, (Or.) 26 P. 561.

Waiver of objections.

21. A defendant's exception to an order to strike out his affirmative defense is not waived by his filing a substituted answer.—Schulte v. Littlejohn, (Wash.) 26 P. 79.

22. Where defendant answers over after his demurrer to a complaint is overruled, and a verdict and judgment are rendered against him, the judgment will not be reversed on objection to the complaint, on appeal, though some of its material allegations appeared to be legal conclusions, and the breaches in the writing declared upon were defectively assigned.—Gschwander v. Cort, (Or.) 26 P. 621.

23. Where a demurrer to the petition is overruled and no exception taken, and afterwards a trial is had and judgment rendered against the defendant, the ruling on the demurrer cannot be reviewed in the supreme court.—Turner v. State, (Kan.) 26 P. 35.

24. Where a pleading denies the execution of a written instrument, and is verified by an attorney, and no objection is made to the verification until evidence is offered in support of the denial, it is not error to overrule an objection made on the ground that the affidavit does not show that the facts were within the personal knowledge of the attorney.—Hoopes v. Buford & George Implement Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 34.

PLEDGE.

By factor, see Factors and Brokers, 4.

Rights of pledgee.

Where negotiable promissory notes, pledged before maturity to an innocent holder to secure a pre-existing debt due from the payee to the pledgee, are subject to equitable defenses as between the maker and payee, and are of a greater amount than the pre-existing debt, the recovery of the pledgee against the maker in an action against him alone is limited to the amount of the pre-existing debt.—Farmers' State Bank v. Blevins, (Kan.) 26 P. 1044.

Police Commissioners.

See Municipal Corporations, 9.

POWERS.

Construction.

A power of attorney from the husband to the wife, authorizing her to transact all business connected with "buying, selling, transferring, or mortgaging real estate," including the signing and delivery of all necessary papers, does not empower her to convey land belonging to her husband in consideration of the grantee's supporting her infant daughter until she becomes of age, as such conveyance is not a sale, but a conveyance in trust, not authorized by the power.—Coulter v. Portland Trust Co., (Or.) 26 P. 565; Same v. Rash, Id.; Same v. Warner, Id.

Dismissal.

1. Where a suit is fictitious it may be dismissed after the assignment of a judgment by default, since there are no rights under such a judgment to assign.—Haley v. Eureka County Bank, (Nev.) 26 P. 64.

— Motion by amicus curiae.

2. Defendants purchased property, and organized a company, of which they elected plaintiff secretary. Afterwards, to settle their title to the property, they transferred the title thereto to plaintiff, and had him sue them for its conversion, agreeing to submit to a judgment by default, after which plaintiff was to transfer to them all his legal rights in the property. Defendants retained and paid plaintiff's attorney. It appeared that plaintiff had paid nothing for the property. Plaintiff claimed that the suit was not fictitious, but hostile to defendants. Held, that the suit should be dismissed as fictitious, on motion by defendants' counsel, as amicus curiae, supported by affidavits. Bislow, J., dissenting.—Haley v. Eureka County Bank, (Nev.) 26 P. 64.

3. No notice is necessary before motion by an amicus curiae to dismiss an action on the ground that it is fictitious.—Haley v. Eureka County Bank, (Nev.) 26 P. 64.

Filing pleadings.

4. Under Prac. Act Colo. 1885, providing that the pleadings shall be filed within 10 days after service of a copy of the answer, but not imposing any penalty for a failure to file them, a defendant who has served his answer in apt time should be permitted to defend, notwithstanding his failure to file the answer within 10 days after such service of it.—Haley v. Breeze, (Colo.) 26 P. 843.

Nunc pro tunc order.

5. Where, on foreclosure, the judge made an order substituting in place of plaintiff his successor in interest, but such order was not entered by the clerk, a subsequent order nunc pro tunc making the substitution becomes a part of the judgment roll, as provided by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 670, and binds the judgment debtor in an action by the judgment creditor's executors to collect the same.—Crim v. Kessing, (Cal.) 26 P. 1074.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

See, also, Attorney and Client; Factors and Brokers.

Payment to agent, see Payment, 1.

Authority of agent.

1. Where the authority of an agent to purchase grain on his own inspection in wagon-load lots is conceded, and the issue is as to his authority to purchase in large quantities on his own inspection, it is competent to show that he inspected, received, and paid for different large lots of grain delivered at his principal's warehouse.—Cain Bros. Co. v. Wallaoe, (Kan.) 26 P. 445.

2. A manufacturer wrote to a customer that for the next year he had 14 new patterns of furniture, and that "our Mr. W. will call on you early in January, and talk to you about handling the line next year." The agent called, and defendants claim to have bought old patterns of goods, which were not delivered. Held, the letter only gave authority to sell the new patterns, and the customer could not recover for a failure to deliver old patterns of furniture.—McCord & Bradfield Furniture Co. v. Wollpert, (Cal.) 26 P. 960.

3. A contract, made by an agent without authority or subsequent ratification, to cancel a debt due from the firm, of which defendant was formerly a member, in consideration of his buying goods for his present employer from plaintiff, was not a defense to an action for the debt.—Burlock v. Cross, (Colo.) 26 P. 143.

Ratification.

4. Where an owner gives his agent authority to rent his premises, and it is not shown whether the authority of the agent as to the length of the lease was limited or not, and the agent leases for two years, while the owner claims that he had no authority to execute a lease for more than a year, but notwithstanding accepts rent from the tenants for four months after the end of the first year, he thereby ratifies the lease for the entire term, and cannot demand a higher rent for the balance of the term, and oust the tenant for refusal to pay it.—Burkhard v. Mitchell, (Colo.) 26 P. 657.

Rights and liabilities inter se.

5. An agent, having charge of certain property for an absent firm, was directed to sell it for about $5,000, and, wishing to purchase for himself, reported his acceptance, subject to approval of an offer of $4,500 net, and sent a deed of the property with the grantee's name omitted. The owner executed the deed, and, returning it to the agent through the firm, accepted the agent's check for $4,500, which was the full value of the land. The agent did not understand himself to be in the owner's employ, nor that a selling agent's name could not be written in a deed as grantee without the grantor's consent, but, intending no fraud, entered into possession. Held, that the heirs of the grantor could not set up fraudulent concealment as a ground for ejectment.—Burke v. Bours, (Cal.) 26 P. 102.

Liability of agent to third persons.

6. Where defendant bought wood for another without disclosing his agency, he thereby rendered himself liable for its value, at plaintiff's option.—Mackey v. Briggs, (Colo.) 26 P. 131.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Rights of surety against principal's assignee.

A debtor assigned his notes and accounts to a creditor, who agreed "to turn over sufficient accounts or notes to satisfy the claim" of a certain bank. The bank refused to receive notes or accounts in satisfaction of its claim. After the assignee had collected more than the amount of the claim, he was garnished by other creditors, and a receiver of the notes and accounts was appointed by consent of the parties. The sureties on the claim held by the bank were compelled to pay it, and, after the appointment of the receiver, they demanded of the assignee notes and accounts sufficient to satisfy the claim. Held, that the obligation of the assignee was to turn over notes or accounts, and not to pay to the bank money collected by him, and that the sureties had no cause of action against the assignee, but should have asserted any equities they had in the proceedings in which the receiver was appointed.—Howell v. Hough, (Kan.) 26 P. 436.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Relinquishment of entry as consideration for promise, see Contracts, 1.

Title to support ejectment, see Ejectment, 1-6.

Entries under federal laws — Riparian rights.

1. Under the act of congress of March 14, 1880, (21 St. 141,) providing that any settler "on any of the public lands of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws, shall be allowed the same time to file his homestead application and perfect his original entry in the United States land-office, as is now allowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws to put their claims on record, and his right shall relate back to the date of settlement, the same as if he settled under the pre-emption laws," a homestead claimant's riparian rights attach from the date of his settlement, provided he complies with the law, and obtains a patent for the land, and when such patent is issued it relates to the date of settlement, and cuts off the right to divert a stream of water running through such homestead. Following Sturr v. Beck, 10 S. Ct. 850.—Faull v. Cooke, (Or.) 26 P. 662.

— Town-sites.

2. Under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2387-2389, providing for the entry, as a town-site of public land "settled upon and occupied as a town-site, not subject to entry under the agricultural pre-emption laws," by the corporate authorities or the county judge, "in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof, according to their respective interests," a person who has, in good faith, actually occupied and improved a lot on a town-site so entered, need not be an actual resident of the town-site to entitle him to recover possession of such lot.—Greiner v. Fulton, (Kan.) 26 P. 705.

3. Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2392, providing that "no title shall be acquired" under the provisions relating to town-sites, and the sale of lands therein, "to any mine of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, or to any valid mining claim or possession held under existing laws," the grantee of such lands cannot be deprived thereof because of the discovery of minerals in them subsequent to the grant, but there must be at the time of the grant a paying mine known to exist, or one which there is good reason to believe exists.—Smith v. Hill, (Cal.) 26 P. 644.

4. Under Const. Cal. art. 6, §§ 5, 6, (St. 1880, pp. 2, 23,) making the superior courts the successors to the county courts, and clothing the judges of the superior courts with the powers formerly exercised by the county judges, where land was patented to the county judge under the town-site act, to be held in trust for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of a town, the superior court judge who succeeds him is the proper person to convey the land, as the trust is an official one.—Smith v. Hill, (Cal.) 26 P. 644.

Donations to railroads.

5. Act Cong. July 1, 1862, as amended by Act July 2, 1864, granted to the C. P. R. Co. alternate sections of land, to aid in the construction of its road, but reserved any land to which a pre-emption or homestead claim might attach before the line should be definitely fixed. Ten months before the line of the road was definitely fixed, land covered by the grant was settled upon and improved, and ten days before the line was fixed the settlers filed their affidavits and declaratory statements in the proper land-office. Held, that the land did not pass under the grant.—Peers v. Deluchi, (Nev.) 26 P. 228.

6. Act Cong. July 1, 1862, provides "that there be and is hereby granted" to a certain railroad company certain sections to be afterwards located, depending on the route to be established, and that after the company has designated the general route of its road, and filed a map thereof with the secretary of the interior, he shall cause the lands to be withdrawn from pre-emption, private entry, and sale. Held, that the filing of such map, and the order of the secretary withdrawing the lands, precluded the subsequent in-ception of any rights in favor of any one else.—McLaughlin v. Menotti, (Cal.) 26 P. 880.

7. After such order of the secretary of the interior the land department had no authority to hold that the land was subject to selection by the state.—McLaughlin v. Menotti, (Cal.) 26 P. 880.

8. After a railroad company had accepted the terms of a congressional grant, and acted upon them, congress could not divest it of its rights in the lands.—McLaughlin v. Menotti, (Cal.) 26 P. 880.

9. To entitle a person to the exception in favor of a bona fide settler contained in a land-grant, (Act Cong. July 2, 1864,) it is not enough to show that he occupied and improved the land.—McLaughlin v. Menotti, (Cal.) 26 P. 880.

10. Act Cong. July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864, (12 U. S. St. at Large, p. 489, and 18 U. S. St. at Large, p. 856,) grant to the Central Pacific Railroad Company all odd-numbered sections of land for 10 miles on each side of its right of way except those sold by the United States, or to which a pre-emption or homestead right had attached at the time of the location of the road, and further declares that the company shall within two years designate the route of its road, and file a map thereof with the department of the interior. Held that, in ejectment by one deriving title from the railroad company for lands thus granted to which no patent has been issued, where defendant is in actual possession, plaintiff must prove compliance with the requirements of the act, and that the land in controversy is not within its exceptions.—Corinne Mill, Canal & Stock Co. v. Johnson, (Utah,) 26 P. 922.

Swamp lands.

11. Where the register and receiver of the district land-office decides that certain land was not "swamp and overflowed" at the time of the enactment of Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, or that the patentees thereof are entitled to it on the ground that they were, before disposal of it by the state, bona fide purchasers within Act Cong. July 23, 1866, providing for the quieting of land titles in California, and confirming to purchasers in good faith lands included in rejected Mexican grants, the decision, if not appealed from, is conclusive against the state and its grantees.—Shanklin v. McNamara, (Cal.) 26 P. 345.

12. The opinion of the register and receiver of the land-office as to whether land was swamp and overflowed, recited: "The evidence shows that all of said tract has for many years been used for ordinary purposes of agriculture in growing grain and grass for hay and pasturage. And the fact of its adaptability for the cultivation of these staple agricultural products would seem to determine the question as to the character of the land against the state. At any rate, these circumstances, coupled with the fact" that claimants were bona fide purchasers, etc., entitles them to the land. Held, that it was not decided that the land was not swamp and overflowed.—Shanklin v. McNamara, (Cal.) 26 P. 345.

13. Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, granting to the different states all swamp and overflowed lands within their borders, did not grant lands, the right to the possession of which was at the time vested in a grantee under a Mexican grant, though such land may have afterwards, on final survey, been excluded from the grant.—Shanklin v. McNamara, (Cal.) 26 P. 345.

14. In an action to determine the rights of parties to purchase certain swamp lands, it is competent to show that the land in question, though granted to the state as swamp land, has been so far changed by natural causes as to have become suitable for cultivation.—Dewar v. Ruiz, (Cal.) 26 P. 832.

15. Const. Cal. art. 17, § 8, providing that state lands which are "suitable for cultivation" shall be granted only to actual settlers, and in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to each settler, applies to swamp lands granted to the state by Act Cong. Sept. 23, 1850, when such lands are "suitable for cultivation," and can be reclaimed and cultivated by an actual settler.—Fulton v. Brannan, (Cal.) 26 P. 506; McNee v. Lynch, Id. 508; Diss v. Long, Id. 515; McDonald v. Welsh, Id. 595.

Swamp lands—Application.

16. Evidence tending to prove that plaintiff determined to settle on the land at the time he examined the boundaries, and then intended to proceed immediately to build his cabin and to complete it in a reasonable time, and that he commenced to build the cabin as soon as he could get the lumber, and in fact completed it within a week after making application, is sufficient to justify a finding that he was an actual settler at the time he made his application, where there was no pretense that defendant ever settled on the land.—McDonald v. Welsh, (Cal.) 26 P. 595.

17. The swamp lands granted to the state by Act Cong. Sept. 23, 1850, are not subject to application for purchase until they have been segregated to the state by a United States survey, and an application filed prior to such segregation confers no rights on the applicant, though it is subsequently approved, and a certificate of purchase issued after segregation.—Buchanan v. Nagle, (Cal.) 26 P. 512; Diss v. Long, Id. 515; Ross v. Kennedy, Id. 599.

18. Pol. Code Cal. § 8441, prohibits the surveyor general from approving applications for swamp and overflowed lands until six months after they have been segregated. Section 8443 provides that a person desiring to purchase such lands must file his affidavit that there are no settlers on the land, or, if there are, that the same have been segregated for six months. Held, that an application to purchase "swamp and overflowed" land is void, if made before the lands have been segregated to the state as such.—Wren v. Mangon, (Cal.) 26 P. 100.

19. An application to purchase swamp and overflowed land, made before segregation of the land, is void, and it is proper to refuse to admit it in evidence in an action to determine the rights of the parties thereto to purchase.—Dewar v. Ruiz, (Cal.) 26 P. 832.

School lands.

20. Organic Act Utah (Act Cong. Sept. 9, 1850) provides "that, when the lands in said territory shall be surveyed under the direction of the government of the United States, * * * sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said territory shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in said territory," etc. Held, that the grant was absolute, and the lands reserved ceased to be public domain, open to settlement, as soon as surveyed.—United States v. Elliot, (Utah,) 26 P. 1117.

21. Act Cong. March 3, 1853, being an act "to provide for the survey of the public lands in California, the granting of pre-emption rights therein, and for other purposes," section 6 of which grants to the state of California land sections 16 and 36 "for the purposes of public schools in each township," does not include the mineral lands in those sections, though they are not specially excepted from the grant. Following Mining Co. v.

Consolidated Min. Co., 102 U. S. 167.—Hermocilla v. Hubbell, (Cal.) 26 P. 611.

22. The grant by congress in 1853 being a grant in present, lands that were mineral lands then were excepted, and the fact that they were afterwards worked out and abandoned as unprofitable does not pass title to them to the state.—Hermocilla v. Hubbell, (Cal.) 26 P. 611.

Mining claims.

23. In ejectment by plaintiff claiming under a patent from the state, defendants, who are in possession of the land as mining claims under locations made in accordance with the law and the local customs, can contest the patent, as they are in privity with the United States.—Hermocilla v. Hubbell, (Cal.) 26 P. 611.

Land-office.

24. The land department of the United States will not be interfered with by the courts while it has charge of any contest proceedings between adverse claimants of land.—Adams v. Couch, (Okla.) 26 P. 1009.

Patents.

25. Receipt by the patentee of a patent for land issued to him by the United States is not necessary to pass title.—Eltaroth v. Ryan, (Cal.) 26 P. 647.

Cancellation of entries and certificates.

26. The commissioner of the general land-office, on complaint of a stranger that one who has entered land under the pre-emption laws of the United States, and received a cash entry certificate and final receipt from the register and receiver of the district land-office, has not made his residence on the land, or improved it, as required by law, may suspend the entry, order the register and receiver to hear the charges, and, on their being established, may cancel the entry, under Act Cong. July 4, 1896, providing that the issuing of patents and the sale of public lands shall be under the supervision of such commissioner. DUNBAR, J., dissenting.—Pierce v. Frace, (Wash.) 26 P. 192; Orchard v. Alexander, Id. 196.

27. Where a pre-emptor has not complied with the law, and by fraud or perjury obtains a final certificate, the commissioner of the general land-office has authority to cancel the certificate at any time before the patent issues, though the pre-emptor has sold the land to a bona fide purchaser.—Jones v. Meyers, (Idaho,) 26 P. 215; Sorenson v. Same, Id. 218.

28. Act Cong. July 4, 1896, provides that the issuing of patents and sale of public lands shall be under the supervision of the commissioner of the general land-office. Rev. St. U. S. § 2363, provides that proof of settlement and improvement shall be made before entry "to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land-district in which such lands may lie." Held that, where a pre-emptor has proved his settlement to the register's satisfaction, and received from him a cash entry certificate and final receipt, the latter's judgment cannot be reopened by the commissioner and set aside, on complaint of a stranger that his residence has not been established as required by law. Per DUNBAR, J., dissenting from 26 P. 192.—Pierce v. Frace, (Wash.) 26 P. 807.

Unlawful inclosure.

29. Act Cong. Feb. 25, 1885, § 1, provides that all inclosures of any public lands in any state or territory of the United States, heretofore or to be hereinafter made * * * by any person not having claim or color of title, etc., are hereby declared unlawful, etc. Section 2 makes it the duty of United States district attorneys to institute suits in the United States territorial district court to have such inclosures destroyed. Held, that the act did not apply to land granted by the organic act of Utah for school purposes after survey had been made.—United States v. Elliot, (Utah,) 26 P. 1117.

Public Policy.

Effect on contracts, see Contracts, 2.

QUIETING TITLE.Title to support action.

1. It is no defense to an action to quiet title to land that a patent under which plaintiff derived title was not recorded until after the action was commenced.—Eltzroth v. Ryan, (Cal.) 26 P. 647.

Pleading.

2. In an action to remove a cloud on title, brought on a petition in the nature of a bill in equity, and not an action to quiet title under Code Civil Proc. Kan. § 594, to which actual possession is a prerequisite, the petition need not allege that plaintiff was in possession of the premises.—Grove v. Jennings, (Kan.) 26 P. 738.

Evidence.

3. Where defendant relies for his title on a constable's sale under execution on a judgment of a justice of the peace, he must show affirmatively that the justice had jurisdiction to render the judgment.—Eltzroth v. Ryan, (Cal.) 26 P. 647.

4. In an action to quiet title to land, where plaintiff proves his title, it is not incumbent on him to show that he has not parted with it, or that he is entitled to possession.—Eltzroth v. Ryan, (Cal.) 26 P. 647.

QUI TAM AND PENAL ACTIONS.Pleading amendment.

It is not error to refuse an amendment to an answer in an action for a penalty, under St. Cal. 1880, p. 184, against a mining company for failing to post certain reports in its office enabling defendant to plead in bar a judgment for the recovery of a penalty in another case, as the offense is a continuing one.—Schofield v. Doray, (Cal.) 26 P. 606.

QUO WARRANTO.Trying title to office.

1. Under Civil Code Colo. § 289, providing that an action may be brought by the district attorney in the name of the people, on relation and complaint of a private party, against any one unlawfully holding an office, or, in case of his neglect, by such private party on his own relation, in the name of the state, such action may be brought by the defeated candidate, though he may not be entitled to the office.—Londoner v. People, (Colo.) 26 P. 185.

2. Comp. Laws Utah 1888, § 8534, provides that when several persons claim to be entitled to the same office one action may be brought against all such persons in order to try their respective rights thereto. Section 1761 provides that in cities of the first class three councilmen shall be elected from each ward at the same time, and their terms of office shall commence and end at the same time. Held, that three councilmen so elected may properly join in an action against three persons who have usurped their offices.—People v. Cohn, (Utah,) 26 P. 928.

— Jury trial.

3. In quo warranto to try title to office the court may, against respondent's objection, call a jury, and submit special issues to them to aid him in his finding of facts, under Civil Code Colo. § 173, which provides that in actions other than for the recovery of property, or money due on contract, or for damages for breach of contract, or for injuries, the issues of fact must be tried by the court, subject to its power to order any issue to be tried by a jury.—Londoner v. People, (Colo.) 26 P. 135.

RAILROAD COMPANIES.

See, also, Carriers; Horse and Street Railroads. Donations of public land, see Public Lands, 5-10. Special legislation, see Constitutional Law, 12.

Establishment of highway—Compensation to company.

1. Where a highway is established across a railroad company's right of way, it is entitled to compensation for all necessary expenditures in constructing cattle-guards, and such other things as it is required by statute to construct on account of the highway. JOHNSON, J., dissenting.—Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Board of County Com'rs Jackson County, (Kan.) 26 P. 394; Board of County Com'rs Greenwood County v. Kansas City, E. & S. Ry. Co., Id. 397.

2. Where a railroad is operated by a lessee, and a highway is established across its right of way on notice to the lessee, but without notice to the company owning the road, the latter may recover compensation on presenting its claim therefor to the county commissioners within one year from the location of the highway.—Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Board of County Com'rs Jackson County, (Kan.) 26 P. 394.

Municipal aid.

3. Laws Kan. 1876, c. 107, as amended by Laws 1877, cc. 142, 144, authorizes counties, townships, or incorporated cities to issue bonds in aid of railroads. Section 4 of the act relating to cities of the third class provides that they shall remain a part of the municipal townships in which they are situated "for all township purposes, * * * for the purpose of building bridges and subscribing stock in aid of the construction of railroads." Section 68 provides that the council shall not take any stock in a railroad unless two-thirds of the electors vote in favor thereof. Held, that a city of the third class could issue railroad aid bonds though the township had already issued bonds to the same railroad to the full amount it was authorized to issue.—City of Iola v. Merriman, (Kan.) 26 P. 486.

4. Three days prior to an election in a township on a proposition to authorize a subscription by the township to the stock of a railroad company to the amount of $13,000, and the issue of the same amount of bonds of the township to the railroad company in payment of such subscription, it being apparent that such proposition would be defeated as it then stood, certain officers and agents of the railroad company agreed with a portion of the electors of the township that, if the vote should be in the affirmative, the amount of the subscription and of the bonds to be issued should be $10,000 only. The election resulted in an affirmative vote, authorizing a subscription and issue of bonds to the amount of $18,000. Immediately afterwards, in a proceeding instituted by a tax-payer and an elector of the township, the officers of the township and the railroad company were enjoined from making a subscription and from issuing or receiving bonds exceeding $10,000. The subscription was made for $10,000, and was accepted by the railroad company, and it relinquished all claim to bonds exceeding that amount. Thereafter the railroad was built and all the other conditions imposed on the railroad company by the proposition voted on were fulfilled by it pursuant to such election and subscription. Held, that the railroad company was entitled to bonds of the township to the amount of $10,000; the agreement between it and the electors was not in effect or tantamount to a bribe to the voters, such as would render the election wholly invalid, but it was valid to the extent, at least, of authorizing a subscription and issue of bonds to the amount of $10,000; and that the officers of the township had the power and the right, upon sufficient reason therefor, to issue an amount of bonds less than the amount for which authority was given.—Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Township of Ozark, (Kan.) 26 P. 710.

Liability for negligence.

5. In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a boy of 9½ years, while stealing a ride on the back foot-board of a switch-engine out of view of the engineer, it appeared that he was of ordinary intelligence, familiar with the working of a switch-engine, and that he had been warned repeatedly by his father and servants of the company and others that he would get hurt if he went about the cars. He himself testified that he knew he might get hurt. Held insufficient evidence to support a finding that he did not know it was dangerous for him to ride upon the engine.—Egley v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., (Wash.) 26 P. 973.

6. The fact that a railroad company's servants failed to discover a boy riding on the foot-board of an engine was no evidence of negligence, especially when the company had issued a bulletin to allow no boys on the track, and its servants drove them away whenever they saw them there.—Egley v. Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co., (Wash.) 26 P. 973.

Injuries to persons on track.

7. Where a person, seeing a train advancing on a track located within three feet from a high station platform, hurriedly crosses, and stands between the track and platform for the train to pass, she is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover for injuries by being struck by the train. BEATTY, C. J., dissenting.—Ereby v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 211.

8. In an action for injuries caused to a person who was negligently on a railroad track, there cannot be a recovery, notwithstanding plaintiff's negligence, on the ground that defendant's employees saw her dangerous position, and failed to stop the train and allow her to move, if the complaint merely alleges negligence on defendant's part, and not willful and wanton negligence. BEATTY, C. J., dissenting.—Ereby v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 211.

9. In an action against a railroad company for killing a child four or five years old, the evidence showed that the child wandered away from home, and went to sleep on the track, near a public crossing and school-house, where children were frequently passing, and that the engineer saw an object there when between 200 and 300 yards away, but could not tell what it was until within 30 feet, when it was too late to stop. Held, that the failure to slow down so as to be able to stop, if it became necessary, was negligence; and that the child was not such a trespasser as to prevent recovery, even though plaintiff himself was negligent in permitting it to wander there unattended.—Hyde v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., (Utah.) 26 P. 979.

Accidents at crossings.

10. As it approached the crossing of another railroad in a city of 5,000 inhabitants, a freight train stopped not to exceed a minute so as to block one of the principal streets of the city near a public school building. A boy seven years old tried to climb over the cars. He was not seen by the trainmen. The train started, and he was thrown off and injured. The jury found that the company was negligent, in that the trainmen knew that the crossing was frequented by children, and were not on the lookout. Held, that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the company.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Plaskett, (Kan.) 26 P. 401; Id. 403.

Stock-killing cases.

11. Under an averment that the defendant owned, operated, and controlled a railroad, proof that it operated and controlled the road is sufficient to establish its liability for failing to construct cattle-guards where the railroad enters an inclosure.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Ricketts, (Kan.) 26 P. 50.

12. To an action against a railway company under Gen. St. Kan. 1889, pars. 1252-1257, for damages for stock killed at a place where the road is not inclosed with a good and lawful fence, as required by the statute, it is a defense that the stock was killed at a crossing of the road used and traveled by the public as a highway, although not established or regularly laid out by the county authorities.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Koehner, (Kan.) 26 P. 731.

13. In an action against a railroad company for killing a mare, it appeared that there was no fence between plaintiff's pasture and the track; that the mare had crossed the track to feed, and was surrounded by a fence on the west, a cattle-guard on the south, and the track on the east between it and the pasture, when the train came along at an unusual speed. The mare was struck while attempting to recross the track. No whistle was blown, nor bell rung, nor speed slackened. The engineer could have seen her for over a mile. The engineer testified that he did not slacken speed, nor blow his whistle, until he got within 250 feet, although he saw her when over a quarter of a mile from the place of accident. Held, that the question of defendant's negligence was for the jury.—Johnson v. Rio Grande W. Ry. Co., (Utah.) 26 P. 926.

14. The testimony of two witnesses as to whether the engineer could have done anything else to avoid the disaster, where the engineer testified that he did all he could to stop the train, is inadmissible.—Johnson v. Rio Grande W. Ry. Co., (Utah.) 26 P. 926.

15. The fact that a herder, after having rounded up his sheep a mile and a quarter from a railroad track, and after some of them have lain down as if for the night, takes his dog and goes home, is not such contributory negligence as will relieve the railroad company from liability if the sheep afterwards stray on the track and are negligently killed; and the admission of incompetent evidence as to the custom of rounding up and herding sheep is not prejudicial to the company. BEATTY, C. J., and McFARLAND, J., dissenting.—McCoy v. Southern Pac. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 629.

16. In an action against a railway company for killing a horse, it appeared that the horse was about 100 feet from the track in an unfenced pasture; that on the approach of the train he ran obliquely about 100 yards towards the track, getting upon it a short distance ahead of the engine, and was killed; that no obstructions prevented the engineer from seeing him; and that the train was running a little down grade, but not fast. Held, that a verdict for plaintiff will not be set aside.—Woodland v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., (Utah.) 26 P. 293.

Fences.

17. In an action against a railroad company for negligently killing stock, an allegation that the damage was caused by defendant's failure to maintain a good and sufficient fence will include any defect in the fence without more particular reference to it. BEATTY, C. J., and McFARLAND, J., dissenting.—McCoy v. Southern Pac. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 629.

18. One who has only a right to pasture his stock on another's land, adjacent to a railroad, is entitled to the protection of the statute requiring railroad companies to maintain a fence. BEATTY, C. J., and McFARLAND, J., dissenting.—McCoy v. Southern Pac. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 629.

19. The plaintiff's mule jumped a defective fence separating his own from a neighbor's farm through which there ran a railroad inclosed with a lawful fence. In the neighbor's inclosure there was a farm crossing, at which the gates in the railroad fence had been left open for a week. The mule went on the track through the open gate and was killed. Held, that the duty of closing the gates devolved on the land-owner, and the railroad company was not liable, though the jury found that it was negligent in not closing the gates.—Adams v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., (Kan.) 26 P. 439.

20. Comp. Laws Kan. 1885, c. 84, § 30, provides that every railroad company shall be liable to pay the owner the full value of each animal killed in the operation of its road, and section 34 provides that this act shall not apply to any company whose railroad is inclosed with a good and lawful fence. Chapter 40, § 4a, provides that, in addition to the fences now declared by law to be legal fences, the following shall be a legal fence: A barbed wire fence of not less than 3 wires, with the bottom wire not more than 24 inches from the ground, etc. provided that, in townships and counties in which hogs shall be allowed to run at large, there shall be 8 additional wires, etc. Chapter 105, § 46, provides that hogs shall not be allowed to run at large "except as in this article provided," and section 47 provides that hogs may be allowed to run at large in any township by a vote of its electors. A railroad ran through a pasture and was not fenced. Sheep kept in the pasture were killed. It was not shown whether hogs were allowed to run at large in that township. The owner of the sheep admitted on the witness stand that a wire fence of 8 wires, with the bottom wire 24 inches from the ground, would not have been a protection to all the sheep; that some would pass under such a fence. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a verdict against the company, and that it was incumbent on the railroad company to show affirmatively what would have been a legal fence in that township, and that such a fence would not have kept the sheep off the track. —Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Baxter, (Kan.) 26 P. 49.

Fires.

21. In an action against a railroad company for damage suffered by plaintiff by fire caused by defendant in the operation of its railroad, proof that the fire was so caused casts on defendant the burden of proving not only that its appliances to prevent the escape of fire were sufficient and in good order, and that its engineer was a competent and skillful engineer, but also that there was no mismanagement or negligence on the part of any of its servants or agents causing the fire; Laws Kan. 1885, c. 155, providing that, in an action against any railway company for damages by fire caused by the operating of the railroad, proof by plaintiff that the fire was caused by operating such railroad shall be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the railroad company. —Ft. Scott, W. & W. R. Co. v. Kar-racker, (Kan.) 26 P. 1027.

22. In an action for damages caused by fire from defendant railroad company's engine, plaintiff cannot, under Laws Kan. 1885, c. 155, § 2, which provides that "in an action commenced under this act, if the plaintiff shall recover, there shall be allowed him by the court a reasonable attorney's fee, which shall become a part of the judgment," recover such attorney's fee, unless he demands it in his petition, and then submits the question to the court or jury trying the case on its merits. —Ft. Scott, W. & W. R. Co. v. Kar-racker, (Kan.) 26 P. 1027.

RAPE.

Age of consent—Assault with intent to rape.

1. Though the laws of Washington make it rape to have carnal knowledge of a female under the age of consent, even with her consent, there can, in the absence of fraud, be no assault with intent to rape, when she consents, since there can be no assault without force or fraud. —Whitcher v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 268.

Indictment and information.

2. An information charging: "W. is accused * * * of the crime of an assault with intent to commit rape, committed as follows, to-wit: * * *, in and upon one E., * * *,"—though it does not give the female's name in the charging part, is sufficient, under Code Wash. § 1004, requiring the acts constituting the offense to be stated so that a person of common understanding may know what is intended. ANDERS, C. J., and STILES, J., dissenting. — Whitcher v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 268.

3. An indictment charged that defendant "did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, forcibly, and violently make an assault in and upon one E. B., a female child under the age of fourteen years, by then and there unlawfully, feloniously, forcibly, and violently ravishing and carnally knowing her, the said E. B., against her will," etc. Held, that this was not a charge of assault only, but that it sufficiently charged carnal knowledge of a female under the age of 14 years to sustain a conviction under Hill's Code Or. § 1783, declaring that "if any person shall carnally know any female child under the age of fourteen, * * * such person shall be deemed guilty of rape;" the allegations of force and want of consent might be disregarded as surplusage. —State v. Horne, (Or.) 26 P. 665.

Variance.

4. Proof of an assault on a female under the age of consent, with her consent, cannot support an information charging an assault with force, with intent to commit rape. DUNBAR, J., dissenting. — Whitcher v. State, (Wash.) 26 P. 268.

RECEIVERS.

Actions against.

In a suit against a mortgagor, a receiver was appointed without notice to a mortgagee in possession of a stock of goods. The mortgagee obtained leave to sue the receiver in replevin, and complied with all the conditions of the order, but the court afterwards revoked such permission, and dismissed the action of replevin, refusing to hear evidence that the mortgagee held a valid first mortgage on the goods. Held, an abuse of discretion. — Conwell v. Lawrence, (Kan.) 26 P. 461.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.

Venue, see Criminal Law, 7.

Information.

1. An information charging defendant with feloniously receiving stolen goods, "the property of the estate of G. H. Tay and O. J. Backus, copartners doing business under the firm name of G. H. Tay & Co.," is sufficiently direct and certain as to the ownership of the stolen property. — People v. Ribolsi, (Cal.) 26 P. 1082.

2. It is not necessary that the information should state the name of the person who stole the goods. — People v. Ribolsi, (Cal.) 26 P. 1082.

Variance.

3. Pen. Code Cal. § 956, provides that when an offense involves the commission of a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty in other respects to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured is not material. Held, that where the charge was feloniously receiving goods stolen from the estate of G. H. Tay and O. J. Backus, copartners, and the proof showed that one of the partners was dead, and his executors were the legal owners of his property, the variance was not material. — People v. Ribolsi, (Cal.) 26 P. 1082.

REFERENCE.

Setting aside report of referee.

1. When by agreement the court has referred a cause to a referee to hear the testimony and report his findings of fact, it is error for the court on its own motion to set aside the findings of the referee, make findings of its own, and render judgment thereon. — Walker v. Campbell, (Idaho,) 26 P. 123.

2. Civil Code Or. § 229, providing that the court may affirm or set aside the report of a referee in whole or in part, and may make another order of reference, as to all or so much of the report as is set aside, to the original referees or others, or may find the facts and determine the law itself, and give judgment accordingly; and that, upon a motion to set aside the report, the conclusions thereof shall be deemed and considered as the verdict of a jury,—only authorizes the court to set aside such report as to conclusions of fact, under the same circumstances in which it is authorized to set aside the verdict of a jury and grant a new trial, which it is authorized to do when the verdict is against the great weight of evidence.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Pope, (Or.) 26 P. 622.

3. Where the court sets aside the report of a referee in whole or in part, and elects to find the facts and determine the law itself, it is its duty to find the facts and conclusions of law in the same manner as it is required to do when it tries a case without the intervention of a jury.—Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Pope, (Or.) 26 P. 622.

RELEASE AND DISCHARGE.

See, also, Payment.

Setting aside for mistake.

Plaintiff, having been injured in a railroad accident, signed a release 11 days after of all claims now sued for. Nineteen days later she was prematurely confined. She claimed that she thought she was only releasing claims for injuries to another child and for her husband's loss of time. It appears that the release was read to her before signing, and that she hesitated about settling, fearing a miscarriage, but signed under the advice of her husband and his father. No fact as to her condition was misstated by defendant, nor was any fraud practiced upon her. Held, that a verdict for plaintiff was unsupported by the evidence.—Eccles v. Union Pac. Ry. Co., (Utah,) 26 P. 924.

Rent.

See Landlord and Tenant, 9, 10.

REPLEVIN.

When lies.

1. Where plaintiff agreed to trade certain cattle to one G., but the latter had not performed his part of the contract, and plaintiff still retained possession, claiming ownership, a taking of the cattle under an attachment against G. was wrongful, and plaintiff could maintain replevin therefor.—Lewis v. Birdsey, (Or.) 26 P. 623.

2. A company leased state land, and afterwards discovered building stone thereon, which they quarried and sold, together with the lease, to plaintiff. Defendant, without right, but in collusion with plaintiff's agent, removed the stone. Held that, although the quarrying of the stone was waste, plaintiff could replevy it, where his possession was under bona fide claim of ownership.—Reynolds v. Horton, (Wash.) 26 P. 221.

3. Replevin will lie in any state court of competent jurisdiction, in favor of the owner of goods seized by an officer on a writ against a third person, in an attachment suit pending in any other court of the state.—Carpenter v. Innes, (Colo.) 26 P. 140.

Demand.

4. When the petition in an action of replevin against a sheriff was filed, and the summons and order of delivery were issued, the sheriff had the actual possession of the goods. The order of delivery was set aside on account of irregularities, and an alias order issued, under which the goods were ordered by the court to be turned over to defendant. He did not file any disclaimer, but attempted to show title and right of possession in himself, under an execution. Held, that no proof of demand and refusal was required, and it was not material that defendant did not have the goods in his possession when the last order of delivery was issued and served.—Bliss v. Couch, (Kan.) 26 P. 706.

Order for delivery of property.

5. In replevin, an order for the delivery of the property cannot issue until a summons has been issued.—Felham v. Edwards, (Kan.) 26 P. 41.

Pleading.

6. At the trial of an action of replevin, defendant attempted to show title in itself, and the right of possession incident thereto, under a chattel mortgage. Held, that it could not object that the petition contained no allegation of a demand for the property before the commencement of the action.—Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bank of Glen Elder, (Kan.) 26 P. 630.

7. In replevin by a mortgagee for the possession of the mortgaged property, the defendant may, under a general denial, defeat a recovery by proof that, after the execution and delivery of the mortgage, she sold the property to the mortgagee, who refused to take it and pay the contract price, and, if the goods have been delivered to the plaintiff under the writ of replevin, the defendant may have judgment in the alternative for a return of the property, or for the value of her interest therein. Modifying 25 Pac. Rep. 641.—Deford v. Hutchinson, (Kan.) 26 P. 60.

Exhibits.

8. In an action of replevin, an exhibit containing a description of the property, in order to become a part of the complaint, must be attached thereto. It is not sufficient to file the same as a separate paper, although referred to in the complaint, and alleged to be a part thereof.—Riley v. Pearson, (Or.) 26 P. 849.

Evidence.

9. Goods recently sold to plaintiff were attached by a creditor of her vendor, and, in consideration of plaintiff giving her note for the debt, the vendor promised to pay the note at maturity. Plaintiff gave a mortgage to secure this note, and both were assigned to A., who was the brother of said vendor, and who foreclosed the mortgage. In replevin against the sheriff having possession of the goods under the foreclosure proceedings, plaintiff alleged that the vendor in fact paid the note, and fraudulently procured the transfer of the mortgage to A., instead of causing its discharge. It appeared that A. had no money with which to buy the note. The testimony was conflicting as to who furnished him the money, and as to whether the mortgage had actually been paid. Held, that the judgment for plaintiff should be reversed. Per ANDERS, C. J., and HORT, J., dissenting.—McGraw v. Franklin, (Wash.) 26 P. 810.

Verdict and judgment.

10. In replevin, issue was joined on plaintiff's allegations that he was the owner of certain personal property, and entitled to its possession, and that defendant wrongfully detained the same. Held, that a verdict in which the jury found that plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the property, and assessed its value, etc., but did not pass on the fact of ownership of the property, was defective in substance, and that a judgment upon it that plaintiff was owner was not sustained by the verdict.—Yick Kee v. Dunbar, (Or.) 26 P. 275.

11. Where the plaintiff obtains possession of property in replevin against the sheriff for goods taken on execution, and the jury finds for the defendant, the verdict and judgment should be in the alternative for a return of the goods, or the value of the officer's special interest, in case a return cannot be had.—Poncelor v. Marshall, (Kan.) 26 P. 33.

12. Though Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 667, provides that, "in an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession, or the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had," a judgment for possession alone is sufficient, where delivery was made to plaintiff at the beginning of the action.—Claudius v. Aguirre, (Cal.) 26 P. 1077.

REVIEW, WRIT OF.

When granted.

A writ of review will not be granted to consider an order removing an assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors where the petition does not show that the order was made without notice to the assignee, and there are no direct allegations that the petition for removal did not charge that the assignee had violated or was unfit to execute his duties.—Marsh v. Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, (Cal.) 26 P. 963.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

See, also, Irrigation; Waters and Water-Courses.
On public lands, see Public Lands, 1-4.

Appropriation of water for domestic purposes.

1. The doctrine of riparian rights is not in force in Utah, so as to prevent the owner of land from diverting the waters of a stream for purposes of irrigation and domestic use, under the laws of the territory.—Stowell v. Johnson, (Utah,) 26 P. 290.

Land over which tide ebbs and flows.

2. The title to land over which the tide ebbs and flows is in the state, and a riparian owner can claim no easement in it, nor impose any servitude upon it, without the consent of the legislature. Stiles, J., dissenting.—Eisenbach v. Hatfield, (Wash.) 26 P. 539.

3. Nor can the riparian proprietor's right to accretions, not yet in existence, give him any rights in the land below high-tide mark, as against the state. Stiles, J., dissenting.—Eisenbach v. Hatfield, (Wash.) 26 P. 539.

4. A riparian owner of land bordering on tide-waters cannot maintain ejectment against persons who have taken possession of, and erected buildings on, the land below high-tide mark, the title and power of disposal of which has been reserved to the state of Washington by the constitution. The remedy, if any, is in equity.—Pierce v. Kennedy, (Wash.) 26 P. 554.

5. A riparian proprietor cannot sue to enjoin the erection and maintenance of structures on tidal land by persons who erected the same, and were in use and possession for commerce, trade, or business prior to the passage of Act Wash. March 26, 1890, which provides (section 11) that the owners of any lands fronting on the Pacific ocean, or any bay, harbor, etc., shall have the right, for 60 days after final appraisement of tide-lands, to purchase such as are in front of the lands owned by them: "provided, that if valuable improvements, in actual use for commerce, trade, or business, have been made upon said tide-lands, * * * the owners of such improvements shall have the exclusive right to purchase the land so improved for the period aforesaid." Stiles, J., dissenting.—Eisenbach v. Hatfield, (Wash.) 26 P. 539.

— Right to erect wharves.

6. Under Const. Wash. art. 15, providing that the legislature shall provide for the appointment of a commission to establish harbor lines in the navigable waters of all harbors in the state, within or in front of the corporate limits of a city, or within a mile thereof, and shall provide for the leasing of the right to build and maintain wharves, docks, and other structures, a riparian proprietor on the shore of the sea, so situated, has no authority, as such, to extend wharves in front of his land below high-water mark. Stiles, J., dissenting.—Eisenbach v. Hatfield, (Wash.) 26 P. 539.

Alluvion.

7. In a suit to quiet title to certain alluvion claimed by the plaintiff and defendants, who were all riparian owners, the evidence was in conflict on the question as to whose land the alluvion first attached, but it was manifest that some or all of the parties were entitled to the land in controversy as an accretion. Held, that the court would divide the land in controversy between the respective claimants on equitable principles, and quiet the title of each riparian owner to the parcel allotted to him.—Pearcy v. Bybee, (Or.) 26 P. 333.

Roads.

See Highways.

ROBBERY.

What constitutes.

1. On a trial for robbery, it is error to charge that, if a man stealthily filch from the pocket of another, the force necessary to remove the property is all the force required by a statute defining robbery as "the felonious taking of personal property, in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear."—Territory v. McKeru, (Idaho,) 26 P. 123.

Information.

2. In an information for robbery, the property taken is sufficiently described as "$35 lawful money of the United States, a more particular description of which is unknown," and the testimony of the prosecuting witness that there were three $10 bills, and $5 in silver, is not sufficient to show that a more particular description could have been given.—State v. Ready, (Kan.) 26 P. 58.

3. The statutes defining the crime of robbery, not using the words "rob" or "to rob," the use of those words in an information is not essential.—State v. Ready, (Kan.) 26 P. 58.

Instructions.

4. On indictment for robbery, a charge to find defendant "guilty or not guilty" is not erroneous, as withdrawing from the jury the right to determine defendant guilty of petit larceny only, if the evidence shows that, if guilty at all, he is guilty of robbery.—People v. O'Brien, (Cal.) 26 P. 362.

SALE.

See, also, Judicial Sales; Vendor and Vendee.

The contract.

1. Where a smelting company, in writing, "offers for the product of the mines" of the mining company for a given period a named price, which offer is accepted by the mining company, and the writing is signed by the general manager of each, this constitutes a contract of sale for the time and at the price named, and is upon sufficient consideration. ELLIOTT, J., dissenting. —Robert E. Lee Silver Min. Co. v. Omaha & Grant Smelting & Refining Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 826.

Warranty.

2. On a sale of chattels by an agent, proof of an oral warranty is not excluded by a provision in a note given for the price that "no promise or contract outside of this note will be recognized." —Gale Sulky Harrow Manuf'g Co. v. Stark, (Kan.) 26 P. 8.

3. Where an agricultural implement is sold by a non-resident manufacturer through a traveling agent who has possession of the implement and warrants that it will do good work, and the manufacturer accepts notes taken by the agent for the price, the facts justify a finding that the agent had authority to warrant. —Gale Sulky Harrow Manuf'g Co. v. Stark, (Kan.) 26 P. 8.

4. Defendants sold plaintiffs a horse, and agreed to exchange him for any other horse they might have, if certain blemishes, which they guaranteed would disappear on the use of proper remedies, did not do so. Held that, in an action for breach of the contract in that the blemishes did not disappear, evidence of the expenses of plaintiffs in treating them is admissible to show their good faith. —Woody v. Bennett, (Cal.) 26 P. 117.

Damages.

5. In an action for breach of warranty in the sale of a horse, evidence of the amount paid for the horse is admissible on the question of damages. —Woody v. Bennett, (Cal.) 26 P. 117.

6. It is competent on the question of damages for breach of warranty in the sale of a horse to show how the blemishes affected the value of the horse. —Woody v. Bennett, (Cal.) 26 P. 117.

7. For a breach of warranty of a seeder on a purchase thereof, in that it fails to cover properly the seed sown, which results in a loss of the use of the land on which it is sown, as well as of the seed, the purchaser may recover for the loss that occurs while he makes a reasonable test of the fitness of the seeder to perform the work; but he cannot enhance his damages by continuing to use it and sowing crop after crop with it, after he has ascertained that it will not do the work. —Gale Sulky Harrow Manuf'g Co. v. Moore, (Kan.) 26 P. 708.

Rights and remedies.

8. A creditor, who knows that his debtor has by fraud induced a sale of goods to himself (the debtor) on credit, cannot, by a chattel mortgage, secure a lien on such goods adverse to the seller thereof. —Wafer v. Harvey County Bank, (Kan.) 26 P. 1032.

Rescission.

9. Where, in an action for the price of certain water certificates, defendants claim that they are void, and that their invalidity "is stamped upon their face," their right to rescind is lost by a delay of 17 months after receiving the certificates, and 3 months after commencement of action for the price, before they made an offer to rescind. —Williams v. Mitchell, (Cal.) 26 P. 632.

10. Where an agricultural implement is warranted to do good work, and will not answer the purpose for which it was sold and warranted, the purchaser may rescind; and where the seller is a non-resident, and the purchaser does not know his place of business, nor any agent to whom a tender could be made, an offer to return the implement, made six months after the purchase, to the first agent authorized to collect the notes given for the price, operates as a rescission. —Gale Sulky Harrow Manuf'g Co. v. Stark, (Kan.) 26 P. 8.

11. Defendant purchased from plaintiff a sulky harrow and seeder in June, 1885, and gave a note for the price, payable September 1, 1886. He seeded with it 40 acres of wheat in the fall of 1885, 16 acres of oats in the spring of 1886, and 65 acres of wheat in the fall of 1886. Thereafter, and after the note became due and payment was demanded, he claimed to rescind the purchase, on the ground that the seeder was defective, in not properly covering the seed. Held, that as such defect, if it existed, must have been known to him from the beginning, the continued use of the implement must be regarded as a waiver of the right to rescind, and that the offer to return was not made within a reasonable time. —Gale Sulky Harrow Manuf'g Co. v. Moore, (Kan.) 26 P. 708.

Action for price.

12. In an action for the purchase money of coal, where there is nothing to show that the coal was not of the quality mentioned in the written contract, but judgment goes for defendant, the admission of parol evidence to show that the sale was by sample is reversible error. —Harrison v. McCormick, (Cal.) 26 P. 830.

13. Evidence is not admissible as showing that a fraud was practiced on defendant, in the sale of goods by sample, where there is no allegation in the answer that the contract was induced by false representations. —Harrison v. McCormick, (Cal.) 26 P. 830.

Damages for delay in delivering goods.

14. A retail dealer had contracted to furnish lumber for a building. With notice of the purpose for which it was wanted, a wholesale dealer agreed to supply him with the lumber on a certain day, but did not do so for some time afterwards. The owner of the building was daily incurring expenses by reason of the delay, and the lumber could not be bought in the market at the place of delivery. Held that, by accepting the lumber, the retail dealer did not waive his right to damages for the delay. —Halstead Lumber Co. v. Sutton, (Kan.) 26 P. 444.

Bona fide purchasers.

15. S. agreed to put up hay for defendant. Most of the hay was cut from land leased by defendant, and was stacked thereon and on the land of S. From time to time the hay was measured and paid for, and the stacks marked in the name of defendant, and bills of sale executed to him by S. After the first bill of sale, S. agreed to sell all the hay he had cut to plaintiff, and in the presence of S. plaintiff made a contract to sell it to one B. Held, that S. never had title to nor possession of the hay cut from land leased by defendant. —Hoy v. Griggs, (Kan.) 26 P. 467.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL-DISTRICTS.

Property subject to lien, see Mechanics' Liens, 5.
Organization.

1. A school-district having had a de facto existence at the time of a tax levy, the validity of its organization cannot be questioned in a suit by it to recover taxes assessed on its territory, but illegally paid over to an old district from which its territory was taken. —School-Dist. No. 2 of Cheyenne County v. School-Dist. No. 1 of Cheyenne County, (Kan.) 26 P. 43.

Election of school officers.

2. In Kansas, outlying and adjacent territory attached to a city of the second class for school purposes is not entitled to elect members of the board of education of the city to represent said territory, unless such territory contains a population equal to that of any one ward of the city, or its taxable property equals that of any one ward of the city. —Jay v. Board of Education, (Kan.) 26 P. 1026.

3. There being nothing in the old constitution of California which prevented special legislation, Pol. Code Cal. § 1593, providing that "the number of school trustees for any school-district, except where city boards are otherwise authorized by law, shall be three," did not prevent the passage of Act Cal. March 25, 1874, creating the Nevada school-district, and providing for the election of its directors, and the latter act controls. SHAMSTEIN, J., dissenting. — Nevada School-Dist. v. Shoecraft, (Cal.) 26 P. 211.

Consolidation—Apportionment of property.

4. By Act Leg. Assem. Utah 1890, §§ 100-116, the separate school-districts in Salt Lake City were abolished and consolidated into one, and their separate property became the property of the whole district. The value of the property in the districts was unequal, and in some no taxes were collected or levied at the date of consolidation. An injunction was sought by tax payers in an old district to restrain the collection of taxes in the new because not uniform. Held, that the legislature had power to abolish and consolidate the districts, and to apportion their property, and the manner of the apportionment was a legislative question, which the court cannot review. ZANE, C. J., dissenting. — Lowe v. Hardy, (Utah.) 26 P. 982; Ashton v. Same, Id.; Raybould v. Same, Id.

Use of school-house—Injunction.

5. The limits of a city were extended so as to include that part of a school-district on which the school-house was situate. The directors of the district having refused to allow the board of education to take possession of the school-house, a temporary injunction was granted restraining them from interfering with the action of the board, but the order was vacated on motion. Held, that there was no error in vacating the injunction. — Board of Education of City of Kansas City v. School-Dist. No. 7, (Kan.) 26 P. 13.

Employment of teachers.

6. The board of education of the city and county of San Francisco, under the authority given it by Act Cal. April 1, 1872, to employ teachers, and fix, allow, and order paid their salaries, cannot appoint and employ "inspecting teachers" to perform duties imposed by the act on the board itself, and on the superintendent, consisting of visiting the schools, ascertaining their condition by oral examinations, observing the methods of the teachers, and giving them advice and instructions in the methods of teaching. — Barry v. Goad, (Cal.) 26 P. 735.

Taxation.

7. By Act Leg. Assem. Utah 1890, §§ 100-116, the separate school-districts in Salt Lake City were abolished and consolidated into one, and their separate property became the property of the whole district. The school trustees, having estimated the amount needed for school purposes, reported it to the tax-payers, who thereupon voted a levy of 1 per cent., which, upon the valuation for that year, would raise the sum required. The county officials, however, extended the tax upon the roll of the following year, thus raising thrice the sum required, which would necessarily be used for school purposes outside of the old district, which had been abolished, and its property merged in a new one. Held that, in construing Comp. Laws Utah 1888, § 1918, providing for the computation of taxes by county officials upon the assessment roll, the court would give effect to the intention of the tax-payers, and, to prevent injustice, would require the tax to be collected upon the roll of the year in which it was voted. ZANE, C. J., dissenting. — Lowe v. Hardy, (Utah.) 26 P. 982; Ashton v. Same, Id.; Raybould v. Same, Id.

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES.

Compensation.

1. Act March 31, 1891, reclassifying the counties for the purpose of regulating the compensation of county officers, but making no provisions as to sheriffs of counties of the thirty-fifth class, and providing that the act, unless otherwise provided, so far as it relates to all officers named, " * * * shall not affect the present incumbents, does not affect Act March 14, 1891, so far as the latter relates to the salaries of such sheriffs. — Cody v. Murphey, (Cal.) 26 P. 1081.

Liability for wrongful seizure.

2. In a suit on a constable's bond, the petition alleged that the plaintiff was in the possession of certain property worth $190, by virtue of a chattel mortgage, and that the principal defendant, as constable, seized the property while in the possession of the plaintiff, and by force removed it, and still refused to deliver the same to the plaintiff. The sufficiency of the petition was first challenged after judgment. The answer justified the seizure under an attachment, and the judgment recited that the constable had no process authorizing him to seize and take the property from the possession of the plaintiff. Held, that the petition was sufficient, and that it did not appear from the recital in the judgment that the seizure was not an official act. — Richardson v. Samuelson, (Kan.) 26 P. 12.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Contracts enforceable.

1. By an agreement in writing, R. let to the plaintiff certain cattle, to be by him kept on R.'s land, and the increase divided between them. R. was to retain full possession of the land, and to make improvements as he felt able. The plaintiff was to have his home with R., and to care for him, and, at R.'s death, "the right and interest of" the land was to "vest in" the plaintiff. R. died a few months after making the agreement. Held that, as to the land, the instrument was testamentary in character, and the plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance. — Hasleton v. Reed, (Kan.) 26 P. 450.

2. The owner of land agreed to sell it to an attorney in consideration of $200, and of his clearing the title at his own expense from a cloud created by a sale on execution against the owner. The attorney brought ejectment in the name of the owner against the purchaser at the execution sale, and the latter then procured a quitclaim deed from the plaintiff, with full knowledge of the agreement with the attorney. Held, that the attorney could intervene by cross-petition, and have specific performance of the agreement, and recover possession of the land. — Montgomery v. Nulton, (Kan.) 26 P. 30.

3. A mining company advertised for bids for the lease of its property, in answer to which plaintiff offered "to take lease on the whole property at 35 per cent. royalty at eighteen months, and agree to expend at least $5,000 every month in development work; I to have 30 days to begin work, in order to make examination of property, and put machinery in place. Lease to date from time of commencing work. Settlement as usual." At a meeting of the officers of the mining company it was moved and carried that plaintiff's bid be accepted, and the president empowered to draw up a lease in conjunction with plaintiff, and present it to the board of directors for their consideration. The president thereupon telegraphed to plaintiff that the lease had been awarded to him. Held, that the time for the beginning of the term, as fixed by plaintiff's offer, is sufficiently definite to support a decree of specific performance. Bissell, C., and HARR, J., dissenting.—Cochrane v. Justice Mining Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 780.

4. The words "settlement as usual," in connection with the specified royalty, are sufficiently definite as to the matter of compensation where they may refer either to the custom of the district or to the terms of settlement under a prior lease that plaintiff had of the same property. Bissell, C., and HARR, J., dissenting.—Cochrane v. Justice Mining Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 780.

5. It is no defense to a suit for specific performance of a contract to lease a mine that defendant mining company had already leased a part of the property, and could not make a lease of the whole, especially where plaintiff had offered to take the residue. Bissell, C., and HARR, J., dissenting.—Cochrane v. Justice Mining Co., (Colo.) 26 P. 780.

6. An oral agreement for the exchange of land cannot be enforced by one whose title is defective, when the agreement was that the exchange should be made if titles were satisfactory.—Swain v. Burnette, (Cal.) 26 P. 1098.

Contracts enforceable—Part performance.

7. In a suit for specific performance of a parol contract to convey land, followed by part performance, the evidence must show that the acts of part performance were done by complainant, and with defendant's consent, and that they were done in pursuance of the contract, and with a design of carrying it into execution.—Foster v. Maginnis, (Cal.) 26 P. 828.

8. In an action for specific performance, the evidence showed that defendant placed the property in the hands of an agent to sell or exchange, and by his efforts met plaintiff, and agreed orally to exchange with him. Plaintiff left a deed with the agent, but defendant refused to accept it. Held, that a delivery to the agent was not a delivery to defendant, so as to constitute part performance, and take the agreement out of the statute of frauds.—Swain v. Burnette, (Cal.) 26 P. 1098.

Pleading.

9. A complaint for specific performance, which alleges that defendant executed a contract wherein it offered to convey lands at a certain price, and to keep the offer open for two years, provided plaintiff would insure the property for defendant's benefit, is insufficient, when it fails to allege that plaintiff did insure the property.—Chadbourne v. Stockton Savings & Loan Soc., (Cal.) 26 P. 529.

10. Where an option to sell land provided that the offer should be kept open for two years, provided a certain yearly rental should be paid as specified in a certain lease, the complaint for specific performance, drawn nearly a year after such rental is due, which fails to allege payment thereof, is insufficient.—Chadbourne v. Stockton Savings & Loan Soc., (Cal.) 26 P. 529.

Evidence.

11. Plaintiffs sued for specific performance of a written contract to purchase "40 acres of the 90-acre tract at Biggs," and offered evidence that defendant agreed to purchase the east half of the tract if plaintiffs would agree to sell the west half to one B., and that the west half had been sold to B. under a contract made at the same time as defendant's. Held, that the evidence was admissible, and showed an agreement by defendant to purchase the east half of the tract.—Preble v. Abrahams, (Cal.) 26 P. 99.

Decree.

12. Defendant cannot object to a decree of specific performance of a contract to buy land on the ground that the land is incumbered, where the decree only authorizes a judgment against him on deposit by plaintiffs with the clerk of a deed free of incumbrance.—Preble v. Abrahams, (Cal.) 26 P. 19.

STARE DECISIS.

Rule of property.

1. The decision of the supreme court of Oregon that under Hill's Code Or. § 499, which provides that the party in whose favor a divorce is granted shall be entitled to a third of the real estate of the other party, and that "it shall be the duty of the court in all such cases to enter a decree in accordance with this provision," the party in whose favor a decree is granted does not acquire either a legal or equitable right to the property of the adverse party by the decree, where the complaint contains no allegations concerning property, and the decree contains nothing on the subject, having stood unquestioned for many years, has become a rule of property.—Ross v. Ross, (Or.) 26 P. 1007.

Response to legislative question.

2. The decisions of this court deliberately announced in litigated cases ought not to be overruled on ex parte arguments in response to legislative questions.—In re House Resolutions Concerning Street Improvements, (Colo.) 26 P. 323.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Compensation.

Const. Idaho, art. 8, § 8, provides that the sessions of the legislature shall, after the first, be held biennially on the first Monday after the first of January, and at other times when convened by the governor. Section 28 reads: "Each member shall receive for his services a sum not exceeding $5 per day from the commencement of the session, but such pay shall not exceed for each member in the aggregate $300 for per diem allowances for any one session; and shall receive each the sum of 10 cents per mile each way by the usual traveled route." "When convened in extra session by the governor they shall each receive $5 per day," and such mileage as is allowed for "regular sessions." Held, that section 28 did not limit to $300 the aggregate per diem allowance to each member for the first session, but only for the regular sessions to be held thereafter. Huxton, J., dissenting.—Goodnight v. Moody, (Idaho,) 26 P. 121.

STATES AND STATE OFFICERS.

See, also, State Legislature.

Mandamus to auditor, see Mandamus, 8, 4.

Qualification of officers.

1. St. Cal. April 15, 1880, declares the "state agricultural society" a state institution, to be managed by the "state board of agriculture," consisting of 12 directors, to be appointed by the governor. Held, that the qualification of one appointed a director of the "state board of agriculture" is not vitiated by the fact that his official oath designated the office as that of director of "the state agricultural society;" the variance being unimportant.—People v. Perkins, (Cal.) 26 P. 245.

Beginning of fiscal year.

2. The fiscal year of 1891, in Colorado, began December 1, 1890, and will end November 30, 1891.—In re House Resolution No. 25, (Colo.) 26 P. 145.

Appropriations.

3. The general assembly may properly appropriate to the support of the state government for the fiscal years 1891 and 1892 any surplus remaining after the payment of previous appropriations, and all revenues coming into the state treasury for those years, including taxes for such years to be hereafter levied.—In re House Resolution No. 25, (Colo.) 26 P. 145.

4. Taxes levied for a fiscal year must be treated as revenue for that year, though they may not be collected and reach the treasury before the commencement of the following fiscal year, and are to be considered in determining whether the appropriations by the legislature provide for expenditures which exceed "the total tax provided by law," which is prohibited by Const. Mont. art. 12, § 12.—State v. Kenney, (Mont.) 26 P. 383.

— Payment of claims against state.

5. Const. Mont. art. 12, § 10, provides that no money shall be drawn from the state treasury except upon specific appropriations made by law. Held that, in the absence of an appropriation, the state auditor properly refused to issue his warrant on the treasurer for salary due the clerk employed by the code commissioners, under 16th Sess. Acts Mont. p. 117, § 4, authorizing such commissioners to employ a clerk, and directing his salary to be paid monthly by the auditor on vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the commission.—State v. Kenney, (Mont.) 26 P. 383.

6. Where the legislature has made an appropriation for a claim against the state, and it has been examined, approved, and transmitted to the auditor by the state board of examiners, and the taxes levied for the year are less than the total appropriations, it is the duty of the auditor to issue his warrant on the treasurer for the claim. He cannot refuse on the ground that there is no money in the treasury for its immediate payment.—State v. Kenney, (Mont.) 26 P. 383.

STATUTES.

Titles of acts.

Sess. Laws Kan. 1889, c. 98, entitled "An act authorizing the county commissioners of Wabaunsee county to appropriate money," etc., provides: "The county commissioners of Wabaunsee county are hereby authorized and empowered, and it is made their duty, to appropriate such sum of money as may be necessary to keep in repair" a certain bridge. Held, that the words, "it is hereby made their duty," being broader than the title, must, to sustain the constitutionality of the act, be regarded as nugatory; that it was discretionary with the commissioners to make repairs, and they could not be compelled to do so by mandamus.—State v. Board County Com'rs Wabaunsee County, (Kan.) 26 P. 483.

Equalization.

1. Gen. St. Nev. § 1091, relative to the board of equalization of taxes, makes its action final except in cases of fraud; and fraud on the part of the assessor is no ground for disturbing a valuation where no fraud is alleged on the part of the board which confirmed the valuation.—State v. Central Pac. R. Co., (Nev.) 26 P. 1109.

2. Gen. St. Nev. § 1091, provides that the board of equalization shall have the power to determine all complaints in regard to the assessed value of any property, but makes no provision for a new trial or rehearing. Held that, after the board has heard a complaint and fixed the value of property, it cannot reconsider the matter, and reduce the assessment.—State v. Central Pac. R. Co., (Nev.) 26 P. 225.

Collection.

3. Sess. Laws Kan. 1877, provides that when land has been sold, bid in by the county at any tax-sale, and shall remain unredeemed, and the certificate of sale untransferred, for three years, the county may file a petition describing the land "on which such taxes may be due and unpaid," and cause a notice to be published notifying all persons to appear and show cause why the land should not be sold for such taxes. "The invalidity of any tax-sale for any cause shall be no defense to the proceedings hereunder, if any taxes be due and unpaid." "All persons interested in any such land shall be considered as personally parties defendant, * * * whether named in such petition or not." "It shall be the duty of the district court to investigate and decide what taxes shall have been legally assessed and charged on such land, * * * and to render judgment therefor, * * * and to charge the same as a lien on such land * * * and to enter the sale of the same for the payment of such taxes." Proceedings under this statute, having been taken against land which had been sold and bid in by the county for taxes assessed against it while it was government land, held, that there were no taxes "due and unpaid" on the land, and the district court was without jurisdiction, and its judgment and the sale thereunder were void. Modifying 34 P. 944.—Doty v. Bassett, (Kan.) 26 P. 51.

4. A warrant to collect taxes is not a "process," within the meaning of the provision of the constitution relative to judicial proceedings, and it is not essential to its validity that it shall run in the name of the people.—Haley v. Elliott, (Colo.) 26 P. 559.

Sale for non-payment.

5. Gen. St. Kan. 1888, c. 107, § 120, provided that if, after the issue of a tax-sale certificate, the county clerk shall discover that for any error the land ought not to be conveyed, the county treasurer shall, on the return of the certificate, refund the amount paid therefor. Gen. St. 1889, c. 107, § 145, provides that if, after the issue of any tax-sale certificate, the board of county commissioners shall discover that for any error the land ought not to be conveyed, they may order the county clerk not to convey the same, and, on the return of the certificate with a certified copy of such order, the county treasurer shall refund the amount paid therefor. Held, that the statute of 1889 applied to certificates issued before its passage; that when a certificate was presented to the county commissioners, and their attention directed to an error rendering it invalid, it was their duty to make the order on the county clerk; and that when the irregularity appeared on the face of the tax proceedings, and the certificate was not presented to the commissioners within three years from its issue, the right to a return of the money paid therefor was barred by Code Civil Proc. Kan. § 18, limiting to three years actions on a liability created by statute other than a penalty or forfeiture.—Rork v. Board of County Com'rs Douglas County, (Kan.) 26 P. 391.

Tax-deed.

6. A tax-deed reciting that it is based on an assessment to a certain person "and unknown owners" is void.—Jatunn v. O'Brien, (Cal.) 26 P. 635.

7. A tax-deed recited that 4 lots described were subject to taxation for a certain year, and, the tax not being paid, they were sold separately to a single purchaser. In the recital of the sales, the description of each tract was distinct from the others, but all were described together in the body of the deed. In the subsequent recitals they were all referred to as "said property." The granting clause then provided that, in consideration of the taxes due and paid on "said land," the county clerk conveyed to the purchaser "the real property last hereinbefore described." Held, that the deed was valid on its face, and effectually conveyed all four of the lots.—Cartwright v. Korman, (Kan.) 26 P. 48.

Limitation of action against purchaser.

8. Comp. Laws Kan. 1885, c. 107, § 127, provides that land sold for taxes may be redeemed within three years from the sale, and section 128, that the lands of insane persons may be redeemed within five years from the sale. Section 141 provides that any suit against the tax purchaser for the recovery of the land, or to defeat a conveyance of land sold for taxes, shall be limited to five years from the recording of the tax-deed, except in cases where the taxes have been paid or the land redeemed. Code Civil Proc. Kan. § 16, provides that actions to recover lands, or to determine any right or interest therein, shall be brought within the time therein limited, and section 17 provides that any person entitled to bring an action for the recovery of real estate, who may be under any legal disability when the cause of action accrues, may bring his action in two years after his disability is removed. Held, that Comp. Laws 1885, c. 107, § 141, limited to five years from the recording of the tax-deed an action to recover lands sold for taxes brought by one who was insane when his cause of action accrued.—Cartwright v. Korman, (Kan.) 26 P. 48.

Remedies for erroneous taxation.

9. Before an injunction can be granted to restrain the levying or collection of a tax, some step must be taken by the taxing officers towards the levying or collection of the same. Following Wyandotte & K. C. Bridge Co. v. Board of County Comm'rs, 10 Kan. 826; Challiss v. City of Atchison, 89 Kan. 276, 18 P. 195.—Andrews v. Love, (Kan.) 26 P. 746.

10. Although the enlarged or additional remedy given by Civil Code Kan. § 258, to a tax-payer to restrain the collection of an illegal tax is a statutory remedy, yet, if it is shown that the principles of estoppel apply against the tax-payer, the jurisdiction of the court under the statute is to be exercised upon equitable principles, and the tax-payer, to succeed, must exhibit a case in which upon the merits he is entitled to the equitable relief demanded.—Stewart v. Hovey, (Kan.) 26 P. 683.

TERRITORIES.

Power of eminent domain, see Eminent Domain, 3.
Legislative power.

1. Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, subd. 4, providing that congress shall have power to establish "uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States," does not qualify the plenary legislative power of congress over the territories; and hence Rev. St. U. S. § 1351, providing that the "legislative power of every territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States," authorized the legislature of Wyoming to pass Rev. St. Wyo. § 118, declaring that any creditor accepting a dividend from the property of an assignor shall release him from all further liability on the claim.—Downes v. Parshall, (Wyo.) 26 P. 994.

Taxation of property on Indian reservation.

2. Organic Act Ariz. § 1839, provides that it shall not "include any territory which, by treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of such tribe, to be embraced within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any state or territory." Held that, in the absence of such a treaty, a railroad track and right of way through an Indian reservation was subject to taxation by the territory.—Persons, etc., in Delinquent List of Maricopa County for 1888-89 v. Territory, (Ariz.) 26 P. 810; In re Phoenix & M. R. Co., Id.

8. Rev. St. U. S. § 1839, provides that "nothing in this title [The Territories] shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property pertaining to the Indians in any territory so long as such rights remain unextinguished by treaty, * * * or to include any territory which by treaty with any Indian tribe is not, without the consent of such tribe, embraced within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any state or territory, but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries and constitute no part of any territory now or hereafter organized." The treaty of July 3, 1868, with the Shoshones, pursuant to which their reservation was established, contains no reservation or exception whereby it should be excluded and excepted out of the territory within which it was situated. Held, that the reservation was included within the territory, and that cattle thereon, belonging to a white person in no wise connected with the Indians, were subject to taxation in the county within which the reservation lay.—Torrey v. Baldwin, (Wyo.) 26 P. 908.

TRADE-MARKS.What constitutes infringement.

1. A trade-mark, consisting of the picture of a tobacco plant and the words "Fabrica Tobaccos," which together had been in common use in the tobacco business, with the words "El Cavo" above, and beneath the words "De R. Solis," "Habana," "Copyrighted," "R. Solis, Manufacturer, Denver," is not infringed by a label having a similar picture, the words "Fabrica Tobaccos" on either side of the picture, the words "El Cavo," and beneath the words "De Pozo & Suarez," "Habana," and "Pozo & Suarez, Manufacturers, Denver, Colo.," since, taken as a whole, they are not so similar that a purchaser using ordinary care and caution would likely mistake the one for the other.—Solis Cigar Co. v. Pozo, (Colo.) 26 P. 556.

Relief against infringement.

2. The presence of the word "Copyrighted" on a label, when in fact it had not been copyrighted, was not such a misrepresentation as would prevent the owner's receiving protection. — Solis Cigar Co. v. Pozo, (Colo.) 26 P. 556.

3. The use of the word "Habana" on a label, when in fact the cigars on which the label appeared were merely Havana filler, is such a deceit on the public that equity will furnish no relief against an infringement. — Solis Cigar Co. v. Pozo, (Colo.) 26 P. 556.

4. After adoption of a trade-mark by R. Solis, the Solis Manufacturing Company was incorporated, and R. Solis, who became its manager and largest stockholder, turned over to it his whole business, good-will, and trade, and, although there was no formal transfer of the trade-mark, the corporation continued its use. Held, that the corporation would not be denied relief against a third person on account of the condition of the title. — Solis Cigar Co. v. Pozo, (Colo.) 26 P. 556.

TRIAL.

Conduct of trial.

1. The court referred the jury to the petition for the terms of a contract alleged to have been violated, and for certain statements alleged to have been made by the defendant, designating where each might be found in the petition by pencil marks, but the construction of the pleadings and the determination of the issues were not left to the jury. Held, that there was no prejudicial error. — Myer v. Moon, (Kan.) 26 P. 40.

Taking papers to jury-room.

2. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 612, which provides that the jury, on retiring, may take with them all papers which have been received as evidence in the cause, except such as should not, in the opinion of the court, be taken from the person having them in possession, the court does not abuse its discretion by permitting the jury to take with them the claim on which the action is based, which forms a part of the complaint, and which has been received in evidence. — McLean v. Crow, (Cal.) 26 P. 596.

Reception of evidence.

3. The admission of improper evidence will not require a reversal when the special findings show that it could not have been prejudicial. — Southern Kan. Ry. Co. v. Walsh, (Kan.) 26 P. 45.

4. Permitting a case to be reopened, after sustaining a demurrer to evidence, and allowing further evidence to be introduced, being within the discretion of the trial court, is not ground of reversal. — Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bank of Glen Elder, (Kan.) 26 P. 680.

Objections to evidence.

5. The supreme court cannot consider an exception on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence, unless the particulars wherein it is insufficient are specified, as required by Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 643. — Eltzroth v. Ryan, (Cal.) 26 P. 647.

6. An objection to evidence, to be available, should be made and excepted to when it is introduced. — State v. Probasco, (Kan.) 26 P. 749.

7. The admission of evidence against a general objection is not ground of reversal, where the admission of part of the evidence was necessary, and the objection did not specifically point out any particular part as erroneous. — Parker v. Richardson, (Kan.) 26 P. 729.

8. Where, in a trial to the court, testimony is received subject to a decision as to its competency on final hearing, and on a motion to strike out, and no further objection to its admission is made, and no exception reserved, the appellate court cannot pass on its admissibility. Bissell,

C., dissenting. — Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, (Colo.) 26 P. 774.

Demurrer to evidence.

9. Where a demurrer to the evidence is interposed, and there is some evidence tending to establish the issues made by the pleadings, the demurrer should be overruled. — Benninghoff v. Cubbison, (Kan.) 26 P. 14.

Arguments of counsel.

10. In a suit on an insurance policy, the plaintiff's counsel, in stating his case to the jury, said: "The reason that we make this proof is to show you that an insurance company cannot issue a policy, take a man's money and give him something in return which is absolutely worthless the moment it is issued,—not worth the paper it is written on." Held, that there was no prejudicial error. — Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Weeks, (Kan.) 26 P. 410.

Instructions.

11. It is not error to refuse an instruction containing a correct abstract proposition of law, but having no application to the issues. — Johnson v. Jones, (Colo.) 26 P. 684.

12. Where the court has charged that expert evidence as to the value of plaintiffs' services is not conclusive, and that it is only intended to supplement the general knowledge and experience of the jury in relation to the matters before them, and that they must exercise their own judgment upon the facts, independently of the opinion evidence, it is proper to refuse a further instruction that such evidence should be received with scrutiny and much caution. — McLean v. Crow, (Cal.) 26 P. 596.

13. The mere misuse, by inadvertence, of "and" in place of "or" in a charge to the jury which has clearly and repeatedly stated the law correctly, is harmless error, which will not warrant a reversal. — O'Connor v. Langdon, (Idaho,) 26 P. 659.

14. In an action for the conversion of the trees, in which only single damages can be recovered, an erroneous instruction that the jury may award treble damages is not cured by a verdict awarding a certain sum as "single damages," as some of the jurors, under the charge, may well have agreed to a large verdict for "single damages" if others consented to waive "treble damages." — McLeod v. Ellis, (Wash.) 26 P. 76.

15. In an action for damages to property abutting upon a street, the complaint alleged that an embankment had been constructed by the receiver in addition to one already built in the middle of the street prior to the time plaintiff acquired title and claimed damages for such addition. The court instructed the jury as to the measure of damages for the injuries caused by the construction of the embankment in the first instance. Held that, as the only issue was upon the question of damages caused by the construction of the addition, the instruction was erroneous. — Jackson v. Ackroyd, (Colo.) 26 P. 182.

16. It is not error to refuse an instruction, the substance of which has been given. — Gaynor v. Clements, (Colo.) 26 P. 824.

17. Where it was shown that a former member of a firm offered to pay one-half of the partnership debt for an individual release from the other portion, but there was no evidence of a legal tender of the amount, it was erroneous and misleading to charge that a tender was an offer to pay the amount due in cash. — Burlock v. Cross, (Colo.) 26 P. 142.

18. Instructions assigning several different dates from which the statute of limitations will begin to run against a party are conflicting and confusing, and constitute reversible error. — Haight v. Vallet, (Cal.) 26 P. 897.

Requests.

19. Where the court has instructed the jury properly, but omits some matter which might with propriety have been given, no substantial error is committed, unless the court has been requested to instruct with reference to such matter.

State v. Peterson, 38 Kan. 204, 16 P. 263, followed. —State v. Falk, (Kan.) 26 P. 1023.

20. Defendant cannot complain of a failure to charge on a question, when he made no request therefor. —Mackey v. Briggs, (Colo.) 26 P. 131.

Instructions—Exceptions.

21. Where the whole charge to the jury proceeds on a false theory, and there is no reason to suppose that the error was inadvertent, a general exception is sufficient. —Snyder v. Viola Mining & Smelting Co., (Idaho,) 26 P. 127.

22. A general exception is not sufficient to a charge containing several propositions of law, the general scope of which is correct. —Myer v. Moon, (Kan.) 26 P. 40.

23. Error cannot be predicated upon instructions given, but not excepted to at the time. —State v. Probasco, (Kan.) 26 P. 749.

24. An objection that the court in its instructions did not fully and correctly state the law in a certain respect is not available on appeal, where no other or additional instructions were requested by the party, and where only a general exception was taken by him to the charge, although it contained several propositions of law. —Ryan v. Madden, (Kan.) 26 P. 679.

Verdict.

25. A jury will not be required to answer special questions submitted to them, where no evidence is introduced on which answers could be given. —Ft. Scott, W. & W. R. Co. v. Karracker, (Kan.) 26 P. 1027.

26. In submitting special questions to the jury, it is largely within the discretion of the trial court to determine how general or how special the questions should be. —Southern Kan. Ry. Co. v. Walsh, (Kan.) 26 P. 45.

27. Jurors sworn to well and truly try the matters at issue may make any special findings of fact raised under the pleadings, and need not be resworn during the trial, if the pleadings are not changed. —Londoner v. People, (Colo.) 26 P. 135.

Contradiction between general and special verdicts.

28. Where there is a discrepancy between the general and special verdicts the latter must control. —Leavenworth, N. & S. Ry. Co. v. Wilkins, (Kan.) 26 P. 18.

29. In a suit by the vendor on a contract for the sale of land, the purchaser pleaded that the contract was induced by fraudulent representations that the lay of the land was smooth and nice. The jury found this issue for the purchaser. They also found specially that the means of ascertaining the lay of the land were equally within the reach of both parties, and to the question, "Could the purchaser by the exercise of reasonable diligence have ascertained the facts relating to the lay of the land," the jury answered, "Yes; and we think he did." Held, that the special answers were not inconsistent with the general verdict, and that the last answer must be construed as meaning that the purchaser exercised reasonable diligence by making inquiry of the vendor before he signed the contract. —Stevens v. Matthewson, (Kan.) 26 P. 38.

Additional findings of fact by court.

30. In a suit to abate a mill-dam, which subjects the plaintiff's land to overflow, and for damages, the court may make findings of fact in addition to those made by the jury. —Drinkwater v. Sauble, (Kan.) 26 P. 433.

Trial by court.

31. Under Hill's Code Or. § 219, requiring that in cases tried by the court the decision shall state the facts found and the conclusions of law separately, all the material issues made by the pleadings must be passed upon; and where, in a suit to recover a drainage tax, defendant puts in a general denial, a finding "that the allegations of the complaint are not sustained, that said drainage district is not legally organized, and that said alleged tax has not been legally levied," is insufficient to sustain a judgment for defendant. McFadden v. Friendly, 9 Or. 223, overruled. —Drainage Dist. No. 4 of Washington County v. Crow, (Or.) 26 P. 843.

32. In an action by the vendee of land against the vendor for damages caused by misrepresentations in selling it, the court found that the value of the land without any prospect of a college or street-car line being built as represented was at the time of the sale $3,000; that, if the contract for building the street-car line had been let as represented, the market value of the land would have been $6,000; that with a good prospect that both the college and street-car line would be built the land would have been worth $8,000, which was the sum the vendee paid for it; that as it was, with the prospect of the building of the college then existing, the value was $5,000. Held, that a judgment for $3,000, based on the third and fourth branches of the finding, was not inconsistent with the finding as a whole, and would be sustained. —Harvey v. Hadley, (Cal.) 26 P. 792.

33. After a trial has practically ended, and the court has orally announced its decision, but has not filed its findings, it cannot be required to pass upon propositions submitted to it as proposed findings of law. —Wheatland Mill Co. v. Firrie, (Cal.) 26 P. 964.

34. In an action to restrain the diversion of water from a creek claimed by plaintiffs, the court found that plaintiffs were entitled to the use of waters therein, but did not find specifically how much; it also found that defendant was entitled to use so much of the water as flowed in the north channel of the creek. The plaintiffs requested the court to find the number of inches of water to which they were entitled. Held, that to avoid a multiplicity of suits, and in order to finally determine the rights of the parties, the finding should have been made; especially as Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 280, provides that no judgment shall be reversed for want of a finding of facts, at the instance of any party who shall not have requested such finding. —Estill v. Irvine, (Mont.) 26 P. 1005.

35. Where, in an action to restrain the diversion of water claimed by plaintiffs by prior appropriation, one of the defendants is enjoined, and it is found that the others had a right to divert the water in the mode and to the extent they were diverting it, plaintiffs cannot complain of a failure to find that said defendants were threatening a further diversion, in the absence of evidence affecting the correctness of the former finding. —Dedmon v. Moffitt, (Cal.) 26 P. 800.

36. Where the answer in an action for the unpaid price of land admits the allegations of the complaint as to the terms of sale, and there is nothing in the record to affirmatively show that the parties have actually tried issues outside of the pleadings, a finding by the court establishing different terms of sale from those alleged and admitted will be disregarded on appeal. Explaining Horton v. Dominguez, 68 Cal. 642, 10 P. 186. —Ortega v. Cordero, (Cal.) 26 P. 80.

37. A finding of law "that plaintiff is entitled to judgment, that plaintiff take nothing by this action, but that defendants * * * have judgment against plaintiff for their costs herein," is sufficiently clear to support a judgment for defendants. —Dougherty v. Ward, (Cal.) 26 P. 633.

38. In an action on a note, where there was a conflict in the findings of the court below,—three findings that the consideration of the note was the sale of property described in a certain written agreement, and two findings that the consideration included certain land-warrants not referred to in said agreement,—a judgment based thereon is a decision against law, for which a new trial may be had. McFarland, J., dissenting. —Langan v. Langan, (Cal.) 26 P. 764.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

When action lies.

1. The common-law rule that trover will not lie in favor of the mortgagor against the mortgagee who has taken possession of the goods for condition broken is not changed by the Colorado Code of Civil Procedure, which abolishes the forms of action, and hence, in the absence of fraud, the mortgagor cannot recover of the mortgagee the difference between the value of the goods taken possession of by him and the price for which he sold them.—First Nat. Bank v. Willbur, (Colo.) 26 P. 777.

2. A written order by the owner of personal property, authorizing plaintiff to dispose of it, and collect the proceeds, does not transfer the title to plaintiff, and does not enable him to maintain trover against a third person, who converted the same to his own use. Dr Witt, J., dissenting—Swenson v. Kleinschmidt, (Mont.) 26 P. 198.

Evidence.

3. Where in an action for the value of two transits it appears that defendant bought out a firm to whom plaintiffs had delivered two transits for sale, and that, just after the sale, defendant, acting on information afforded him by one of the clerks of the firm, wrote plaintiffs that he had the transits, but afterwards discovered that one of the transits belonged to another, to whom he surrendered it, and so told plaintiffs, the evidence is insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiffs for the value of that transit.—Mitchell v. Reed, (Colo.) 26 P. 342.

TRUSTS.

Enforcement, see Limitation of Actions, 8, 9.

Express trusts.

1. In an action to recover property claimed to have been conveyed in trust to plaintiff's aunt by deed which was absolute, the plaintiff testified that she signed a paper, and her aunt said, "I will hold the property for you;" that she did not know what the paper was, and did not discover it until her aunt's death; and that she received nothing for the conveyance. Held sufficient to establish the trust.—Butler v. Hyland, (Cal.) 26 P. 1108.

Resulting trusts.

2. Plaintiff and her two daughters, E. and H., bought a home, plaintiff paying the purchase money, except small contributions from the daughters' earnings. The title was taken in the name of E., who, against her will, as she testified, conveyed one-half to H., and the other half to plaintiff. Plaintiff and E. testified that the purchase was by and for plaintiff only; that E. negotiated for the purchase and took the title in her name because plaintiff could not speak nor write English; and that she, with her family, occupied the property as a residence for eight years, during which she paid the taxes and insurance. H. testified that she and E. bought the property, and was somewhat corroborated, and she introduced a lease to plaintiff, but both E. and plaintiff denied that they knew of or authorized it. Held, that a decree that H. held the title to half the property under a resulting trust for plaintiff was proper.—Lundy v. Hanson, (Colo.) 26 P. 816.

Constructive trusts.

3. Where one without consideration conveys land to one standing in a confidential relation with him, with the understanding that he shall hold it for the benefit of the grantor, equity will raise a constructive trust, which may be established by parol; and Gen. St. Nev. § 2624, providing that no trust concerning lands shall be created except by act or operation of law, or by deed or conveyance in writing, etc., will not apply.—Bowler v. Curlier, (Nev.) 26 P. 226.

4. In an action to have a trust as to certain real and personal property declared and enforced, plaintiff alleged that, being so far deranged that he was entirely incompetent to transact any business, he was induced to convey the property to defendant by his false and fraudulent representations that he would take care of and manage it, pay off plaintiff's debts, and then retransfer the property to plaintiff; that there was no other consideration; that defendant knew the representations to be false and untrue, and made the same with intent to deceive and defraud plaintiff. Held, that the facts alleged show a trust arising from fraud under Civil Code Cal. § 852, providing that trusts may be created by writing or "by operation of law," and parol evidence was admissible to prove the allegations tending to establish the fraudulent acts.—Hays v. Gloster, (Cal.) 26 P. 367.

TURNPIKES AND TOLL-ROADS.

Refusal of county board to fix rates.

1. Civil Code Cal. § 514, provides that "wagon road corporations * * * may take such tolls only * * * as are fixed by the supervisors of the proper county through which the road passes." Held, that the board of supervisors had no authority arbitrarily to refuse to fix such rates for a corporation which had been in operation over 12 years.—Stony Hill Turnpike Road Co. v. Board of Sup'rs Placer County, (Cal.) 26 P. 513.

2. Civil Code Cal. § 514, provides that "wagon road corporations * * * may take such tolls only * * * as are fixed by the board of supervisors of the proper county through which the road passes." Held, that the board of supervisors had no authority arbitrarily to refuse to fix such rates for a corporation which had been operating a toll-road for 15 years.—Volcano Canyon Road Co. v. Board of Sup'rs Placer County, (Cal.) 26 P. 513.

— Questions raised in mandamus proceedings.

3. On mandamus by a toll-road company to compel the board of county supervisors to fix its rates of toll, the board cannot raise any question as to whether plaintiff was lawfully incorporated, or whether it is the owner, and entitled to the possession, of the toll-road, when it has held possession for 15 years.—Volcano Canyon Road Co. v. Board of Sup'rs Placer County, (Cal.) 26 P. 513.

USURY.

What constitutes.

A note of $177 stipulated that interest should be paid thereon after maturity at the rate of 3 per cent. a month. It was shown that the face of the note was made by adding to $150, the actual loan, $27, which was equal to the interest at 3 per cent. a month from the date of the note to its maturity. Held, that as to this $27 the interest after maturity was compound interest, contracted for in advance, and to that extent no recovery can be had, it being usurious.—Hochmark v. Richler, (Colo.) 26 P. 818.

The contract.

1. A contract, signed by both parties, reciting that the vendor agrees to sell land, is also an agreement by the vendee to purchase.—Freble v. Abrahams, (Cal.) 26 P. 99.

2. The fact that several persons unite in a note to secure money for the purchase of land does not of itself create a joint interest in all of them in the purchase that may be made.—Putnam v. Dungan, (Cal.) 26 P. 904.

Rights and remedies.

3. Plaintiffs and defendants agreed to purchase land at a certain price, each to pay one-third of the purchase money. The first installment was paid, but defendants, in whose names the deed was taken, paid the balance without notice to plaintiffs, and sold the land at an increased price. Held, that plaintiffs were entitled to one-third of the sale price, less the balance due from them on the purchase price.—Knaus v. Cahoon, (Utah,) 26 P. 295.

4. The purchaser of a lot agreed to assume a mortgage. He prepared a deed conveying the lot to another person, and read it to the vendor as if it was a conveyance to himself. The vendor could not read, and signed the deed, which was afterwards altered by the purchaser so as to make it appear that the vendor assumed the mortgage. Held, that the latter, who had been compelled to pay the debt, could recover the amount paid from the purchaser, and that parol evidence was competent to prove the fraud and the alteration of the deed.—Neiswanger v. McClellan, (Kan.) 26 P. 18.

5. Where the vendor and purchaser of a block of land live in the city in which it is situate, and the purchaser asks the vendor how the land lays, and is falsely told that it is smooth and nice, it is for the jury to say whether the purchaser is justified in relying on the representation.—Stevens v. Matthewson, (Kan.) 26 P. 38.

6. Where, in execution of a contract for the sale of land, a deed to a portion only of the land described is tendered, and it is accepted under protest and as a part performance only, it cannot be contended that the contract is merged in the deed, since the obligation cannot be satisfied by the conveyance of a part of the land.—Cavanaugh v. Casselman, (Cal.) 26 P. 515.

7. A grantee's possession of land could not be attacked by the heirs of the grantor on the ground of fraudulent concealment at the time of the purchase without tendering back the purchase money.—Burke v. Boura, (Cal.) 26 P. 102.

8. In an action for the balance of the price of certain land and "water certificates," defendants alleged that plaintiff, through his agent, fraudulently represented that water was piped to the land; that the right to the use of a certain amount of water was appurtenant to it, otherwise than as expressed in the water certificates; and that plaintiff would assign to defendants shares of stock in the company other than the water certificates. The evidence showed that the agent's authority was only to find a purchaser at a fixed price, and he denied having made any such representations. One of the defendants, at the time of his interview with plaintiff's agent, visited the land, and there was nothing there to indicate either pipe or water anywhere upon it. The water certificates, which showed on their face what they were, were delivered to defendants with the deed. It was admitted that a short time after the sale defendants knew there was no water piped on the land. Held, that the finding that there was no fraud on the part of plaintiff was justified by the evidence.—Williams v. Mitchell, (Cal.) 26 P. 632.

9. Where plaintiff has been turned out of possession of certain land by defendant, he need not demand the deed for a portion of the land defendant contracted to make him before he brings an action for damages.—Remy v. Olds, (Cal.) 26 P. 855.

Recovery of purchase money paid.

10. Where a deposit is made in part payment of real estate, under a contract for a deed, the vendee cannot recover the amount so deposited if he fails to tender the full amount of the contract price, and demand a deed as therein provided.—Dennis v. Strassburger, (Cal.) 26 P. 1070.

11. Where one makes a deposit upon a contract for the sale of real estate, which provides that 15 days shall be allowed for the examination of title, and, if defective, 30 days shall be allowed to perfect the same, he cannot sue to rescind, and recover the amount deposited, upon the ground of failure of title, before the expiration of the 30 days.—Dennis v. Strassburger, (Cal.) 26 P. 1070.

Damages for failure to convey.

12. In an action for damages for failure to convey land according to contract, evidence of witnesses pointing out to the court and defining the property in controversy, which was imperfectly described in the contract for its sale, was properly admitted to enable the court to determine whether defendant's conveyance and bill of sale were a full compliance with his agreement.—Cavanaugh v. Casselman, (Cal.) 26 P. 515.

Bona fide purchasers.

13. Defendant purchased certain real estate from a person in possession under a warranty deed, without notice of the fact that any part of the purchase price of the land was due by his vendor, paying his own purchase money therefor in full. Held, that defendant was a bona fide purchaser for value, unaffected by any equities of his vendor's grantor.—Carroll v. Gilham, (Or.) 26 P. 863.

14. In ejectment it appeared that A. and B. made an oral partition of land. Respondent's husband bought and paid for B.'s parcel, and took possession, but took no deed, and subsequently, by a decree of divorce, the land was awarded to respondent, who occupied it up to the suit. Thereafter A. and B. conveyed the land to appellant, both grantors and grantees having knowledge of the sale to respondent's husband, and her acquisition and occupancy of the premises. Held, that respondent had an equitable title thereto, and appellants, having bought with knowledge of her rights independent of the record, took nothing by their deed.—Ayers v. Jack, (Utah,) 26 P. 300; Same v. Leggett, Id.

VENUE IN CIVIL CASES.

Local and transitory actions.

1. A complaint alleged that defendant unlawfully cut trees on plaintiff's land, and thereby became indebted to plaintiff in the value of the trees. In another paragraph plaintiff prayed for treble damages under Code Wash. § 602, which relates to trespasses on land, and which allows treble damages where one person wrongfully cuts trees on the land of another. The action, however, was neither brought nor tried in the county in which the land was situated. Held that, to uphold the jurisdiction of the court, the paragraph relating to treble damages might be rejected as surplusage, and the action regarded as transitory in its nature, for the conversion of the trees, and, under Code Wash. § 48, properly brought in the district where the cause of action arose. Horr, J., dissenting.—McLeod v. Ellis, (Wash.) 26 P. 76.

2. Code Wash. § 47, provides that local actions shall be commenced in the county or district in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated; and section 48 provides that transitory actions shall be tried in the county or district where the cause of action, or some part thereof, arose. Held, that section 50, which provides that an action commenced in the wrong county may be tried therein, unless defendant, when he appears and pleads, demands that the trial be had in the proper county, applies only to the transitory actions enumerated in section 48, and not to the local actions enumerated in section 47, and that the failure of a defendant in an action involving injuries to land to demand a change of trial to the proper county does not confer jurisdiction on the district court of a county in which the land is not situated.—McLeod v. Ellis, (Wash.) 26 P. 76.

3. The provision in Code Wash. § 47, that local actions shall be tried in the "county or district" wherein the subject of the action is situated, does not extend the jurisdiction to the whole judicial district in which the subject of the action is situated, but the word "district" was intended to apply only to those cases where a county did not have the privilege of sessions of court within its limits, and was joined to another county for judicial purposes; and hence an action involving injuries to land must be tried in the county in which it is situated, and not in another county in the same judicial district.—McLeod v. Ellis, (Wash.) 26 P. 76.

4. Where an application is for a policy to be payable in accordance with the terms of a future will, and, pending that, to stand in favor of the lawful heirs, and in the policy as issued and forwarded to the agent who took the application the legal heirs are to be the beneficiaries, the contract is not consummated until it is accepted by the insured, and suit can be brought thereon, under Const. Cal. § 16, only in the county where the application was made and accepted, as the place of the contract, and not in the county where the policy was issued.—Yore v. Bankers' & Merchants' Mut. Life Ass'n of United States, (Cal.) 26 P. 514.

5. Under Code Civil Proc. Cal. §§ 392, 395, providing that actions to recover real property, or for the determination of any right therein, may be brought in the county where the real estate is situated, but "in all other cases" the action must be brought in the county of defendant's residence, a suit to compel the reconveyance of both real and personal property, and for an accounting of the rents and profits by defendant, and a personal judgment against him for the amount found to be due, must be brought in the county of defendant's residence, and not where the land is situated.—Smith v. Smith, (Cal.) 26 P. 356.

Change of venue.

6. Code Civil Proc. Mont. § 59, provides that actions on contract may be tried in the county in which the contract was to be performed, and actions for torts in the county where the tort was committed, subject, however, to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as provided in the act. Held that, where an employee brought suit in Jefferson county for personal injuries received while employed upon a railroad therein, a change of venue will not be granted, although such railroad is owned by a smelting company whose principal place of business is in another county.—Oels v. Helena & L. Smelting & Reduction Co., (Mont.) 26 P. 1000.

7. A complaint which alleged that a railroad was situated in Jefferson county, and that at the time of the injury plaintiff was "in the employment of the defendant as brakeman * * * upon such railroad" sufficiently sets forth where the contract of employment was to be performed.—Oels v. Helena & L. Smelting & Reduction Co., (Mont.) 26 P. 1000.

WATERS AND WATER-COURSES.

See, also, Irrigation: Riparian Rights.

Action for diversion of stream, joinder of causes, see Action, 1.

Water-rights and easements—Prescription.

1. The fact that riparian owners made no objection to the use of water by an appropriator during seasons of abundance, when it naturally flowed down the river, gives the appropriator no prescriptive right to change the course of the flow in seasons of scarcity for the purpose of continuing the supply.—Last Chance Water-Ditch Co. v. Heilbron, (Cal.) 26 P. 523.

2. Where of two parties in possession of certain water-rights it appeared that one had been the original appropriator, and that, after his ditch and flume had fallen into decay, he arranged with the grantor of the other that they should together repair and renew the ditch and flume, appropriating a quantity of new water from a different spring, and share the total flow equally, the subsequent acceptance by the grantee of the other party of a lease from the original appropriator will be held, in the absence of any other showing, to be a compromise of the respective rights, and the lessee, after enjoying the fruits of the compromise during the term of the lease, cannot afterwards repudiate it, and claim to have held the water adversely to the lessor.—Oneto v. Restano, (Cal.) 26 P. 788.

3. Repeated and long-continued incursions on the riparian owners' land by the appropriator, for the purpose of diverting the water into the latter's ditch, give it no prescriptive rights, where the riparian owners restored the water to its natural channel as often as they discovered the diversion.—Last Chance Water-Ditch Co. v. Heilbron, (Cal.) 26 P. 523.

4. A finding that the appropriator for five years, during the low-water season, diverted a stated quantity of water peaceably, openly, notoriously, continuously, and adversely to the riparian proprietors and their grantors, is not supported by evidence which shows that for the first two years the appropriator's ditch drew no water during the low-water period, and that for the succeeding years, by wrongfully entering on the riparian owners' land, without their knowledge, and diverting the water therefrom, the appropriator succeeded in shortening the time in which its ditch ran dry to four months in each year.—Last Chance Water-Ditch Co. v. Heilbron, (Cal.) 26 P. 523.

Prior appropriation.

5. The rights of an appropriator of water from a stream are superior to rights acquired by subsequent appropriations from its tributaries.—Strickler v. City of Colorado Springs, (Colo.) 26 P. 313.

6. Defendants are liable for actual injury to plaintiff by their diversion of the water previously appropriated by him, though they may not have used the water continuously, and may have used it only for a short time.—Carron v. Wood, (Mont.) 26 P. 388.

7. Plaintiffs appropriated 60 inches of the waters of a creek flowing through the federal government's lands in Oregon for mining and agricultural purposes, and afterwards homesteaded the lands at the point where the water was appropriated. Defendant, an adjacent downstream riparian owner, cut a ditch around plaintiff's dam, causing the diverted water to flow back in the old channel. When plaintiff's appropriation was made, defendant had only previously appropriated 15 inches of the stream to his use. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to the 60 inches, under Rev. St. U. S. § 2539, which provides that the rights of first appropriators of waters for mining, mechanical, and agricultural purposes shall be maintained and respected.—Speake v. Hamilton, (Or.) 26 P. 855.

Prior appropriation—Rights of cities.

8. Const. Colo. art. 16, provides: "Sec. 5. The water of every natural stream not heretofore appropriated * * * is hereby declared to be the property of the public, * * * subject to appropriation as hereinafter provided. Sec. 6. * * * Priority of appropriation shall give the better right, * * * but when the waters of any natural stream are not sufficient for the service of all those desiring the use of the same, those using the water for domestic purposes shall have the preference." Held that, for the domestic use of its inhabitants, a city could not, without compensation, take water appropriated for agricultural uses before the adoption of the constitution.—Strickler v. City of Colorado Springs, (Colo.) 26 P. 313.

Sale of easement to city.

9. A right to use the water of a stream for irrigation may be separated from the land in connection with which it ripened, and sold to a city for the use of its inhabitants.—Strickler v. City of Colorado Springs, (Colo.) 26 P. 313.

Extent of appropriation.

10. In an action for damages for diverting waters claimed by virtue of prior appropriation and use for purposes of irrigation, an instruction that the extent of the appropriation of water is determined by the capacity of plaintiff's "head-gate and ditches, and the quantity of water required" by him, to be measured as the statutes (Comp. St. Mont. p. 997, § 1263) provide, is not erroneous in making the test the head-gate, instead of what the ditch will carry.—Carron v. Wood, (Mont.) 26 P. 838.

11. The court instructed the jury that in determining the amount of water plaintiff was entitled to they should find the same in inches, measured in the manner provided by law for the measurement of water; and set out the law in detail in the charge. Held, that there was no error in striking out of the charge before giving it a clause that, in order to find the amount of water plaintiff was entitled to, the evidence and the jury's finding must conform to the measurements provided by the law, and, if the evidence did not, it was only speculative and uncertain, since such clause was mere repetition, and was on the weight of the evidence.—Carron v. Wood, (Mont.) 26 P. 838.

Action to enforce water-rights—Pleading.

12. An allegation in a complaint that plaintiff is owner of and entitled to all the water above defendant's dam in excess of 200 inches, and that by its construction, and a ditch diverting the flow, he has been deprived of over 450 inches of water, does not limit his claim to 450 inches, nor in any way qualify it.—Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, (Cal.) 26 P. 889.

13. Where the complaint alleged ownership and right of use in a certain portion of the waters of a river, an answer alleging that defendant was the owner of land through which the river flowed for a distance of about three miles, and that most of it was susceptible of, and would be benefited by, irrigation, is insufficient to raise any issue as to his right to take water by virtue of his riparian ownership, in the absence of an allegation that he was entitled as riparian owner to any definite amount of water, or what portion of the stream he could exhaust for irrigating, nor whether his land was located above or below the point of plaintiff's diversion.—Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, (Cal.) 26 P. 889.

Evidence.

14. In an action by the appropriator of the waters of a river to enjoin riparian proprietors from interfering with its rights, evidence as to the width and depth of the appropriator's ditch is insufficient to show its carrying capacity, in the absence of any evidence as to the velocity of the water or the grade of the ditch.—Last Chance Water-Ditch Co. v. Heilbron, (Cal.) 26 P. 523.

Findings and judgments.

15. Where the complaint states that the water was appropriated "in pursuance of notice duly given and made," a finding that the appropriator is entitled to water in 12 times the amount claimed in the notice cannot be sustained, as it is in conflict with and in excess of the allegations of the complaint.—Last Chance Water-Ditch Co. v. Heilbron, (Cal.) 26 P. 523.

16. A finding that plaintiff is the "owner" of all the water above defendant's dam in excess of a certain quantity is not in conflict with the rule that an appropriator of water does not become the owner until he has acquired its control by diverting it into conduits, when plaintiff is not seeking to recover the value of the water, but is seeking the determination of defendant's claim of a right to divert it.—Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, (Cal.) 26 P. 889.

17. Where the complaint alleged ownership and right of use in a certain portion of the waters of a river, an adverse and unfounded claim by defendant to, and a wrongful diversion of, a portion thereof, and the answer admits defendant's adverse claim, alleges that it is valid, and denies the wrongful diversion, a judgment that plaintiff has acquired a prescriptive right is not affected by a failure to find the facts as to prescription and the statute of limitations, since these issues are not raised by the pleadings.—Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, (Cal.) 26 P. 889.

Competency—Husband and wife.

1. In an action between a married woman and a third person, involving title to real estate, she may, under the Colorado statute, testify to the delivery of a deed to her by her husband, although such delivery took place during the existence of the marital relation.—Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, (Colo.) 26 P. 814.

Privileged communications.

2. Communications to plaintiff's attorney in a case which is fictitious are not privileged, since he was acting both for plaintiff and defendants.—Haley v. Eureka County Bank, (Nev.) 26 P. 64.

Transactions with decedents.

3. Civil Code Colo. 1887, § 58, which provides that, when cross-demands have existed between two persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counter-claim could have been set up, neither party shall be deprived of the benefit thereof by the death of the other, does not by implication repeal Gen. St. Colo. § 3641, which prohibits a party from testifying in his own behalf when the adverse party sues or defends as executor or administrator of any deceased person; and hence, in an action by an administrator, it is proper to reject the testimony of defendant as to a counter-claim set up by him against plaintiff's intestate.—Rathvon v. White, (Colo.) 26 P. 323.

4. Under St. Nev. 1881, p. 80, prohibiting a person from testifying when the other party to the transaction is dead, or when the opposite party to the action is the representative of a deceased person, as to facts which transpired before the death of such deceased person, defendant, in a suit by a surviving partner to foreclose a mortgage, cannot testify that the deceased partner accepted property under a verbal agreement in satisfaction of the mortgage.—Gage v. Phillips, (Nev.) 26 P. 60.

Examination.

5. In proving the market value of hops at a certain time and place, a witness was asked if he thought he knew what the price of hops was at Independence, November, 1888, and he answered: "Seventeen and a half cents. I knew of one man getting that who lived within two miles of Independence." Held not error to refuse to strike out the answer.—Bump v. Cooper, (Or.) 26 P. 848.

Cross-examination.

6. Where a director of a corporation which unlawfully appropriated water has testified, on his direct examination, that the corporation had used the water without interruption, it is error to exclude a question asked on cross-examination as to whether or not he had received notice from his agent that the diversion of the water had been interrupted.—Last Chance Water-Ditch Co. v. Heilbron, (Cal.) 26 P. 523.

7. Where, in a trial for larceny, a witness for the prosecution testifies to having seen defendant on the night of the stealing, but says nothing about any conversation with defendant, it is inadmissible for defendant to cross-examine him in respect to a conversation had at that time.—People v. Deegan, (Cal.) 26 P. 500.

8. On the cross-examination of a medical expert the reading of statements from medical works, and asking the witness if he agrees with the authors, cannot be allowed where the statements are evidently intended as evidence to sustain the theory of the party cross-examining, and not to affect the competency of the witness or the value of his testimony.—Fisher v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Cal.) 26 P. 894.

9. It is in the discretion of the court to limit the extent of the cross-examination of a witness.—Hamilton v. Miller, (Kan.) 26 P. 1030.

Redirect examination.

10. Where a matter of evidence is brought out for the first time on the cross-examination of a witness, the other party may re-examine upon the same matter.—Hamilton v. Miller, (Kan.) 26 P. 1030.

Credibility.

11. Where the witness has stated the reputation of another for veracity from what he has heard of it in the neighborhood, it is error for the court to state that he can only testify to what he knows of it of his own personal knowledge.—People v. Webster, (Cal.) 26 P. 1080.

12. The inmates of a low theater having been called as witnesses, the jury are the sole judges of their credibility, and it is error for the court to instruct that, since the law licenses such resorts, it is submitted whether it is justifiable to charge the inmates with want of veracity, unaccompanied by other proof.—People v. Wallace, (Cal.) 26 P. 650.

Impeachment.

13. A witness, who had lived for many years in another state, had removed to his place of residence at the time of the trial only a few months previous thereto. Held, that evidence as to his reputation for truth and veracity in the place of his former residence was competent to impeach him.—Coates v. Sulau, (Kau.) 26 P. 720.

14. The omission, from questions to witnesses as to the reputation for truth and veracity of a previous witness, of the word "general," does not render their testimony on the subject incompetent, where their answers show that they understood the question in a general sense, and the answers themselves are sufficiently general.—Coates v. Sulau, (Kan.) 26 P. 730.

15. A defendant in a criminal prosecution who voluntarily becomes a witness in his own behalf is subject to the same rule as any other witness, and may be asked by the state, on cross-examination, if he had not been convicted of larceny at the previous term of the same court in which he was being tried. Following State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 90, 12 P. 406.—State v. Probasco, (Kan.) 26 P. 749.

Directing to sheriff—Service by coroner.

1. Under Code Civil Proc. Kan. § 701, providing that, when the sheriff is a party, the summons shall be directed to the coroner, a summons is irregular and should be set aside on motion where it is directed to the sheriff but delivered to the coroner and served by him.—Pelham v. Edwards, (Kan.) 26 P. 41.

Service by publication.

2. An affidavit for service of process by publication, filed on January 17, 1861, that defendant resided within the region of country known as "Pike's Peak," which was then within the territory of Kansas, shows on its face that defendant is not a non-resident of Kansas, and service on the ground of non-residence (Comp. Laws Kan. 1862, c. 26, tits. 4, 5; Code Civil Proc. 1859) is unauthorized.—Carey v. Reeves, (Kan.) 26 P. 951.

3. An affidavit for an order of publication which states that "the suit is brought to foreclose a certain mortgage on real property situated in this county, made and delivered by the said J. P. Miller, deceased, in his life-time, and by the defendant Ida Miller, his wife," but which fails to state that defendants are the heirs of J. P. Miller, does not show that defendants have property within the state, as required by Hill's Code Or. §§ 56, 57.—Colburn v. Barrett, (Or.) 26 P. 1008.

Affidavit of service.

4. An affidavit of service of summons, which does not show that the person serving it was over 18 years old when he served it, is insufficient to prove service.—Horton v. Gallardo, (Cal.) 26 P. 375.
